Do Not Miss Our Winter Feasts of Intellectual and Spiritual Good Things!

We Have Just Begun the Charming Narrative, By Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt., Entitled, "THE LIGHT AMONG THE HILLS." If You Miss an Issue of The Progressive Thinker This Winter You Will Lose a Spiritual Fortune.

The Progressive Thinker.

VOL. 29. CHICAGO, ILL., NOV. 14, 1903. NO. 729.

A REMARKABLE HEALER.

Whether his powers were the result of Independent Development or of Subjective Control, the manifestations of the spirits were most remarkable. Whether the ultimate effect on Mr, Caster were good or bad, the work accomplished was truly wonderful and beneficent, and he should have a conspicuous place in the History of Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—Since the exhaustive discussion of the book, "The Great Psychological Crime," in The Progressive Thinker, you may not care for anything further bearing on that subject. I will, however, send you a few notes setting forth some of my experiences, or rather some facts that I personally have knowledge of. About fifty years ago, Paul Caster, then of Decatur county, Iowa, received an injury that so disabled him that he was bedfast about eleven years, and became a county charge. He was healed instantly, and afterwards became a famous healer himself. He once became quite confidential with the writer and this is substantially what he told me:

"I have, Senator, as you know, a deficient palate; I was born so. I have great difficulty to so speak that I can be understood. My parents and brothers and sisters were ashamed of me from a child. I had to work hard from a small boy. I never went to school. I grew up in ignorance. I never learned to read or write. After I grew to manhood I married. At the time I was nearly killed, while working in a sawmill I was an ignorant day laborer. The accident put me to my bed for many years. I was practically paralyzed from my waist down.

"One night I had a vision. I thought it was a dream, and yet I did not think I had gone to sleep. An angel came to me and said, 'Paul, if you will obey my instructions the spirits will heal you, and you shall, with our help, accomplish a great deal of good in the world. You have natural healing power, and if you do as we tell you, you shall heal your thousands. Are you willing to make us this promise?' I cheerfully promised to do the bidding of the angel. Then said he, 'Dampen your hands in water, and pass them down over your body.' This I did when I was thrilled as though I had experienced an electric shock, and I was healed instantly.

Mr. Caster soon had an opportunity to heal the sick who began to flock to him. Later, by direction of the spirits, he removed to the city of Ottumwa. His fame went abroad, and he cured thousands. His charges were but $1 per treatment, and his practice became so great that in fifteen or twenty years he had accumulated a larger property than any other citizen in a city of 20,000 inhabitants. He erected an infirmary at a cost of about one hundred thousand dollars. On one occasion I took my wife to him for treatment. He was successful though her ailment was a serious one. At that time he had on his hands five hundred cases. Many times he cured by one treatment. Other cases required several additional treatments. I saw him perform marvelous cures. Once a young lady was brought to him on a bed. She had not walked a step for eleven years. With fifteen minutes' treatment, by "laying on of hands," she got up and walked all about the house.

In scores of instances he literally followed the example of Jesus and commanded the bed-ridden invalid to "take up thy bed and walk," and they did so.

In one room of his infirmary he had hundreds of crutches and other appliance once worn by the lame who were cured, and went away rejoicing, leaving their canes and crutches with the man who had wrought the marvelous cure. On one occasion Mr. Caster said to me. "Would you like to see my seance room?" I replied in the affirmative. I walked to the end of a long hall. He took out a key, unlocked the door and we went in. The room was carpeted, and was a gem of neatness, but it contained but a single article of furniture—a couch. "Here," said Caster, "I come at the same hour every day. I lie down on this couch, close my eyes and talk with my spirit guides. Often they show me what appears the insides of a man, and if I have a patient seriously afflicted by some inward disorder, the guide points it out and instructs me how to place my hands on the man when I treat him."

He informed me that he did not talk to everybody about his seance room and his daily interviews with his spirit gnides, because of the prejudice of many against Spiritualism.

In early life he had become a member of the Dunkard society and held a membership at the time of which I write, and I think he remained a member to the time of his transition.

So marvelous were Caster's cures, thirty years ago, that he literally silenced opposition in Ottumwa. For several years the orthodox ministers, and the old school doctors ridiculed and persecuted him, but his fame spread. He was kind in disposition, in fact, was always overflowing with good humor. Though often reviled, he reviled not again. His success was so phenomenal and his disposition was so sweet, that even the pastors of all the orthodox churches not only ceased their persecutions, but consented to take their turns at conducting his chapel exercises on Sundays. A great many of his patients were members of the churches. Not many of them knew that Caster was a Spiritualist, and I do not doubt that there are those now, who will insist that he was not. He thought he could do more good by not publicly proclaiming his belief in Spiritualism; yet he never denied being one. On the contrary he declared his belief in spirit return to those whom he knew would not be prejudiced against him if he did so declare. I sat several times with him in seances and had many conversations with him on the subject. He repeatedly told me that every day of his life he had glorious interviews with his spirit friends. He received regularly all the leading Spiritualist publications which he caused to be read to him as he had never learned to read.

Now, Mr. Editor, here seems to be one instance in which a medium did not degenerate and go to the bad, as the author of "The Great Psychological Crime" thinks all mediums do. Caster was a grand soul. His passing from this physical plane was the occasion of the deepest regret by all who knew him. He passed away full of years with a record of a life of noble deeds. He was as gentle as a child, kind, benevolent, truthful and unselfish.

GOVERNOR YATES CLAIMS TO KNOW THE DESIGNS OF GOD.

He Is Severely Criticised by M. M. Mangasarian and "O. W. N."

"Governor, your Thanksgiving proclamation is, to say the least, an amusing document," writes M. M. Mangasarian of the Independent Religious Society in an open letter which he addressed to Governor Yates. "To be candid with you," continues Professor Mangasarian, "it does not place you in a very enviable light, but what about your judgment? You write as a theologian, forgetting that you are not the pastor or priest of a sect, but a governor in a republic in which theology and politics, church and state are forever separate.

"You refer with painful reiteration to the 'mighty purpose' of the Deity to create this mighty and model republic, 'utterly regardless of what it cost in tears, in treasure and in blood.' You say also that God 'let down the curtain of the waters of the Atlantic ocean for a mighty purpose,' and that this curtain 'remained unpenetrated until 1492,' also for a 'mighty purpose,' and that no othe rthan 'Providence itself kept it there for fifteen centuries after the coming of Christ.' Again, 'for that mighty purpose,' which was 'to establish and maintain a mighty and model republic, with corner stones of religion, science, labor, etc., etc.'

Seeks Source of Knowledge.

"Governor, do you get all this information at first hand or at second hand? In your haste you have also mixed up the corner stones of this mighty and model republic.'

"You evidently think that the Americans are the chosen people of God. You say 'destruction by epidemic and pestilence, tornado and flood and fire has been mercifully kept away. But do you know of any good reason, governor, why the Deity should interfere to save us when he does not interfere to save His other children?

"Is it for any merit on our part that heaven is partial to us, or is it a case of pure favoritism? And if all you say about the part which the Deity has played in creating this republic is authentic, will you tell us why even the name of the Deity, who sends all the storms and fires upon other nations, has been excluded from the Constitution of this republic?"

Also Arouses "O. W. N."

"O. W. N.," in a letter to the editor of the Record-Herald, said: "It is difficult to say anything new in a Thanksgiving proclamation, but Governor Yates appears to have succeeded in his proclamation, published on Wednesday. His revelation of the design of the Almighty in regard to the Atlantic ocean reminds one of Private Miles O'Reilly's appeal to President. Lincoln, as reported by Charles G. Halpine in his book, published during the civil war.

"Miles was a rollicking Irish soldier, who was always getting into difficulties with the government, and finally landed in the guardhouse. He penned the following touching letter and sent it to Mr. Lincoln in the hope that it would do the business:

"Long life to ye, Misther Lincoln!
May ye die both late and aisy,
And when ye lie wid yer toes turned up to the roots of a daisy,
May this be yer epitaph nately writ:
'He was honest and kindly, he loved his joke,
And he pardoned Miles O'Reilly.'"

A SPANISH SONG.

'Tis my mother's step I hear;
Quick, oh, quickly give to me—
Haste, it is her step I hear—
Give the kiss I gave to thee.
She doth fret me night and day;
"Kisses, prithee," she doth say,
"Never maid should give away,
Never maid her love betray!"
Give, oh, quickly give to me—
Give the kiss I gave to thee.
"Have you kissed a man?" she'll say,
And I'll answer nay and nay;
Give, oh, quickly give to me—
Give the kiss I gave to thee.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

The old gray school house was packed, for there was a revival in progress. It was customary in the mountain districts to have a revival of religion after the crops were gathered in, for the long winter evenings proved irksome to the active farmers and woodsmen.

The low, dingy room, which was finished with wide pine boards, was dimly lighted with spluttering tallow candles set in old bottles, lanterns and tin candlesticks. The men and women were arranged upon opposite sides of the room. The women wore their "go-to-meetin'" print dresses and heavy shawls of "homespun."

In the dim light the men looked very much alike with their long hair and beards, their blue smock frocks and heavy top boots. There were children of all ages from the month old babe upward, and several dogs lay curled up under the seats. Slabs from a near-by saw-mill had been brought in and placed from one lower line of seats to another across the floor and these rude seats, as well as all the others, were crowded with human occupants. Across one end of the room was a huge desk intended for the school teacher's use. Behind this desk stood the preacher, a short, thick-set, untidy-looking man. He gazed sternly around upon the solemn upturned faces of his flock and began the services by reading in a powerful voice the opening stanza of the hymn—

"The chariot! the chariot! its wheels roll in fire,
As the Lord cometh down in the pomp of his ire;
Lo, self-moving it drives on its pathway of cloud,
And the heavens with the burden of Godhead are bowed."

After the singing of this hymn, came a long prayer, interspersed with groans, tears and shouts, and then another hymn was sung in which the agony of the lost sinner was vividly portrayed. Then the preacher announced his text:

"For the great day of his wrath has come, and who shall be able to stand?"

The preacher fairly outdid himself that night. He stamped up and down the platform in his heavy boots. He stretched out his long, muscular arms and shook his clenched fists at his congregation, and in a peculiar rising and falling tone shouted, "I tell ye, ye'll ketch it, yit."

Shouts and amens greeted his words and a few old sinners seated in the dim corners moved uneasily.

In the midst of the excited congregation little Martha Weston sat, bolt upright, with one hand clutching tightly her mother's arm. Her large dark eyes were wide open and her sensitive lips quivering. As she drank in the burning words of the preacher she seemed to see the blue sky rent asunder and a great white throne appear upon which sat a dreadful object, with fiery eyes and snowy hair, while raging flames rolled about him, devouring stars, earth and sky. Shiver after shiver ran over the child as she pictured the dreadful fate that was awaiting her home, her pets, her playmates and probably herself.

Tired out with excitement Martha went to sleep during the ride home but some hours after she was safely tucked into bed Mr. and Mrs. Weston were awakened by loud shrieks. Hastening to the little bed they found Martha with burning cheeks and wild eyes, crying that the Lord had come and taken mamma and she and the kitten were burning up. After some time the mother succeeded in explaining to her child that she had merely had a bad dream and that the Lord would not burn her up if he did come.

It was a very sober little girl that moved restlessly about the old farmhouse the next day. The memory of her frightful dreams and the scenes she had heard described the evening before had not vanished with the night. As the sun sank behind the forest-clad mountains at the west, Martha drew closely to her mother and said in an awestruck tone:

"Mamma, when the Lord comes and burns up the world, will he burn me, too?"

"Not if you are a good girl."

"How good must I be?" persisted the child.

"Oh," said Mrs. Weston, puzzled by her child's earnestness, "you must read your Bible, for it is God's word, and you must ask the Lord to give you a new heart, and you must love him...."

"O mamma," broke in Martha, "I can't love him, I can't love such an awful God!"

"Hush, child," said her mother, looking about her in a frightened way, "if he should hear you he might smite you with his rod."

Here was another and new terror, and Martha went away to try and think it out. Up in her own little room she stood with her face pressed against the frosty window, a miserable-looking little object.

"If he comes, he will burn me up," she half sobbed, "I know he will burn me."

"He never will," said a calm, clear voice just beside her.

Martha started and looked sharply around. She was alone in the room. She could hear the creaking of the rocking-chair and her mother singing a hymn as she rocked to and fro in the living room beneath, and Martha knew there was no one else in the house.

But that voice! Martha was puzzled but she was also comforted, for that calm voice carried a sense of safety to the troubled little girl.

Martha came down later than usual the next morning, and as she entered the living-room she gave a little cry of joy, and bounding across the floor, was caught in the arms of a man seated by the kitchen stove. He was a man past middle age, with a plump, rosy face, upon which good nature was indelibly stamped, and kind blue eyes which looked straight at one with a clear, honest look that at once inspired confidence in their owner. Martha cuddled down in his strong arms and looked up in his face with a contented smile. Just then Mr. Weston came in with a pan of corn which he placed upon the stove hearth, and drawing up a splint-bottom chair, he seated himself and began to shell the corn from the cob.

"Wall, Uncle Ezry," he began, by way of opening conversation, "pretty powerful meetin' we had last night."

"Yes," assented his caller, "some of 'em got considerably rousted."

"What did ye think of Neighbor Green's testimony and prayer?" persisted Mr. Weston.

"Wall," said Uncle Ezra, as he tucked a lump of maple sugar into Martha's hand, "Philander is a good man. He gets pretty noisy sometimes, but he ain't all noise the way some folks be. He'll holler and tell the Lord what he thinks he oughter do, but when he finds the Lord don't pay any 'tention to him, he'll go to work and do the best he can on his own hook. Philander makes me think of old Aunt Huldy Cross up to the Holler. She kept stewing at Hiram all summer to have him build a porch over the front door, but Hiram never paid a mite of 'tention to her, and one day she got riled. 'Wall,' says she, 'if I can't have a porch over my front door, I'll have a cat-hole in the back door, if I have to make it myself.' Now, to my way of thinkin' the best kind of religion is the kind that does more actin' than talkin'. If ye can't do the big things that ye think the Lord ought to, but won't, why, do the best ye can and do it real well."

"Yes, I know," said Mr. Weston, "the Book says that faith without works is dead, and we haven't got much time to work in."

"We've got all the time there is," was the laconic reply.

"Yes, but my way of thinkin' the Lord is liable to come at any minute."

At her father's words Martha started and a wild, hunted look came into her eyes which did not escape Uncle Ezra's observation, but before he could make any reply, Mrs. Weston entered with a look of stern displeasure upon her face. "Silas Weston!" she exclaimed, "them hens will starve if they have to wait for you to talk all day."

"Yes, yes, Sarah," said her husband, as he caught up the pan of corn, "I'm goin'"—and he went.

Uncle Ezra got up and carled Martha to the door. As he put her down he whispered, "Don't worry, Martha, 'bout the Lord's comin'. He won't hurt you any."

"Oh, Uncle Ezry, are you sure?" said Martha, as she clung tightly to his hand.

"I know he won't," was the calm reply, and again Martha was comforted.

The long, dreary winter ended at last and spring with its sunny days, and birds, and flowers came, and in the joy of existence Martha forgot the winter's woes. Like the child of nature she was, she exulted in her freedom in the pure air and glorious sunlight, and grew strong and happy.

The farmers were now busy upon their land and had "no time to attend to religion." From every rocky hillside was heard the voices that the previous winter had been uplifted in prayer and exhortation, now shouting to their teams and frequently some "meetin' house" language was used in any way but a pious one.

One unlucky day in midsummer there came to Mr. Weston's a traveling preacher who succeeded in bringing a chill into the home atmosphere. There was much talking about strange and terrible beasts with horns and heads, and tails in profusion. For months Martha heard but very little upon any other subject. She was told that the Lord was liable to come at any moment, and whether it was like the sun appearing like a ball of fire in a murky sky, the appearance of the beautiful northern light, or the flashing of meteors, all were "signs of the Lord's speedy coming."

Martha was a true lover of the grand and beautiful in nature, but she soon grew so nervous she would cower in terror when she would naturally have enjoyed.

Mrs. Weston was one of the inconsistent people whose theory and practice never agree. She professed to believe in the immediate coming of the Lord and consequent destruction of the world, but her one idea when it came to practice was the accumulation of property. She did not allow her theory to disturb her mind except when there was some unusual disturbance in nature, then she was seized with fear. Martha, with a child's quick perception saw this and wondered greatly. To her mind every one was what he or she professed to be.

One day Martha heard Parson Drake tell her father something which made a great impression upon her mind: One night as the parson was going home from meeting he saw a strange, bright light glowing in the east. He broke into a run, and having gained his home, he rushed in where his wife was sound asleep and shouted, "Mary, wake up, quick!"

The poor woman sat up in bed. "What is the matter?" she asked her excited husband.

"Get up, quick!" he screamed, "the Lord is coming! His sign is in the east."

But instead of leaping forth with joy to meet her coming Savior, the poor woman fell back upon the bed in a dead faint! And she is a good woman, thought Martha, and a minister's wife, too!

The summer faded and the golden days of autumn came and went. The trees stood dark and naked upon the bleak hill sides. The winds came howling down over the mountains and swept around the old farm-house as if bent on its destruction. The snows piled higher and higher, and again Martha was a prisoner. As the dreary days dragged on she found her greatest pleasure in the visits of Uncle Ezra, who frequently came in. He was always bright and happy. No thought of coming ill ever seemed to trouble him, and he always had some interesting story to tell of the days when the country was new and the settlers lived in log houses and fought the wild beasts—real ones, not the kind Parson Drake and a man named Daniel told about.

The weeks dragged on, and one day when the snow still lay heaped over fences and sheds, there came a great joy to Martha in the shape of a baby brother. For once in her small life Martha was genuinely happy. Even the omnipresent terror of the Lord's immediate return failed to darken her sunshine for a time. But it was not for long, however, for one unlucky day she heard Elder Drake tell her father that he must prepare for immediate translation, "for," said the Elder, "the Lord will surely come upon the morning of the nineteenth. The signs have all been fulfilled, and the prophecies have expired, and the Bible plainly states that the wise shall understand. There can be no mistake this time; so be ready."

"FAT AND KICKING."

Under the heading, "Jeshurun Waxed Fat and Kicked," the New York Advocate printed a leading editorial, evidently from the pen of Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, the editor. This editorial is significant in that it speaks very plainly of a hierarch who has hitherto escaped for some reason, much of the criticism which he has deserved from the leading editors. Dr. Buckley says:

"When the whole world was sympathizing with the late Pope and the Catholic church; when the publications were sent out from Rome in the most dramatic way; when in their enthusiasm many protestants began to suggest that the time was not far off when all Christian churches could unite; and when some Catholic bishops and one archbishop declared that it would not be fifty years before this country would become all Catholic, we wondered how long it would be before the cloven foot would be shown more fully than heretofore by the highest representatives of the Roman Catholic church in this country. (Here we pause in the main business of this article to explain its title and also the use of the expression "cloven foot.") We do not mean to speak disrespectfully of the Catholic church in the title, nor in the use of the phrase "cloven foot." We have a high respect for the Roman Catholic church. That respect does not teach reverence because of the incongruous mixture of things which we respect with things we cannot respect."

Dr. Buckley then proceeds to tell why he "respects" Romanism, after which he continues:

"What, then, do we symbolize by 'waxed fat' and by 'kicked'? We mean that the Roman Catholic church, by reason of its prosperity here and the flattery of politicians, thinks it now safe to avow hostility to and begin an attack upon the public schools of this country; that it proposes to overturn them as now constructed and to get what the state will not now give it—a portion of the public money raised by general taxation for education; and that at the present time in different parts of the country priests, bishops, archbishops, and the only American cardinal are engaged in denouncing the public school system. We have waited until His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons, spoke, for his speaking is worth the utterance of a thousand priests and ordinary bishops. He is pre-eminent on this continent, noted for suavity of manner, skilled to the highest degree in the use of language, ingratiating in public deportment, and speaking only occasionally, is always sure to be heard by multitudes and widely reported. He is the embodiment of Roman magnificence, grace, and ostentation.

"Usually what he says is diplomatically said and is valuable to indicate the way the Catholic wind blows and the current flows. He seldom speaks so as to excite direct and immediate opposition. But now he comes forth against the public school system of the United States, and declares that 'the system of public education in this country is imperfect and vicious and undermines the religion of our youth.' He charges that 'the education of pupils therein is shallow and fragmentary,' and often proves a curse instead of a blessing.' He asks, 'Of what value is a mother's toil if the seeds of faith which she has planted attain a sickly growth in the cheerless atmosphere of the school-room from which the sun of religion is rigidly excluded?' He says: 'The remedy for these defects would be supplied if the denominational system which now obtains in Canada were applied in our public schools.'

"The public schools must be maintained. The proposition to adopt the denominational system that prevails in Canada is equivalent to uniting church and state, so far as it goes. According to the theory of this government the state has no right to enforce Christian education upon children whose parents are opposed to it.

"It is a decided infliction when applied to Jews; it is a decided infliction when applied to such as have the idea—mistaken though it be—that they will allow their children to be educated without religion, and then expect them to choose a religion for themselves.

"If all the world were Christians a republic could be maintained with a suitable relation between church and state in the matter of public education; but in the present mixed state it would be impossible.

"Behold the troubles on this subject that now exist in England and have existed for ages. A most pitiable condition exists in that country. Thousands of Christians are refusing to pay the taxes that are imposed because of the relation of the plan to denominational education. Only the Church of England people (and not all of them) and the Roman Catholics fully sympathize with the scheme now in force. Others are willing to accept it only because they believe it is better than what previously existed, and is a step in the right direction; but the great majority of all the English people are opposed to it. Catholics and Church of England people sympathize with it, not because they sympathize with each other, but because it gives them public money to use for the education of the children in church schools and in the Catholic religion.

"If Roman Catholicism in England had a great proportion of the population, if for example it approximated the English Church in numbers, there would be a contention which would rend the nation over the method that exists there now.

"As for Canada, who does not know that Lower Canada is preponderatingly French and Catholic, and no proper analogy can be drawn between that country and this?

"Politicians who care to preserve the integrity of their parties will do well not to mingle in this discussion, for if the public schools are disturbed a wave which will remand them to obscurity will certainly rise."

The art of using moderate abilities to advantage wins praise, and often acquires more reputation than real brilliancy.—Rochefoucauld.

Zeal perverted by self-love is cranky; fanaticism by prejudice it becomes manifest.

ROME AND IGNORANCE.

Reliable statistics prove that the Church of Rome does not make for enlightenment. In Spain, at the 1787 census, there were 188,625 ecclesiastics of all descriptions, including 61,617 monks, 32,500 nuns, and 4.705 inquisitors. In 1833, this unproductive class still numbered 175,574 individuals; of these, 61,727 were monks, and 24,007 nuns. In 1884 there was in the land of the Inquisition 32,435 priests, 1,648 monks, and 15,594 nuns. (By decrees of the Cortes passed July 23, 1835, and March 9, 1836, all conventual establishments were suppresed and their property confiscated for the benefit of the nation.) Seeing that the education the Spaniards has for centuries been under the control of the clergy, it will surprise no one that at the beginning of the last century a working man in Spain, able to read, was a curiosity, and that the accomplishment among women was looked upon as "immoral." In 1898, 68.1 per cent of the population could neither read nor write. In Italy there were, in 1865, 28,991 "religious" 14,807 men and 14, 184 women. (At the 1866 sesion of Chamber of Representatives, a perfect law for the entire suppression of all religious houses was adopted.) According to the 1864 census returns, out of a population of 21,703,710, no less than 16,999,707 persons could neither read nor write! In 1881 the ratio of illiteratae above six years of age was as follows: Upper Italy, 40.85 per cent; Central Italy 64.61; South Italy, 79.45; in the Islands, 80.91. These figures prove abundantly that Rome fosters ignorance.

JESUS THE MEDIUM.

A Study for Modern Spiritualists and Mediums.

Some two thousand years ago there dwelt upon this earth a man so poor and humble at his birth that it is said he was born in the manger of a wayside inn. He made no pretense to greatness or wisdom, and he was so poor in worldly goods that he had nowhere to lay his head. He was scoffed at, derided, thrust from the temple where he went to worship, called the son of the devil, almost friendless, he went about preaching the noble doctrine of self-sacrifice, and proved his divine mediumship by the works he did. He exalted humanity and claimed its divine soulship with God. It was not beneath his dignity to sit at meat with sinners. A dissolute, abandoned woman claimed his tenderest sympathy, because being back of all her shame and degradation, he recognized the divine part of her nature, her womanhood.

The aristocracy of Judea hated him because he made himself one with the common people. The church hated him because he rebuked its hypocrisy and its arrogance.

One of his chosen friends proved to be his bitterest enemy and, for a pitiable sum of money sold him to the crowd that clamored to heap upon him their scorn and contempt.

False accusations were trumped up against him, he was condemned, and died a martyr to his principles, and from his murderers went up a shout of triumph, saying: "Now we have rid the world of him who rose up against us, and his pernicious and false doctrines have perished with him.

But, lo! from out that darkness shone forth a brighter light than the world had ever known before.

Jesus was a divine medium such as the world had never known before, claiming no more for his divine gifts than do our good, true mediums of this day, requiring the same conditions that the modern medium requires to obtain the same results.

When Jesus sent out his disciples to the lost sheep of the house of Israel he commanded them to preach, to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils (diseases). He said: "Freely ye have received, freely give." Jesus did not tell his disciples to fill their medicine cases with pills and powders before they left for the field of operation, for he know that God had endowed them with powers sufficient to do their work well, to heal the sick, to restore the lame and the blind.

Has time and evolution changed the law that governs divine mediumship? No, it is the same today that it was ten thousand years ago; it will be the same to-morrow, and on through the coming of future generations, as long as time lasts. All spiritual gifts that men and women possess and practice to-day were practiced by the disciples of Jesus two thousand years ago. If the reader doubts the above statement, please get your Bible and turn to I. Cor. 12:4-11; turn to I. Cor. 14:4 and 7, and you will find that in that remote age of the world there existed trumpet mediums; also unknown tongues.

Jesus taught, nay, he commanded his disciples to cultivate and practice all those God-given gifts, that the world might profit by their labors. Mediumship like a golden thread has come down the corridor of time to bless the race. In the language of an inspired poet—

"Is God asleep that he has ceased to be
All that he was to prophets of the past
All that he was to poets of old time,
All that he was to hero-souls of ages past?"

It has taken the people of the world many, many centuries to realize that the divine gifts of mediumship that Jesus exercised while on earth, would be perpetuated after he ceased his work here. But Jesus said unto them, "Greater things than these shall ye do," assuring his disciples that there were greater things for them to do if they were faithful to his teachings.

The religion of Jesus, as taught by him, was both demonstrable and phenomenal. He demonstrated to his disciples everything that it was possible for them to understand, with the promise of reward for their faithfulness the things he did and greater things they should do if they were faithful.

It is not necessary to refer to the mediumship of Jesus to prove the fact of mediumship, but to the Christian world that scouts at the idea of spirits communing with mortals, the account of Jesus' works that he did, and the lesons he taught his disciples, must prove a stumbling-block in the way of their opposition to the fact of spirit communion.

But the world moves rapidly along and religion is now looking through clearer glasses than it did one hundred years ago, and it lies with the mediums and Spiritualists to prove the fact of spirit return by their steadfastness to the one cause that has shed more light on the race than the world ever knew before.

Some excellent lessons are imparted by Mrs. Shaffer, which will touch a a responsive chord in every soul. Encouragement, good cheer, and efforts in the right direction, seem to be the fundamental principles of her nature in her efforts to spread broadcast the truths of Spiritualism.

SYNOPSIS OF LECTURE

By Mrs. Florence E. B. Shaffer, B. O.

"For with Thee is the fountain of life; in Thy light shall we see light."

Many have heard the story of the brave fireman who, in the face of almost certain destruction was ascending a ladder to rescue from a burning building a woman standing in one of the upper windows praying for help; and how, as he neared the top, heat and smoke so nearly overpowered him that he faltered and seemed about to yield the effort and return to the ground, leaving the woman to perish, and perceiving which, some one in the crowd below shouted, "Cheer him!" Instantly a mighty, soul-inspiring cheer arose; the volume of its strength-giving sound reaching the senses of the well-nigh fainting but valiant hero, and thrilling him with a renewed spirit of courage, he resumed his purpose, sped up the ladder, and descending, bore the unconscious form of the woman to safety.

Such demonstration of what human sympathy expressed in words or acts of cheer can effect for good, speak more eloquently than volumes of written eulogy could do; but who can point to an instance where an intrepid soul has sought to scale the Ladder of Truth—that symbol which Jacob saw with its foot on the earth and its top reaching into the innermost heavens, with angels (God's thoughts) ascending and descending, striving to penetrate into unknown and possibly dangerous realms of thought, seeking to secure from without the vale of sense some precious trophy whereby the world of objective being might be enriched—we repeat, who can point to such a soul the onlooking crowd has cheered onward in his arduous quest?

On the contrary, does not history record that whenever in the past, man or woman has passed beyond the limited spheres of known thought-investigation, has striven to explore hitherto denounced, or at least unaccepted domains where knowledge might be presumed to dwell, no matter though it be a spirit of heroic self-sacrifice in the hope of unveiling new views of truth or gathering fresh fruitage from the gardens of eternal life, we say, does not history prove that, instead of cheering the seeker on a way, hard enough at best, every fling of bitter unkindness, of critical doubt, and difficulties of countless variety are meted out—aye, even death itself—as rewards for such purely unselfish efforts?

Self-seeking is never a characteristic of the true benefactor, and instances where the destructive, malicious anger of a populace who fail, not alone to cheer but to understand, are scattered all along the pathway of human progress, and known to the world by the names of Pythagoras, Socrates, Copernicus, Galileo, Newton, Joan of Arc, and many more we might name. And yet, did these who courageously stood alone, who bore the saddening sense of having alienated even the affections of those who might have loved them in a narrower sphere, and endured without cheer or sympathy the fiercest blows that the waves of life's sea beating furiously against their life-barque could deal them—did these ask aught of those who made their progress so difficult? Was it because light or strength, time or means was sought or gained from those who raised their voices most clamorously against the success of these self-moving ones, and all because they could not understand? Almost would we think, listening to the wild wail directed against that one who, trusting to the guiding impulses of his own highest being, and following the instructions of those whose help he had perhaps besought in prayer, that a criminal had escaped, charged with stealing light and wisdom and all the powers by which he moved, from the angry crowd who strove to bar his way.

We wish to assert the fact that every individualized being has the right, in every posible way, to prosecute his or her investigations into the invisible, equally with every other inhabitant of the universe. The messages which Marconi transmits through material apparatus of mechanical construction, have descended from the realm of pure intelligence—wherever that may be—through that living apparatus of soul-construction, the human brain. In that brain-mechanism—if we are permitted the expression, pure intelligence was moulded, crystallized, or, in obedience to some mandate we are unfamiliar with, formed into 'formulated thought.' We are reduced to the clumsy sounds of our vocabulary for a vehicle of expressed, and they are incomplete to show forth these subtle phases of mental effort; but pure intelligence must be so formulated ere it can be expressed at all through voice-sound. Then, Marconi's invention transmits these to the outer sense-faculties of humanity in still further materialized forms, thus commuicating them to life, vibrating on a plane where spiritual senses are not recognized.

It is not an unusual experience for any of us to receive invitations to "be developed" by some one, claiming to possess the power to do so. We have no word of condemnation to offer when souls are struggling toward a higher estate, provided in so doing they infringe not upon the sphere of another. But learn from the loftiest examples of seership who have lighted the torches of human advancement, and tell us, did they ever offer, for a stated sum each, to "develop" soul-powers? Have they not invariably pointed the seeker to the Universal Fountain of Truth and admonished him that in the silence of his own soul he would find the "I am"? and the power to express the infinite?

Suppose the full-blown rose, dew-wet and perfume laden, unfolded in the rarest perfection, nodding in the sunlight and drinking in the refreshing dews of heaven, in turn dispensing its fragrance and beauty to every passer-by—suppose such an open flower should say to the unopened bud beside it, growing on the same tree and enjoying every privilege and right the other had ever known or appropriated, "Come and dwell in my atmosphere, abide in my shadow, take of my light and beauty and wholeness, and thus I will assist your development." What would we superior intelligences think? Yet, when we say to another, "Come and join my circle, abide by my example, follow the instructions I set forth, and so I will develop you;" do we not practically deny the conditions surrounding a fellow human being possessing the same power as those in which we are enfolded? Just as the same light and warmth and moisture surrounds each rosebud alike, so does each soul dwell in the All Good of the Father; the Great Creator; and all are alike partakers of his bounteous love and power in which we may unfold our inner self-hood.

Higher criticism presumes to assert that the personal Jesus of Nazareth never lived. I don't know whether he did or not. No one else knows, but neither do I know that in 1620 a band of brave men and women landed on Plymouth Rock, searching out a spot on the earth where they might find freedom, and live according to the deepest instincts of their being.

But the fact faces me here that here on this western continent lies a tract of three millions square miles brought under the sway of civilization by that same spirit I am told landed amid the snows of winter on the famous rock.

I don't know whether Washington led the American army to victory over the legions of the old world. I was not present at either of these times or places, but I live beneath the folds and am protected by the august, the sovereign power of our nation's beauteous flag, and acknowledging this, I must accept the facts as recorded by history concerning how they were wrought out. I don't know whether the personal Jesus, or any character like unto him ever walked the earth; but I live to-day, experiencing the same enlightenment. I know of the same powers. I see the same works wrought out by the means He advised, or at least the means advised through his name. I believe He lived; and am content to develop the life He came to teach us of, through following the way He pointed out.

What is that way?

Ah, did it not, above all else, consist of being faithful to his highest conception of duty laid upon Him? Do the pages recording his life reveal a single instance where he faltered when assailed by those who failed to understand? Besides, is it so very unlikely that history is at fault relative to his being an historical character? We never question facts pertaining to events of four or five hundred years ago in our own time, and latter-day scholars are furnishing us with translations of those old Hebrew writings found now on tablets, and inscriptions traced upon walls and other remains of that ancient world; translations into this modern English tongue we use. But a few centuries, comparatively speaking, had rolled by until Constantine of Rome transported into the Christian world, MSS and various evidences of the fact that certain events had transpired which we are asked now to doubt. We repeat, it matters little whether the literal facts of a certain person's life be accepted or not. You have the evidences of your senses to-day to prove that the truths given through the name of Jesus, a great and wondrously unfolded medium between the heavens and the earth are real, are exalting, are true.

Permit one personal allusion. I can count on the fingers of one hand every instance wherein a discarnate intelligence has presented itself to my own inner senses of sight and hearing, here and for the benefit of audiences in this hall, which have not been recognized clearly by those to whom they came. Often before leaving the hall, sometimes before going a block from the door, and frequently after days had passed, the favored one has come to me and said they remembered the visitor whom they failed to recall at the time. To this many are willing to testify for the gratification of those interested. Is not this a phase of wireless telegraphy through the human brain, instead of through man-made instruments, the brain being a constructional device lying just above the ability of mankind to organize through and by material agencies?

And this is true, high-class mediumship.

MANY SUICIDES DUE TO IGNORANCE OF PHYSIOLOGY.

The new suicide statistics from Yale College and the increasing tendency to self-destruction which marks the hot season are reminders that a large number of suicides are really preventable, and are only due to lack of physiological education. If college lecturers upon hygiene and teachers of physiology would take pains to widely impress one simple lesson a large and definite class of suicides would cease to be, and the general average of happiness would be distinctly augmented.

This lesson is that despair is a temporary state, and in many cases is entirely due to physical, or bodily, causes. The best remedy for "the blues" is a liver pill. That gloomy, hopeless outlook in events which drives many to suicide is due not to the events themselves, but to bodily conditions which set up the state called "despair" in the mind.

Any despondent person whose troubles are really trivial may prove this by looking backward for a day or a week to the last day on which he was abundantly happy. He will find in many cases that events and conditions have not altered in the least, that the existing gloom comes, therefore, from some cause within himself, and he may come to believe that hope for the hopeless can be purchased at a drug store.

Love, particularly among those young people who have been executing themselves so recklessly of late, is, to the physician, merely a definite state of bodily congestion, whose natural mental result is melancholy, and which can easily be alleviated, if not cured, by simple treatment. And if any lover or pair of lovers who are thinking of death will consult an intelligent doctor they will save their lives at the expense of a very moderate fee.—Chicago American.

OBSESSION CONSIDERED.

On the Earth Plane there is a good and a bad side to existence. The former advances—leads upward! The latter retrogrades until a change takes place. Those who are mischievously or viciously obsessed are entitled to our deepest sympathy and our most tender care. There is a danger line connected with spirit development and control, and when you get beyond that, great trouble may arise. A letter from Iowa refers to a sad case, where the medium was controlled by Col. Ingersoll. The husband recognizing the spirit as a liar, tried to get rid of it in vain, resulting in great misery to the dear wife who is now in a hospital. Obsessed afflicted ones, please send your address, with a description of your case, to this office.

OBSESSION.

For twenty years prior to my development I had been an active business man. During this time I had but little trouble in transacting my affairs, but now how changed. I am crossed in everything. I cannot conduct the most trivial affair without disputes and contention. Petty thieving has set in. I am continually missing articles, and am unable to catch the thief.

I now observe that my voice is gradually changing and I must speak in a higher key than usual. I am being slowly swallowed up, as it were, and transformed. When the second clairvayont scene occurs, I see the summit of several mountains studded with evergreen trees, and I know that it is a southern scene, but cannot locate it definitely. Now an old man appears in a sitting posture. I can see he is in poor health, and is suffering with his eyes, and he seems to be in a prison or hospital, the walls of which are as that of a barn. The building is long, narrow, and one story high. This scene with the one that I have already mentioned will be the only two of this class that I shall refer to in the future in order to try to convince you what it is that one sees and describes when under control and trying to tell anyone about their spirit friends.

I am now influenced to go to the planchette, and here is the message I receive:

"We wish to have you go under control and so remain until we complete the work that we are here to do."

"How long a time will it require?" I ask.

"Seven days," is the reply.

I now ask many questions and learn that I must remain in my rooms day and night; must see no one but a trusted friend and Spiritualist who can enter the rooms once each day by the rear way. I am to close the only entrance next to the street and keep it closed. I must darken the rooms as much as possible. I feel sure my wife and the spirits in whom I have confidence are in control, and it is not long before I decide to make the necessary arrangement and grant their request. Everything is in readiness now, and I say to my band, "Proceed with their work."

The first change that I notice is an unusual excitement of a certain passion, which continues to increase in intensity until it is almost uncontrollable. At this I demur, and again I ask many questions and I am assured that everything is all right, and that the object in view is to materialize my wife. I submit, and the work goes on day and night.

Quick and almost violent contractions of the muscles now set in, and I find one leg drawn up until my knee almost touches my chin, while my other leg is straight and rigid. The next instant I find my arm above my head and my hand clutching as if at something in the air. Now again my legs and arms draw to my body, and I double up as one suffering with cramps; thus I am agitated in body continually until I am completely exhausted, and I fall over on my couch and go to sleep.

On awaking, the work is renewed at once and continues till my friend arrives, and I order the necessary rations for another day. During the time I eat heartily. Thus the work continues and I feel my energy begins to go, and I think that I am going to be entranced, and to this I file my objections, saying that I wish to keep my mind clear through all the proceedings, if possible.

I am again assured that I will be properly taken care of. I consent, and the work goes on. I now begin to slowly sink away, and down I go almost to oblivion, when a reaction comes and I ascend slowly and steadily to my former condition. I am now nearing the end of the seven days when the walls and barriers that separate me from the spirit world begin to melt away as if they were clouds in a dark and gloomy day giving way to let the sunshine in. I find myself in a new atmosphere. Around about me is a healing and soothing halo. My eyes and ears are opening up to the spirit world. I see those that I like and those I dislike. I hear those that I regard as my friends speak to each other in regard to the progress of the work, and know that they are highly pleased.

I do not hear the evil ones say anything, but I see them. My hand now grasps my pencil and I write automatically. Presently my tongue begins to move and it is giving commands to those about me, saying what to do. It has passed to the control of another and I hear the commands it gives, but I am not affected in the least mentally. My mind is as clear as it ever was before my developments. When talking under control, I speak out as loud as if I were addressing some one in the flesh. The spirit that has my tongue under control, now speaks to me, using my own tongue for that purpose. He tells me that I am a wonderful medium and when my friend arrives, tells him the same thing, using me the same as a trance medium for that purpose. I am now promised healing, slate-writing, trumpet and materializing. While I am under control I feel the presence of the spirit as if a strong man had me in his grasp. If I wish to speak to him he senses it, relaxes his hold, frees my tongue, and I say what I wish. He immediately takes control and replies.

I now begin to sing and dance and do many other things under control. I now believe that my band of good spirits consists of such men as Darwin, Voltaire, etc. The seven days have ended and I open my doors and go about my affairs as usual.

I find that during my stay, in my rooms that the busybodies and gossipers are getting their work in. All manner of stories are afloat and they are quite sure that those fool Spiritualists are no good, and that I ought to be looked after.

On two occasions some young men from up town had visited me in order to learn something of my mediumship. I did nothing in their presence farther than to execute some muscular movements and tell them that I did it under control. With those young men was a reporter for one of our country papers. In our conversation I said I did not care what he told about me; nor did I. So he, feeling sure he was the right man in the right place to write me up, sailed in and soon there was plenty of squibs in the papers concerning me and Spiritualism. To these I made no reply. I did not even read them, but continued my development as directed by my band, for my development was not yet complete by any means.

It was now my wife's turn to control, which she did, using my tongue in the same manner as the one I have already described. With her return there came a healing influence, which abated my fears.

It is now evening and I am alone. Around about me I see the outlines of many babies. I say to my wife Emily (for that is her name), "Is there not a good many babies in my atmosphere?" She replied: "There is, and there is a band of grand spirits approaching also."

I now become greatly interested about those babies, but my wife does not control well and I do not get much information.

A few evenings later I am sitting alone in my room when my wife assumes control with such force as to almost throw me from my chair. "Oh, look at the little babies! Look at the little babies!" she exclaims. "I'll bet a dollar I dit 'em," using for the first time baby talk. I encourage her and say that we will adopt one since we are so unfortunate as to have none of our own.

After the lapse of about one week I am again alone in my room when I sense a feeling of deep suspense and inquire the cause. I get no reply. I then ask my wife if she is not getting along well with the babies, and still I get no reply. The feeling increases in intensity. I say, "Will you please tell what the trouble is?"

"I want a baby of my own," she meekly replies. I say to her that she is aware that our chances are past in this respect, and advise her to see the band of grand spirits that she said was approaching, and lay the matter before them.

APPARITIONS OF THE LIVING.

In a well authenticated Illinois case the rather wild son of a Kentucky minister had left home and ceased writing his parents for a long period. He had married and settled in Illinois, and was playing with his son, a child of four, upon the floor of a room in his house when the child pointed to the ceiling and said, "Dada! Look there." The man looked up and saw his father with perfect plainness, the father's eyes looking tenderly into his. A comparison of the time showed that this was three hours before the father's death in Kentucky, the son being ignorant of the fact that the father was ill. The fact that the apparition was first seen by the child removes any possibility of telepathy or hallucination. It proves the apparition to have been actually there.

There are a large number of cases of this kind in the Psychical Society's records, all of them having been verified as well as possible. Only cases of first hand are valued, and there are enough of these, all agreeing in the general facts, to constitue a class and serve as the basis for formulating a law. A single case would amount to little. A long series revealing practically the same general characteristics becomes scientific evidence which is acceptable and valid.

They should not be confounded with another class of cases in which two living minds are known to each other and a "projection of personality" takes place. There are many instances in which men have tried by effort of will to make themselves visible to other persons at a distance, and that this has been successfully done many times cannot be doubted. Here telepathy and the various unknown facts underlying hypnotism are at work.

In fact the mere question as to whether or not "spirits" exist and communicate, of high importance though it be, becomes of much smaller interest than the search for the great general law, which may even now be fairly looked upon as proved, viz., that personality and body in the living can and do exist independently of each other.

Pelham, who had been a deep student of these matters before his death, averred afterwards, during the Piper Experiments, that such was the case. He declared that the human personality was essentially ethereal in its constitution, and that it was entirely complete in itself. That, as he said, "Thought is a primary datum of consciousness."

This means that what we call consciousness and self-consciousness can exist without a material body. That matter and nerves and brain cells are not essential factors to consciousness nor to memory. The establishment of this fact beyond dispute means much. One valuable result of such an establishment will be that we shall be able to very largely determine what "spiritual" conditions actually are by studying living conditions. This will remove the field of experiment from the debatable land entirely and may show that there are few secrets of the life to come which may not be well uncovered by an adequate study of the life that is.

AUNT LOUISA.

A Tribute of Love to a Dear One Passed to Spirit Life.

Passed to the higher life, from her home in Friendship, N. Y., October 8, Mrs. Louisa Butterfield Vreeland, in the 80th year of her age.

She was born in Rushford, N. Y., and was one of the seven daughters of Oliver and Lodensia Butterfield. In her early life her parents moved to this little valley up among the hills of Allegany county, and after a life of many changes Aunt Louisa came back to the old homestead where she lived until she pased on to join the loved ones waiting for her.

Dear Aunt Louisa; how sweet and lovely she was! In my childhood I remember her as a young married woman, crowned with the love of husband and friends; and when, a few years later (a girl of twelve) I came back to my natal home from the west, hearing the message of the spirit world, Aunt Louisa and Uncle Lewis Vreeland were among the very first to recognize and accept this great truth of spirit ministration.

This knowledge has been her life strength and comfort from that time. It was a great joy to her that her family shared this beautiful belief, and that her three children ever turned to her for advice and gentle teaching of what she knew of immortality; and now those children, grown to manhood and womanhood, hold her religion as a priceless inheritance.

While the writer was at Meadville, Pa., the first week in October, where I had gone to participate in the loving tributes that were paid to Mrs. Thankful Gaston (wife of the Hon. A. Gaston) the news was flashed over the wires that Aunt Louisa had also passed on.

These two noble women were first cousins, and had been much together for many years. Each summer Mr. and Mrs. Gaston had entertained Aunt Louisa at their cottage at Cassadaga camp, and I always looked forward to meeting and gazing upon the dear faces of both these arisen ones among the group of relatives and friends that ever met me there. This year they were both too ill to leave their homes, and passed away nearly together, only three days intervening.

I hastened to answer the call of the dear ones, to speak at the service in my aunt's memory, and was accompanied by Mr. Gaston and Mrs. Nichols—a sister of Mrs. Gaston. A few hours took us by rail to my native place—Cuba, N. Y.—where we rested at the home of my sister's family. The next day we drove five miles up, up among and over the hills. Crowned were they and robed in splendor. Crimson, gold, brown and emerald; such tints and tones of autumn foliage as make one in love with death. When nature arrays herself in such regal splendor for the dying of the year why should mortals fear the great transfiguration miscalled Death? It seemed that the entire scene was made to reveal the greater glory of the life beyond.

How perfectly in keeping with the beautiful autumn scene was the life just closed to earth; the harvests gathered, the fruitage of her beautiful life all garnered. As we drew near the little wood-colored house that had withstood the storms of nearly a century, it seemed to me that a great light surrounded the dwelling, and when we entered the light was stronger and was centered around the still white form that seemed like a lily resting there. A lily of her pure and peaceful life that shed its radiance on all who were there. The lily seemed to grow and take the shape of the message of comfort and love for those assembled; touching with its sweet influence the dear ones of her heart.

It was uplifting, strengthening. While the guides ministered, I saw with open spirit vision the throngs of loved arisen ones—a vast concourse of the spiritual household—saw Cousin Thankful, so lately arisen, already there to welome dear Aunt. Saw each familiar face known in childhood; and the whiteness grew and grew until the great Lily of Immortal Life received and encompassed dear Aunt Louisa.

Lights and Shadows.

We never know the the blessings of this life until we are deprived of them. We cannot truly welcome the sunlight until we pass through the shadows or night. Each is necessary to the perfection of both.

The progressive man needs mental and spiritual pabulum daily, and is always reaching out for continued novelty and contrasts. What would the great novelist writers Stevenson, Victor Hugo and Eliot be in their life-like stories if it were not for the characters depicted and contrasts? What were music without its scales of harmony and cadences, the minor and major tones of melody?

Who could endure the sun in midheaven, forever pouring its mad rays down upon the earth, every hour of the day the year out? Darkness and sleep are the restoratives.

Welcome sunlight and no less welcome shadows and night. Without variety even pleasure cloys and happiness becomes wearisome.

Contrast is the stimulant to sharpen one's perceptions and opens the door of knowledge exalting the sentiments. Monotony of life will not build up thought in the thinker, will not thrill the poet with imagery and speech. It will not give the artist forms in nature's intricate galleries to grace his canvas. It will not lift the weary-hearted nor heal the soul-sick mind. It will not satisfy the gifted soul and lover.

The morning has far advanced and I hear the whistle of the locomotive steaming on its way, leaving its freight of living souls in their travels to and fro, up and down the earth, and I hasten to mail these pen-thoughts to the car of progress and to reach you in the sanctuary of your home sphere where through the columns of The Progressive Thinker radiates the clear thoughts of reason and from minds attuned to the glory over evil and superstition and the conquest of Right over Wrong and Might. Personal Magnetism

How Prominent Men Develop This Power and Use it to Influence Others — Women, Too, Adepts in This Mysterious Art.

A Reporter Makes Astounding Discoveries—Secret Methods Which Charm and Fascinate the Human Mind.

High Priests of the Occult Reveal Jealously Guarded Secrets of Years—A Wonderful New Book by Prominent New York Men.

A wonderful new book entitled "The Secret of Power" has just been issued at an expense of over $5,000 by one of the leading colleges of the City of New York. This book is from the pens of the ablest specialists of modern times. The authors gave away the copyright on conditions that 10,000 copies should be distributed to the public free of charge. The Columbia Scientific Academy is now complying with this contract, and until the edition of 10,000 copies is exhausted you can get a copy of this book absolutely free. The book is profusely illustrated with the most expensive half-tone engravings. It is full of wonderful secrets and startling surprises, and thoroughly explains the real source of the power of personal influence. It fully and completely reveals the fundamental principles of success and influence in every walk of life. The hidden mysteries of personal magnetism, will power and scientific character reading are explained in an intensely interesting manner. Two secret methods of personal influence are described, which positively enable any intelligent person to exercise a marvelous influence and control over anyone whom he may wish. These methods are entirely new and have never before been made public. A reporter has tried them personally and can vouch for their wonderful power.

The book also describes absolutely certain methods by which you can read the character, secrets and lives of every one you meet. No one can deceive you. You can tell what vocation is best for you to follow. You can know the secret power by which minds of human beings are charmed and fascinated. The newest, latest and best system of physical and mental culture and magnetic healing is fully explained and illustrated by beautiful half-tone engravings. No such book has ever before been published. No such wonderful information has ever before been placed in the hands of the public. On account of the mighty power and influence placed in one's hands by this book, the legislature of the State of New York debated whether or not the state ought to permit its promiscuous circulation; but it was finally decided the good it would accomplish would greatly overcome the ill, and its distribution was not interfered with.

Not long ago John D. Rockefeller, the richest man in America, said, in talking to a Sunday school class, that he regarded his success in life largely to his ability to influence others. Lincoln, Leo, Napoleon and Alexander the Great, all won name and renown by their wonderful power of personal influence. Jay Gould piled up millions by this same power. J. P. Morgan organized the billion dollar steel trust and enriched himself by millions simply by his marvelous ability to influence others. There are to-day thousands of men with the brains and education of Mr. Morgan who are practically paupers. They have the ability to organize a trust, but they have not sufficient power of personal influence. Personal influence, will-power stamina—call it what you will—has from the creation of man been the subtle force that has brought wealth, fame and renown to those who were fortunate enough to possess it.

This strange, mysterious influence is inherent in every human being. By the late methods explained by the New York specialist in human culture any intelligent person can develop a wonderfully magnetic personality, and learn how to read the character, secrets and the lives of others in a few days' study at his own home. You can use this marvelous power without the knowledge of your most intimate friends and associates. You can use it to obtain lucrative employment, to secure an advance in salary, to win the friendship and influence of others to obtain a greater share of happiness from life. You can be respected, honored, and become a leader in your community.

If you are not fully satisfied with your present condition and circumstances; if you long for greater success or more money; if you are not able to influence others to the extent you desire, the reporter would advise you to write at once for free copy of this great work now being given away by the Columbia Scientific Academy.

Mrs. C. Richmond Duxbury, of 472 A Greene Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., the authoress of "New England Folk" recently sent for copies of the books; after carefully examining them and testing the methods of personal influence on her friends and associates, she makes the following statement in a letter to a friend: "Nothing could induce me to part with the advantage that my little knowledge of your books has given me. Any student can acquire it and will be fascinated and delighted with the result.'

Fred Perkins, of South Haven, Mich., says: "I have been in great demand since I read the work of the Columbia Scientific Academy. People are amazed and mystified at the things I do. I believe I could make $25 per day reading character alone if I were to charge for my services. If anyone would have told me I would receive so much wonderful information I would have thought him crazy."

Mrs. Effie Watson, of Martinsville, Ind., says: "Could I have had access to such information in past years I could have avoided many misfortunes. This work of the Columbia Scientific Academy shall be my guiding star the remaining days of my life."

If you will send your name and address to the Secretary, L. C. Cooper, Dept. 242, 1941 Broadway, New York City, this book will be sent you absolutely free, postage prepaid. On account of the great expense involved in preparing this book, the Columbia Scientific Academy requests that only people who are especially interested write for free copy—only those who desire to achieve greater success and better their condition in life.

LIGHT OF EGYPT.

The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is (a valuable addition and) a library on occult subjects. Spiritual astrology is especially elaborated. Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc., are a few of the subjects treated of in a scholarly and masterly manner, showing the author to be familiar with his subjects. You cannot afford to be without it, as well as all his other books, viz.: The Light of Egypt, Vol. I., bound in cloth, $2; paper, $1. The Light of Egypt, Vol. II., bound in cloth only, $2. Celestial Dynamics, cloth, $1.

THE SOUL OF THINGS;

Or Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. By Wm. and Elizabeth M. F. Denton. A marvelous work. Though concise as a text book it is as fascinating as a work of fiction. The reader will be amazed to see the curious facts here combined in support of this power of the human mind, which will resolve a thousand doubts and difficulties, make geology plain as day, and throw light on all subjects now obscured by time. Price, $1.50. In three volumes, cloth bound, $1.50 each. Postage, 10c per copy.

GREAT INDUCEMENTS NEVER BEFORE OFFERED BY ONE PAPER.

OUR PREMIUMS.

BEAR IN MIND.

Remember, please, that we send many of our Premium Books by express. If you do not receive your order promptly by mail, inquire at the express office. If not there, notify us at once.

Remember, please that it costs ten cents to get a personal check cashed at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of these Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you order one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until further notice, the two following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "Seers of the Ages, or, Spiritualism Past and Present," by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills an exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have TEN Premium Books only, and you can select from them as follows:

Any three of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

Any six of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.

Any seven of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the ten Premium books you may order, price $2.65.

Any nine of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.

Lastly all of these TEN valuable Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.10, a price never before equaled in this country or Europe. The following is the list:

TEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.10.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism.
6—The Next World Interviewed.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.
10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These ten books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $3.10, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these ten premium books is about ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.10, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—a bargain the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS!

To Clubs of ten or more we offer the following terms to each one: The Progressive Thinker one year, and ONE of the following books, $1.15: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science"; "Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present"; "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands"; "The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," Vol. 3. The one who gets up the Club will be entitled to the paper one year free, and any two of the books he may select among our list of premiums.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

The clear and very interesting account of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, with the inciting causes of that tragedy, will serve to excite renewed interest in the great work of Father Chiniquy, entitled "Fifty years in the Church of Rome." In this book he exposes in the minutest details the corruption that exists in that church, and its iniquitous methods and aims.

It is a book of absorbing interest, and should be read by every patriotic American, and by every one who would be well informed concerning the evil works and designs of the Romish hierarchy. It is a large volume of 832 pages. Price, $2.25.

DR. CONGER TO THE FRONT.

Dr. M. E. Conger, the able Lecturer on Reform and Medical Subjects, and the author of several works of great merit, applies the Scalpel to The Great Psychological Crime and dissects it into shreds. The Doctor is an Old Pioneer in the Cause of Truth, and his views will be read with abiding interest. Read carefully his second paragraph and then proceed with his Analysis.

"The Great Psychological Crime," and The Destructive Principle of Nature in Individual Life," is the text for this symposium.

This book is ably written, carefully edited, methodically arranged and filled with important matter, has over 400 pages, clear-faced, large type, very large pages, substantially bound, and IS WORTHY OF A CAREFUL PERUSAL BY EVERY INDEPENDENT SPIRITUALIST AND LIBERALIST.

As a basic exposition of the subjects and influence of mesmerism, psychology, hypnotism and mediumship, it is inexcusably deficient.

First—It has only touched the external expression of the subjects.

Second—Life, love, inspiration and spiritual exaltation have not been noticed, unless classed and included in the emotional. See chapter thirteen.

Third—If a great crime is to be considered, if it exists outside of the thought—imagination—of the author of the book, with such a strong emphatic title, we should seek to know its origin and cause. The author has failed to give either origin or cause, both of which are virtually ignored.

Fourth—If there is anything new or startling in the brain of the author he has failed to make it known; his third book may contain the secret, when unfolded it may give us the whole thing.

Fifth—Just why modern Spiritualists exposed the leaders of the great crime in public, in season and out of season, for more than forty years.

Spiritualists may have failed in many respects to protect themselves in dealing with unseen and unknown laws, influences and persons—Spirits—but they have never publicly taught or sanctioned Psychologic, Hypnotic or Mediumistic deception. Our ism has rested, and ever must rest upon demonstration. Demonstration of what? Of continued life, Spirit life beyond the grave.

Just why the author of "The Great Psychological Crime" has arraigned Spiritualists as the headcenter of the crime, may be explained in his third book, but is not found in his present effort.

If honest he must be ignorant; if ignorant he may be excused, but whether honest or ignorant, signs are in evidence of a priestly scheme to saddle the great crime upon the backs of the only ism that can and has stood the crucial test—demonstration.

In summing up, I use plain language, naked truth, reason and justice as impressed by the subject in hand. As a priestly movement to deceive millions of honest, earnest investigators of the most important subject humanity has ever investigated, studied or considered, "The Great Psychological Crime" book may be pronounced a partial success. It appeals to ignorance and fear, the earmarks that ever attend priestcraft.

The author has not disturbed the hoary-headed monster of priestcraft, kingcraft, myth and mystery, and the long train of subjugation and crime—blood, fire and every conceivable form of torture ever attending priestcraft.

I charge a deep laid scheme of conspiracy; the author is the subjective conspirator, a paid tool; he is not a fool, but an instrument of the slick, unscrupulous Christian clergy, Catholic and Protestant, who are every day seeing the necessity of uniting for a common defense against the increasing influence of scientific demonstration of continued life, the most dangerous foe that priestcraft has ever met.

Spiritualists ought to perceive that their position, their demonstration, takes the wind out of the sails of faith, myth and mystery of the ages.

The demonstration is scientific and is conceded. Cunning priests know there is something more needed than robes, ceremonies and Sunday club entertainments to annul the constantly increasing skepticism, intelligence and independence of this strenuous period.

"The Great Psychological Crime" has no signficance unless the design and object is perceived.

A wide field of thought was opened—discovered—when mediums gave evidence that the dead still lived in a world unseen. Fifty years of scientific research in the realm unseen has caused a revolution in all independent minds. At this time scientific thought is described as chaotic, because of the wonderful discoveries of everyday occurrence.

Thought as a force, thought as the one primal unseen force, is being recognized, so say the scientists.

Bacquerel rays, radium, pollonium and other radio-active substances are being studied, also ether, which is declared to be the mother and source of all things.

Prof. Crookes estimates that a square foot of ether has a restraining or uplifting force of ten tons.

This ether cannot be seen, felt, smelt, tasted or heard; it cannot be defined, and its origin is unknown; it is said to be the essence of light, heat and electricity.

An eminent liberal clergyman of the east declares ether to be "A universal something without beginning, without conceivable end, everywhere, yet nowhere, the Sphinx of Science, the illusive of algebraic quantities of knowledge."

Modern Spiritualism laid the foundation for scientific investigation of all occult forces.

We are nearing the day of a great change, with the most remarkable discoveries in the occult, of the ages. Are we ready to let go, and move on with eyes and ears open, ever receptive to the incoming tide?

If a medical monopoly proves to be at the bottom of this book scheme, it does not signify; all monopolies are assured of a royal support by the great influential American Church, both divisions.

AN IMPRESSION.

A wind-swept sky,
The waste of moorland stretching to the west;
The sea low moaning in a strange unrest—
A seagull's cry.

Washed by the tide,
The rocks lie sullen in the waning light;
The foam breaks in long strips of hungry white, Dissatisfied.

Above, around,
Thunderous calm of drought that kills and sears;
Silence in travail, waiting birth of tears—
No conscious sound.

Only the stir
Of some small insect life within the land,
The lapping of the waves upon the sand,
A corncrake's whirr.

Upon the hill
The gorse seems thirsting for rain; afar,
Low poised on the horizon line, one star
Shines, lonely still.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, The Poet Philosopher.

This Poet Philosopher stands before the world to-day without a Peer in many respects. Her Poems are Gems of Logic, Eloquence, Pathos, Philosophy and Wit; a combination of excellences not possessed to the same extent by any other poet on earth to-day. She believes in Spirit Communion, and alludes to the same most beautifully in many articles she has written for the press. Her views on The Great Psychological Crime will be read with interest by everybody.

MRS. ELLA WHEELER WILCOX ENDORSES THE BOOK.

May I add my little endorsement of "The Great Psychological Crime"?

I believe it to be the MOST IMPORTANT BOOK PUBLISHED IN THE LAST CENTURY.

The purely physical sciences benefit only our earthly life.

This School of Natural Science, from which the book emanates, benefits man the mortal and man the immortal, if he chooses to profit by it.

The book under discussion has been to me like a great Search Light sent from a ship, showing rock and reef and safe harbor, and the channel leading thereto.

Born into a family of agnostics, faith in God and life immortal were brought with me from former incarnations. In my early girlhood I began to investigate Spiritualistic manifestations, with results at once convincing and confusing; convincing of the fact of continuance of life and intelligence after death, yet confusing because the messages received were so frequently contradictory and unworthy. Supposing as I did that death meant illumination of spirit, I could not understand many messages sent me, messages I still knew to be from some source beyond earth.

Shortly after my marriage in 1884 my husband who has always urged and aided me forward into new fields of thought, induced me to take up the study of Theosophy.

In this path of research I found my first explanation of the confusing experiences I had encountered in Spiritualistic tests. The study and reading along Theosophical lines were broadening and helpful, but several of the leaders in the various branches were so at variance with my ideals of religious teachers, and so at swords' points with one another, that I went no farther in that direction.

My next and most beneficial experience was the privilege of being a student under that remarkable soul, Vivekananda, the Hindu monk. He was the greatest soul I have ever encountered, yet his ideal was the renunciation of the world, and this ideal, to my world-loving, humanity-loving nature, was impossible to attain.

In The Great Psychological Crime I find proofs in abundance of Spiritualistic truths. I find all of Theosophy epitomized and formulated so the mind can grasp its salient points; and I find the broad, high, beautiful wisdom of the Hindu philosophy brought into healthful, helpful, modern, every-day life, for those who have ears to hear; eyes to see, and minds to think.

My observation of spiritual mediumship proved to me that it was dangerous and that it invariably destroyed or injured the individuality of the medium to some degree; yet as it was at its best absolutely convincing of a continuation of life beyond death, it seemed a commendable sacrifice.

Theosophy suggested mysteriously the possible acquirement of knowledge of immortal life without mediumship, yet its philosophy was so involved and intricate, and its ministers so warlike and ofttimes mercenary among themselves, that it gave small impetus to the peace-seeking soul to go farther.

The Hindu Sage (God glorify him through eternity) spoke more familiarly of worlds beyond than of this world, and I KNOW HE KNEW; yet to reach his standard of joyful renunciation of all that makes life sweet was impossible.

Therefore, the publication of this book, "The Great Psychological Crime" (and its predecessor, "Harmonics of Evolution"), with its positive statements and statistics, its reserved yet earnest assurances of the possibility of each worthy soul to attain Mastership and knowledge, I consider of incalculable value to humanity in this material age.

It is a call to us all, to COME HIGHER, yet to do the work appointed us and to fill the sphere we are fitted for.

should be selected as a special class, and paraded before the world as particularly fostering (sustaining and encouraging hypnotism) crime, is beyond the vision or capacity of the scribe to understand.

Sixth—Not possessing the qualifications of a book reviewer and limited for space in this great Symposium, I will confine my effort to what seems to be the objective points of the text.

Seventh—If a great psychological crime exists, why does it exist? What is the origin? Does it date back one thousand, ten thousand or one hundred thousand years for cause? What does the author know about origin or cause?

Shall the crime be charged to Spiritualists of this day and date, or to ancient religionists all along the line for the past ten thousand years? Charged up to their intelligence or the subjugating influences of their religions, perpetuated by priestcraft and kingcraft united?

Is this great crime something new, or as old and black as the hills and hells, and as thoroughly materialistic? Did it originate during the past century?

Are not the above queries important in the investigation of this sub

Eighth—Were not hypnotism and mediumship recognized by all Bible writers, by the prophets, the inspired, by those who dreamed dreams and saw visions, by those who healed, by those who talked with materialized Spirits, by those who were entranced and lifted up as Paul claimed to be, as multitudes have been in all ages of recorded history? Are Spiritualists to be especially arraigned for subjugating, controlling and destroying their followers? Is this justice or good sense?

Ninth—Has any religion done as much to free humanity from myth and dogma, from ignorance and fear, from priestly control and domination in the past fifty years, as have the teachings and demonstrations of Modern Spiritualism?

Is it possible or honest to ignore the fact that Spiritualism demonstrates continued life and thus supersedes faith, hope and belief with knowledge regarding the one most important problem that humanity has ever been called upon to solve and settle?

Tenth—The subjugation and control of humanity is not a new expression in life; it is an old, old crime, as old as priestcraft, kingcraft, churchcraft or governmentcraft. Is always a selfish, criminal craft.

That it is a terrible crime cannot be disputed, nor that this discussion is not opportune.

This world has been deluged with blody wars, as a result of the subjugation of the ignorant, the weak and the innocent. Religious wars continue, blood still flows; civilized or uncivilized the stake and sword are not yet discarded.

Eleventh—NO HARM CAN COME TO SPIRITUALISTS OR SPIRITUALISM IN THIS AGITATION, BUT GREAT GOOD MUST RESULT.

"TURN ON THE LIGHT" and have no fear; truth never suffers in the brightest light; it is intense darkness that causes fear and destruction.

Spiritualism has only one condition to fear and that is all restrictive influences; give freedom to mortals and spirits and they will redeem this world. They will soon put an end to all psychologic and hypnotic subjugations.

Liberty—freedom—is the one infinite just demand made upon all people; the subjugation by any method, power or influence of any individual is certainly a great crime.

Twelfth—If one of the objects of the author was to call attention of the reading public to the great subjugating crime, and to place it upon the shoulders of those dependent upon it for spiritual and material support, he needs a guide, a physician; he is sick, he is blind, fifty years of darkness envelops him—turn on the light.

For fifty years Modern Spiritualism has preached deliverance to all hypnotized, subjugated, priest-ridden people, has ever refrained from teaching selfishness for one class, destruction for the other, and a heaven and hell religion of Christianity.

If the author desired to lessen the great crime of the ages, is it not reasonable to expect a careful, just exposition of its origin, cause, objects to be attained, the secret influences and methods used in perpetuating the infamous subjugating crime? Why has not the author sought out the origin, or given us a hint of the cause or object of the great crime of the ages?

His vision when turned towards the past is dim, and goes back less than a century for origin and cause.

He musters all his forces, and charges upon the only class who have

MR. HARRELL TO THE FRONT.

Mr. Herbert A. Harrell is President of the Englewood Spiritualist Society, and a comprehensive, critical thinker along spiritualistic and occult lines, and his views will be read with interest.

In the brevity of space allotted to the discussion of a topic so stupendously great as that covered by the author of the book entitled "The Great Psychological Crime," I find myself somewhat cribbed in my efforts when limited to a few columns in The Progressive Thinker. Our author in his efforts to convey exact mental pictures with his words makes a mistake from my point of view, in defining the triplicity of the constitution of man. He speaks of him as soul, spirit and body. Among students of occultism and of biblical lore we find the Pauline classification (spirit, soul and body) more generally accepted. But since he defines his terminology the reader will encounter little or no difficulty from this point of exception unless through inadvertance he fails to impress himself at the outset with the writer's lexicon.

It seems to me a further analysis of this complex entity called man would more fully suffice the objects and aims that we are so considerately weighing.

I refer in particular to the septenary constitution of man, analyzing the persistent reincarnating ego, who is a reflected trinity of the triune godhead. When once man understands that his beginning and home is in heaven and his pilgrimage here is but temporary, learning as he does on this plane of manifestation the things of this great school of sentient physical life, then and not until then, will he be fully able to grasp the injury done him by subjective processes, induced either by the use of opiates, hypnosis, self-induced hysteria, or spirit dominance. For more than 35 years have I been associated with spiritistic phenomena effected by the subjugation, in almost every instance, of a graciously willing but not over-bright medium. The more rigorous and perfect the control, the more astounding, as a rule, the manifestation.

Let me define myself more clearly when I use the word medium. I mean to convey the idea of one who permits the use by excarnate spirits of his physical organism, which includes not only the dense physical body but its etheric double and astral duplicates [I am here assuming that you are all familiar with the planes of nature] for the purpose of receiving the subtle impacts of the planes to which these bodies correspond and transmitting them to the outer or objective world. Literally speaking these vehicles are utilized by the Ego in the very inverse relation to which they are perverted in hypnosis or subjective mediumship. There is wherein lies the wrong. The suggestion that reduces the man to catalepsy, or any degree thereof, crowds back the outrushing energies of the soul at one and the same time when the consciousness is attempting to focus himself into his physical vehicles on the physical plane and assert himself in what we know as the waking state. It makes no difference, I repeat, whether this perversion of nature's intent is induced by the will of a living or excarnate human entity, the result is precisely one and the same thing. Again we are told in vulgar literature and by ignorant or designing persons that the liberty of choice is never surrendered by the ego in any of his subjective moods; that an impingement upon his moral status will immediately result in the reawakening or throwing off of the entranced condition. This our learned author emphatically denies, and in his denial he has the full and unqualified support of the subscriber hereto. The deeper the injection of suggestion, the smaller and less assertive the volitional activity. In the hundreds of clinical demonstrations that it has been my morbid privilege to witness, the Flower and Atkinson school of therapy, notwithstanding, I have invariably found that the resisting power of each and every subject, when forced into a state of deep somnolence and then gradually resuscitated, was identically the same. They invariably follow out to the letter the dictates of the operator. The subject of the average type of character, being confronted with a proposition that is repugnant to him, will most generally resent any suggested infraction of his principles of right or wrong at any degree of consciousness between his normal waking state and that of deep trance. But, strange as it may seem, the same subject will carry out in the minutest detail any command given him by the operator during the period of transit from coma back to full consciousness. Now since we have all agreed on the one cogent point of similarities in the position occupied by the individual subjected to sprit control and the man under mesmeric dominance, is it not at least worth your while to be especially cautious in such practices and submit to them only upon the rarest occasions, if at all?

Why I should take this position is quite obvious.

On page 97 I find a grotesque form of syllogism proceeding from premises to conclusions, viz.: "In like manner the first method of cure above-named develops a therapeutic faith by the lever of prayer. The second accomplishes the same result by the inclined plane of reason. The third employs the wheel or negation and the axle of affirmation. The fourth resorts to the jackscrew of superstition. The fifth relies upon the pulley of suggestion and the wedge of wisdom," etc. I trust my brother of the Natural Science school will not again in this incarnation be guilty of perpetrating such literary rot upon sympathetic students of occultism.

On page 83 we are informed of an alchemistical process of transmutation that would baffle the skill, intuitive diagnosis and far-reaching clairvoyance of even Paracelsus himself. "Hysteria is 'cured' only to develop epilepsy; the cocaine habit is 'cured' and immediately develops cancer of the stomach." A grand truth may be couched in these two sentences, but for purposes of maintaining the high standard of the book in the minds of the more studious of his readers this statement shoud have been omitted.

Quite naturally with his ability to raise his consciousness to no higher level than the sixth level of the astral plane, our brother tells us there are thirteen spheres; seven terrestrial and six celestial. And right here let me say that it is a source of intense gratification to the writer hereof to find an independent investigator who corroborates with such perfect parallelisms, as far as he goes, the wisdom of the ancients. It is the rising out of and above this thirteenth sphere into the seventh subdivision of the astral plane that brings our brother to the conclusion that "spiritual death (for man) is not necessarily inevitable, but under control of the individual."

"To all appearances death, both physical and spiritual, is ultimately inevitable for the animal." So far as he goes and with what evidence he has before him he is correct. But his verdict has been rendered before the evidence is all in. Individuals who have developed a higher power of response tell us that this "spiritual" animal has carried with him into the great animal over-mind all his earthly experiences, there to be commingled and interpenetrated with and by the experiences of other animals of his species for a period of time designated by the Great Universal Intelligence. Tinctured with the instinct begotten of experience there again comes forth into physical manifestation, time and again, animals from the same subdivision of this collective group-soul or over-mind till individualities are evolved—persistent entities—and the third outpouring coming from God-the-Father (which is a spark from the Divine) forming a conjunction with these animal entities, marks the epoch where, in time and space, the ego or soul of man is born. These processes take place on higher spiritual levels than any of those to which reference is made in our book under review.

As to clairvoyance and clairaudience I must explain to you what I mean, and to the development of these miscalled spiritual powers I shall always lend my hearty support and endorsement. I am one with the spiritistic movement, inculcating as best I can, not as a teacher, but as a fellow-student, all that is ennobling, and decrying all that appeals to me as degenerating, irrespective of condemnation or hope of reward. I will make clear to you, therefore, in manner and form as comprehensive as my clumsy words will permit, something of the modus operandi of raising your powers of response to a high vibratory level. I take it that you are all fully aware that the eye does not see and that the ear does not hear—that they are but avenues that are correlated to a comparatively small set of vibrations, and are the transmitters, as it were, of these impacts from the external world into the much-enwrapped ego or consciousness. There is but one sense and these avenues are two of the five apertures through which the ego is enabled to distinguish himself from the not-self. Now each of these organs of sense (as well as the other three), for normal humanity, vary within measurable degrees. The spectrum analysis will give you such proofs of this statement as will put you beyond doubt in the matter, for it frequently occurs that in marking off what seems to be the limit of the red ray two very honorably-inclined persons will embark in disagreement. This same rule likewise holds good in the matter of hearing. You will agree with me, then, if my premises be scientifically correct, that a difference if perceptible, may under proper methods of culture, be brought to a degree of inclusiveness that that will widen the scope of response in both hearing and sight that will open to mankind a broader and more beautiful world than the little one in which we now live. Humanity was once, away back in the night of time, in possession of clairvoyant and clairaudient faculties and when the lessons of the physical plane shall have been learned more fully, at a date far remote in the future, they again will be repossessed of the same penchants. When the connecting links between the spiritual and physical bodies have been fully evolved, there will be no momentary cessation of consciousness in the transmission of spiritual experiences down into the physical brain. The pineal gland, now an atrophied mass of gray matter attached to the floor of the third ventrical of the brain in front of the cerebellum, was the organ of spiritual sight in the ancient Lemurian race. They lost their psychic sight as the sympathetic system grew weak and evolutionary processes brought to the forefront the dominance of the cerebro-spinal system. The large proportion of our mediums to-day and of the so-called good subjects for hypnosis are those who, in a large measure, are under the sway of the processes of the sympathetic system. Take special note of this statement with reference to psychometric readers who place the article to be read from, upon the pit of their stomachs. This accounts, too, for the fact that a "natural-born" medium is seldom if ever a monument of intellection.

But enough of this for one time. I will suffice this almost inexhaustibly interesting discussion of the merits and demerits of the book entitled "The Great Psychological Crime" by saying that I have many words of commendation for the tenets therein put forward, and to the student of metaphysics, to my brother spiritists and theosophists, and to my advance-thought associates in general I most heartily commend it.

THE SYMPOSIUM HIGHLY LAUDED.

Truth bears inspection and dissection; in fact, recoils from naught. Even direst threats of annihilation but create increased brilliancy for a great truth like Spiritualism; and in no instance could this ever have been proven more conclusively than in the Symposium recently published in The Progressive Thinker upon the subject of The Great Psychological Crime. I have read every line published so far, and fail to note any diminution of lustre of the old ship that has so proudly ridden the waves of opposition for almost three score years without going into 'dry dock" for repairs. Rather, I feel that she has been remodeled to the taste and advanced ideas of modern progressive thinkers, and has received a fine polish by the experts in the ranks. P. O. KERR.

An Optimistic View of the Book.

E. W. Baldwin is one of Wisconsin's foremost thinkers. He looks on all sides of a subject, and then fearlessly discusses the same.

To the Editor:—You carried the Symposium through courageously and nobly.

I feel that it cost you one or two sleepless moments. What of it? No great things are generally done without some effort. I feel that you at last found the undertaking more than you thought at first. I may be all wrong. You know what the facts were and that's enough. You may be so practiced that what seems a mountain to me, to you is only a jingling of the bells sleigh ride.

Anyway it has helped the cause. In every way it has helped it. Every medium will be helped by it. If they endorse or condemn the book, IT WILL BE HELP.

My opinion is that twenty-nine thirtieths of the mediums will condemn it. Even so. That will do them good.

Suppose it to be true that a Jesuit hand is back of the author. It is then of the same value. It is a question of what is said, not who says it. If the devil controlled the author he shall be credited with the good things said just the same.

It may be a whole year before the leaven gets through, fairly through the lump. It is one of those cases where the full force of it is not seen and felt in a moment.

Again, as to the author concealing his name. As long as he gave it to you, that was sufficient. Every day editors are publishing communications with false signatures. It is recognized as legitimate, the only requirement being that the editor shall know who is responsible.

Thos Carlyle wrote several books before signing his own name to one.

It is not positively known yet who wrote the "Junius Letters." They were written from the most honest and patriotic motives. Had his real name been given his life would have paid the penalty.

For a long time no one knew who "George Eliot" was. Now her novels are praised as among the very best. I think it showed EXTREME WEAKNESS to make a point of the writer being anonymous. True, high, and deep wisdom treats matter on its merit, not on its source. A temperance thought from a man in the gutter is as valuable as from a king on a throne.

Mediumship and Spiritualism will now go on better than ever. You don't regret what you did, and you never will. You were honest, and you saw it right. The time had come for just such an awakening. Thanks to the author of The Great Psychological Crime, and I don't care who or what he is. THE CHARACTER BEHIND THE BOOK IS NOTHING TO ME; IT IS THE BOOK ITSELF I AM CONCERNED WITH.

We have an interesting neighbor that I sometimes meet. He knows of the Symposium, although not a Spiritualist. I showed him the last number, and told him you had told three "lies" about me; that I was neither distinguished, literary, nor fine. He says: "It isn't for you to judge; it is for the editor and the public to judge, and that I would be ruled off the witness stand."

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

A Field of Noble Effort.

Not one of our thousands of readers should fail to read Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle's essay on The Lyceum.

The grand and far-reaching importance of the progressive lyceum cannot be overestimated. As a matter of fact, sadly we say it, the importance of the lyceum is all too evidently under-estimated by Spiritualists generally, and there should be a thorough waking-up on this subject.

Spiritualists should awake to the fact that lyceums are as needful, if indeed they are not more necessary and more useful than Spiritualist societies themselves. While societies are good and helpful, and are in themselves schools of learning for adult minds, the lyceums take minds in their more plastic state and their more educative condition, and wisely aim, both in theory and practice, to impart and implant a knowledge of underlying ethical principles, combined with spiritual ideals, and exalted and uplifting conceptions of life and the things that ennoble and beautify human character for time and for eternity.

How different is all this from the routine ordinary Sunday-school training of the churches! To train young children in the dogmatic beliefs of the church creeds that they are wicked, vile sinners, and will go to hell unless they are saved by the blood of an atoning savior—such is the trend of ordinary Sunday-school teaching.

The progressive lyceum aims to inculcate high moral principles, to build pure and noble character on the basis of pure thoughts and high ideals, and love of truth and goodness, coupled with humane sentiments wrought into concrete life and action toward humanity and toward the lower orders of animal beings.

Think of it! What nobler work—what higher, purer and more uplifting field of effort? What line of work more effective for the production of good results, in the upbuilding of a true, noble humanity? What can be better than this work, to raise up a high and grand class of citizenship, brave thinkers and workers for mankind?

So we say to Spiritualists, Rally to the progressive lyceums. Establish them where there are none. Strengthen and encourage them where they are.

By this work you will render a grand, good service to the cause of Spiritualism, to your country, and to humanity.

The Lyceum at the N. S. A. Convention.

John W. Ring, the national superintendent of the lyceum movement, made a good showing, and although he was only given one hour during the convention, he impressed every one present that he is the right man in the right place. Personally he made a great "hit" with all. His earnestness, honesty and lack of egotism, with his ability and zeal won all hearts. His report was received with enthusiasm and his work is to be continued, but we must remember that it costs money to publish the weekly paper which he puts out for Sunday use in the lyceums, which is really a great helper. Subscribe liberally. Hold up his hands, for he is a representative of Truth, enlightening the world. Could not each lyceum give an entertainment to help him along financially? The N. S. A.. voted that $100 be given to him to carry on his work, but that is a small sum for so much work.

A paper showing why the lyceum is the basic work of Spiritualism was read at the convention by Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle, which we publish for your consideration.

CARD FROM DR. J. M. PEEBLES.

Dr. Peebles writes: "Sunday, Nov. 8, I lecture in Chicago, and go directly from there to Southern California for the winter. Accordingly, all newspapers, magazines and letters designed for me upon the subjects of books, lectures, literature, travels, and the deleterious influences of ignorant and evil-disposed spirits—in brief, obsessions, should be directed to me at San Diego, California."

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine," contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 430 pages. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Reflections on The Great Psychological Crime.

The Great Psychological Crime.

Often the bitterest remedy is the most effective and corrective.

This is true in medicine and equally true all through life.

How often do we learn the greatest lesson from the bitterest experiences of our lives. How often the most beautiful rainbow appears across the blackest cloud.

We are reluctant to acknowledge the good that comes through a deep sorrow, for tears are so blinding, but when the sorrow has passed and our eyes are washed by their crystal drops, we can discern a deeper sympathy for our fellows. We can feel as they feel when clothed in the habiliments of woe. We can meet them heart to heart and soul to soul. We have been there; we are one with them in kinship.

Again, we are often shocked by an accusation that is true, and of which fact we were ignorant until accused and aroused by the stroke.

No one can see our faults like the other party. No one can see another's faults more plainly than we. We all need watching and arousing, lest in the monotony of self-conceit during this walk of life we forget there are others; lest in the quietude of contentment we, feeling that we have reached the limit of wisdom, the height of moral and spiritual perfection, fall asleep at our post and the onrushing crowds of young geniuses, scientists, moralists and religionists pass over our lifeless forms.

Many Spiritualists have seemingly arrived at their destination of progress or the limit of their capacity to expand, and fail to see anything good and grand in people who do not believe as they do; those who take exceptions to their limited methods of reasoning upon the fundamental points of Spiritualism, and become sensitive to attack from other thinkers.

NOW WE NEED THESE ATTACKS AND BECOME STRONGER BY THE ENCOUNTERS, AND ARE MADE TO REALIZE THAT THERE ARE WEAK PLACES THAT WE HAD FAILED TO NOTICE; THAT THE HUMAN FRAILTIES WERE BECOMING MILLSTONES ABOUT OUR SPIRITUAL ORGANISMS.

We ARE HUMAN, but we are also spiritual and as the bodily disorders are corrected by the most bitter doses of medicine, so are our spiritual disorders changed by a BITTER DOSE OF THE TRUTH, wisely and carefully administered, and in the ultimate outcome it matters not as to the personale of the physician.

Now, we are ready to say that while The Great Psychological Crime has been a bitter dose to many, it has calmly, candidly and very timely called our attention to a few dangers that would, perhaps, have been unnoticed by thousands who were so wrapped up in their beautiful interviews with friends in spirit realms, that they had given no thought to any other side of the questions.

The book will have but little effect upon those of our genuine mediums who have in their lives and by their experiences proven that as it appears to the mind of the author of the book it has not appeared to them; BUT IT WILL HAVE AN EDUCATIVE EFFECT UPON MEDIUMS AND SERVE AS A WARNING TO THOSE WHO CONTEMPLATE BECOMING MEDIUMS, TO MAKE HASTE SLOWLY.

The discussion is of too much value to end abruptly with only two issues of The Progressive Thinker, therefore we shall present more upon this subject from time to time as the accumulation of material upon both sides will justify.

Spiritualism has shown itself amply able to cope with all contending forces in the past, and there need be no fear but that the cause will be protected by the united forces of the two worlds.

In the spirit of perfect fairness we have endeavored to conduct this great discussion, as we ever have in the past all other questions of vital importance to our cause.

If we have faults we cannot see, and that can be shown us, let us be progressive enough—let us be frank enough to acknowledge them and wise enough, and reasonable enough to correct them and keep in line with our fellows in our teaching and our practice, and in touch with those who can benefit us and whom we can aid.

Let us cast aside the narrowness of prejudice, envy, jealousy, and egotism that blinds our eyes to our own imperfections; walk with our higher aspirations in the path of right, and change at the cross-roads if we have been going wrong; walk uprightly and in a manly and womanly way with our comrades.

There can be absolutely no progression in this sphere of life without more or less friction. THE ETERNAL CALM HERE WOULD MEAN ETERNAL STAGNATION. Peace, Quietude and Constant Complacency are not the triplets that continually accompany any one who is traveling along the Road of Progress. Sunshine, at times a great blessing, and absolutely necessary in the process of the evolution of climate and seasons, would become a curse if made perpetual.

Embodied perfection does not exist in the human family.

Spirit influence CONTINUALLY EXERTED on any person in controlling the will and sensory organism, would be as ruinous to the individual as constant sunshine would be to the earth we inhabit. But those spirit influences which sooner or later, accompany every high, holy, truthful and beneficent aspiration, giving additional strength to the will, more healthy vibration to the sensory organism, enlarging the understanding and quickening the perception (just as the tiny seed receives the co-operation of soil, water and sunshine) may in the economy of nature become continuous, with most excellent effects. That is the kind of spirit influence that will come eventually to all WHO ARE WORTHY, and which should be cultivated by all, under whatever name you may choose.

As to The Great Psychological Crime, we have not the least apology to make for its existence, nor do we invite hostile forces to annihilate it—it must stand or fall on its merits.

As to the "hidden" author, we recognize that the most potent, the most beneficial and salutary forces of the universe are "hidden."

You have never seen electricity, yet what a wonder! You may see the lightning, but it is not electricity—it is simply a magnificent transformation, as in light and heat.

The ether of space is hidden from your view.

You cannot see the vibrations that transform themselves in the various colors of the spectrum. Nor can you see those undulations that transform the vibrations of the violin into the most exquisite music.

Every spirit control, however low and vicious, or however grand, beautiful and soul-exalting, is hidden from the ordinary gaze.

All evolutionary processes are hidden.

Certain forces of the universe are hidden from the mortal, the seer, the philosopher and the angel.

The controls of all inspirational speakers are absolutely hidden from mortal view. The wise spirit often refuses to give his name, because the name itself might add lustre to what he said, and that undeservingly.

Who ever saw the underlying cause that produces those beautiful scintillations in the heavens known as the aurora borealis? The blood circulates, the heart beats, and secretion and excretion goes on in the system, and nobody has been able to tell the author of such a wonderful mechanism, producing such magnificent results.

Under all the circumstances, why abuse the author of The Great Psychological Crime for keeping his name in the background, leaving his ideas to stand just as the tree stands, just as the rose-bush stands, just as the vine stands that clambers up the side of a house, just as the golden wheat stands, just as the lily stands—who can tell the original author thereof—why is his name concealed in the vast economy of creation? is an important question.

However, we have no apologies to offer for the book that comes forth with the author's name in the background; nor do we condemn it. Why should we condemn it while nearly all our leading thinkers say IT WILL DO GOOD, and then set to work like beavers to annihilate it with the HATCHET OF REASON? Why should we commend it when the views even of Spiritualists are conflicting in regard to its teachings?

It is our whole purpose to leave this book to the sole care and custody of the reader; he can CONDEMN IT in unmeasured terms, or he can APPROVE IT in the highest pitch of his voice, and we shall esteem him just the same. Some things we can systematically regulate, and some things we prefer to leave exclusively to the reader, especially a work on which there is such a vast variety of conflicting opinions as on The Great Psychological Crime.

DR. WARNE EXPLAINS.

Moses Hull With the Light Turned On.

Moses Hull is often entertaining, sometimes instructive and occasionally ver "amoosin'." He appears in the last named role in so far as his article in The Progressive Thinker of November 7 refers to the election of N. S. A. president and vice-president. He certainly did not wish to be taken too seriously therefor, for doing so would be to place his reliability upon convention happenings on a par with his gullibility as to Pacific coast conditions in our ranks. It did not need a printed confession to prove that he did not indulge in a great amount of exertion at the Washington convention. Had he permitted himself a little more effort he would not have sent his own imaginings to the public for facts.

It is worthy of note that he himself is not as innocent of political methods as he would like to be thought. He and Mrs. Stewart went to Washington with a club up their sleeve for any presidential candidate who would not pledge himself blindly to the demands of the Morris Pratt Institute. Indeed I was honored in my Chicago home with a visit from the second performer of that duet, who with quiet witchery of manner and words hinted that no one could have Wisconsin's vote without a promise in advance to stand by the school, and the remark was innocently dropped that they knew where Brother Kates stood.

The caller even reached Washington expressing doubt as to Dr. Warne's position and remained in that state until the day following the nomination of officers. And yet that gentleman had led a Chicago mass meeting in giving substantial aid to the institution by himself taking a life membership; had afterwards spoken for the school on the Milwaukee platform of the Wisconsin State Association; had urged over his own name in The Progressive Thinker that a broad view be taken of the possibilities of that undertaking. Like other well-seasoned politicians, Brother Hull is troubled with a defective memory. Oh, guileless Moses! You went to Washington determined to trade upon the Badger state's votes in the convention.

Brother Hull strives to enter Brother Warne as a "leader" in a "star chamber session of certain wire workers and manipulators," and charges that the latter deserted his constituents in the West. We are in a position to know somewhat of Dr. Warne's actions and methods. While engaged in conversation about non-political matters on the floor of the convention hall the evening preceding the nominations, a personal friend presented one of the petitions urging Brother Barrett to become a candidate, and asked Dr. Warne to sign it. Glancing over the thirty names it bore he found among them not only well-known Spiritualists, but some of his own friends and even that of his room-mate, Brother Grimshaw. He signed it then and there, for there was a rising determination to rebuke the antics of a professional campaign manager to hoodwink easy-going Spiritualists by appeals to prejudice into giving thoughtless proxies. Dr. Warne did not see any of the petitions from that moment until just as the session for nominations was called to order the next afternoon, when they were placed in his hands with a request that he nominate Mr. Barrett, his long-time friend and the friend of his friends. A lady delegate anticipated him however, and it only remained for the Doctor to second her nomination on behalf of the petitioners. At this most interesting moment Brother Hull was heard piping up a plaint, not about Barrett as a "reluctant" candidate, but because he himself had not been given a chance to climb into the band wagon by having his name enrolled upon the petitions before they were publicly read. The presidential question was happily settled by that movement. While there may have been some opposition to Brother Kates on the ground of personal egotism, yet more came from his willingness to accept the office even though it came through methods for which he publicly disclaimed responsibility and which were repugnant to Spiritualists inside and outside of the convention. His election meant a serious defection from the N. S. A. ranks. On the other hand, Dr. Warne was painted as a bitter enemy of all mediums, because he opposes willful trickery under the cloak of their sacred calling. Persons upon the floor had been furnished by Chicago tricksters with inaccurate newspaper reports of his remarks upon fraud at the last Chicago mass-meeting, for which they roundly denounced him in one breath, but with the next one substantially confirmed his main position by loudly boasting that the Illinois State Association had used some of the worst frauds at its public meetings. Kates and Warne were untried men in the position while Barrett had filled it with efficiency and devotion.

Dr. Warne's principal support came from the east. Neither Wisconsin nor any other western state offered him, or was asked by him for its votes. Even Illinois was not urged to throw her legitimate strength for him. Eastern Spiritualists conceded the presidency to the west and rallied about the Chicago candidate on the question of locality. Instead of paying attention to political matters, Dr. Warne's entire summer has been devoted to perplexities growing out of his assumption of the burdens of another who was called from mortal life before her plans could be completed for the happiness of her dear ones. He was true to the distant constituency which was loyal to him at Washington.

Have Spiritualists a right to expect their college president to pay such attention to the eternal fitness of things that he will rise above the methods of a petty politician? He could have learned in Washington that Brother Barrett's ante-election plans contemplated his complete severance from the office of president. Thus he could have avoided public aspersions upon the latter's intentions at a time when many feel in the light of subsequent events that his re-election was a fortunate direction by unseen intelligences. None who saw the mortal agony which seized upon our president as he staggered from the telephone booth with the terrible tidings of the death of the lamented Tuttle of the Banner of Light, are in a mood to welcome flippancy from even a Moses Hull, who was informed by special messenger after the midnight hour of the situation and notified that he must fill certain Ohio engagements of Brother Barrett. Brother Hull's reflections upon our president are ill-timed and grate upon the finer sensibilities of the better side of human nature.

FARMER RILEY'S SEANCES.

Eminent Men are often Spiritualists of the Genuine Type. Such is the one who steps to the front to describe the Materializations given through that Wonderful Medium, Farmer Riley. He selects The Progressive Thinker for that Important Purpose, realizing that he reaches a vast concourse of readers by so doing, more by far than he could in any other Spiritualist or Freethought Paper.

SEANCES WITH THE CELEBRATED FARMER RILEY.

One morning in the summe rof 1898, my friend, Judge P——, dropped into my office with the information that "Farmer Riley" would give a seance that afternoon on the West Side—would I like to attend? With the greatest of pleasure, I assured him. Well, I went. I had never seen the "Farmer." A few moment's conversation in the seance-room before the circle was formed was my first opportunity to begin a study of this remarkable medium. I found him a well preserved man, of medium heighth and build, about fifty years of age, with a finely-formed, full-sized and well developed head, gray-eyed and square-faced; a plain, unassuming, unostentatious, matter-of-fact character—the embodiment of gentleness, candor and good sense, with no trace of pride or insincerity about him. His dress and bearing that of a plain tiller of the soil; his appearance such that he would readily pass anywhere as a genuine member of that profession—no wonder he is known far and near as "Farmer Riley."

About twenty-five were in the circle. The seance-room, the back parlor on the first floor and the cabinet, a small bedroom off from the parlor. At the appointed time Riley, clad in his everyday clothes entered the cabinet. A few moments later a form stepped suddenly from the cabinet, bearing the music box, saying, "Here, take this," as it handed the box to one near, and retired to the cabinet. I had sat in many seances commencing with the Davenport Brothers in the early '60s, but no form like that had ever met my gaze. It was Riley—and it was not Riley. Not the physical body of anyone present. Then came a succession of forms, and among them that of the great war governor of Indiana, the late Oliver P. Morton. The majesty and dignity of this figure could not be mistaken. And then came the figure of a young man, a former member of the household where we were met, and who had, in fact, departed this life in the room used as a cabinet. The efforts of this figure to secure recognition by the surviving members of the family were touching, and unmistakable.

Well, the seance was over and the members dispersed. But the impression that the first form seen on this occasion, was that of Medium Riley, and yet was not Riley in the flesh, remained with me; it was abiding.

Time sped on. One dreary day in October following, I attended the funeral of my friend, Major D——, at Bishop Fallows' church on the West Side and took, as I supposed, my last look at his familiar face. Not long thereafter, moved by an irresistible impulse, I found myself at Marcellus, Michigan, and by the aid of a willing liveryman at the close of the day I was knocking at the humble door of "Farmer Riley." He was not at home. I had missed him at Marcellus. He came shortly, however, and with no sign of recognition on his part, and without explanation or introduction even, I received his cordial greeting as a stranger, and was assured that we would have a seance that evening. It was evident that he had no recollection of having seen me before.

Well, the hour came. Some strangers and some neighbors came also. The cabinet, a bed-room adjoining the parlor, the doorway closed with curtains, the parlor lighted by a lamp. The circle arranged as usual around the doorway of the cabinet and Riley retired to the cabinet, his good wife (now deceased) acting as manager. Among the first manifestations was that of a tall, fine-looking young gentleman who stepped out from the cabinet. Two elderly people advanced; they were from the far Northwest; they came with whitened locks and forms bent and bowed with age. The story of their grief was told in a single glance at the apparition. It was their lost son, a traveler "from that undiscovered country," who had returned to greet them as "Father—Mother." The inexpressible tenderness and pathos of the interview which followed could not be misunderstood. The scene was real, not a mockery, not a delusion evoked by the malignant magic of Riley's brain. There was no Podmore in that circle.

Presently there came another form, also that of a tall, fine-looking young man, beckoning to the writer for recognition. Who could it be? I could not tell. In a moment it was gone, and then came the impression, "Why, that is my old friend, Major D——, who died last month." Not as he was at the time of his death, but the spruce young man as he was when I first knew him twenty-five years ago when we officed together in the Times Building. A few moments later I was called to the cabinet, the curtains thrown aside, and there stood my old friend, Major D——, in full form and feature as he was the day he died. He greeted me with a smile, passed out the music box, and with a wave of his hand, the curtain closed. I had, however, had sufficient time to take in every detail of the face. There was nothing lacking. It was the living presentation of the face of my departed friend whom I had last seen in his coffin at Bishop Fallows' church. The identification, to my mind, was complete.

A succession of forms followed—all apparently recognized by some one present, until at last the power of the medium was declared exhausted and the seance at an end. After a night's rest and an old-fashioned farmer's breakfast in the morning, the writer bid good-bye to Farmer Riley and to his hospitable family, and soon was homeward bound on the Grand Trunk train for Chicago.

I must admit, however, that I was thoroughly mystified and filled with wonder by what I believed I had seen and heard. The sequel to this visit I shall endeavor to set forth in a future continuation hereof.

A REMARKABLE CASE IN THE SPIRITUAL OR OCCULT REALM

English Girl's Sad State—One of Them Writes Backward, Another Is Addicted to Toothache, Another Has Excellent Health, a Fourth Knows Only Baby Talk, While a Fifth Has Learned French—One a Deaf Mute.

London, Eng.—Thanks to a freak of nature, of which a hapless English girl is the victim, we get such a glimpse into the mysteries of the human mind as perhaps was never obtained before.

Every one of high-strung temperament has felt the power of moods, which seem to transform the character, making of an individual at, say, 10 o'clock in the evening quite a different person from that same individual at 10 o'clock the following morning. But through some strange lack of connecting links between moods, so to speak, a young woman now under medical observation in England has had thrust upon her the distinction of having twelve wholly different selves, most of them unacquainted with each other, and each having individual diseases, accomplishments, virtues and faults.

For obvious reasons the girl's name cannot be given, but the case is vouched for by Dr. Albert Wilson, a British specialist in mental diseases, whose written account of his observations will appear almost immediately in the British Journal of Mental Science, a publication of the highest standing.

The young woman comes from a well-to-do Birmingham family, whose other members are sound and healthy as any one. She also was normal, bright and intelligent until in 1895, when she was twelve years old, she had an attack of influenza, followed by six weeks of delirium fits, and partial paralysis—some kind of internal revolution so violent, in fact, that her very identity seemed to be torn asunder, for thereafter she was continually being ejected from one of her selves and thrust into another.

TALKED BABY TALK.

The first new self apparently was three years old. In this phase, the girl could talk only baby talk. She knew many words, but didn't know what most of them meant. Asked to find her nose, she might point to her ear, or asked to choose white from an assortment of colors, she would select black. This self soon learned to write, but the writing was done backward, beginning with the tail of the last letter of a word. In this state she was dimly conscious of her first self, whom she said she hated because everybody loved that other person, but nobody liked her, i. e., the present personality.

Suddenly she would change back into her normal self, in which form she would remember nothing of the second personality. Then she would, without warning, change back again, continuing the second life exactly where she had left off, and knowing nothing of what had passed in the interval. In the first stage she was very modest and well-behaved. In the second she was rowdy.

Self No. 3 turned up without warning in July, 1895, and announced herself as "Old Nick," a name that proved appropriate, for "Old Nick" had a nasty temper, although this personality had bot health than any of the others. After a short visit "Old Nick" disappeared for a year, and then came to stay for twelve weeks. In this stage the girl was taken to the seaside to a place with which she was perfectly familiar, but "Old Nick" proved a complete stranger there. Occasionally, however, a glimpse of some particularly familiar landmark would shake her out of the "Old Nick" state into some other personality.

"Old Nick's" remarkable health is indicated by the fact that once when the girl was ill in bed and in an imbecile state after a fall from her chair at dinner, she suddenly arose apparently in excellent health, asked why she was in bed, and wanted to go on with that dinner where she had left off. This took place in April, 1897, whereas the dinner had been begun in September of the year before.

A DEAF MUTE.

Self No. 4. was a deaf mute, who appeared four or five times and stayed only a few days at a time. In this stage the girl made her thoughts known by writing.

In another stage the girl insisted that she was only three days old, and in some ways acted accordingly. It appears, however, that she could write in the ordinary way, but if asked to spell verbally the word came out backward. Another self was a maniac, and was suffering from fear of snakes and tortured with a headache.

One of the most interesting personalities was "Pretty Dear," who was gentle, modest, and refined, and more intelligent than the others, although she had to learn all over again to read and write. She even learned French, although none of the other selves was ever able to understand French. Luckily this self has been uppermost of late, and has enabled the girl to earn her own livelihood at the Rainhill Asylum, near Liverpool, where she is now kept under observation, owing to the occasionally sudden visits of less desirable selves.

ADJUICA UNEZA.

One of the strangest of the personalities was one that named itself "Adjuica Uneza." This self stayed only a fortnight and was unable to walk, but proved to have a remarkable memory for the small events of her childhood up to the date of her influenza, knowing nothing of what happened since. Another self was only a few hours old, although she could read. Another self was blind, and yet manifested marked ability in drawing, and could copy pictures, guided only by the sense of touch, which seemed almost miraculous. Her eyes were normal, but repeated experiments of holding a book between her eyes and the drawing she was copying proved that she was following the lines of the picture to be copied by some miraculously delicate sense of touch and not by sight. When the picture was moved from her she could not proceed with the copy until she had groped after the original and placed her fingers on its lines. In this stage she usually understood nothing that was said to her. When she emerged from this stage she was short-sighted and unable to discern color more than four inches away, but in compensation her hearing became as mysteriously acute as her sense of touch had been in the previous stage.

PART OF HER BAD.

Two of her selves were terrifying. In one of them she named herself "The Dreadful Wicked Creature." She was violent, cruel, and degenerate, and on one occasion she was caught trying to throw her little sister into the fire. The other self, which developed when she was about seventeen, took the form of desperate affinity for the opposite sex, but this stage did not last long, and at last accounts "Pretty Dear" seemed to be getting the upper hand of the syndicate.

All these personalities came and went usually without warning, beginning where they left off before, however long ago that might have been. Sometimes the girl seemed conscious of the fact that she had more than one personality, but in other phases she seemed cut off physically as well as mentally from all that had gone before. In one of them she usually suffered greatly from toothache, which always vanished when her other self came on the stage. One of these periods of toothache became so severe that the tooth had to be pulled. Another self who came along soon after was mightily surprised to find that tooth gone.—Washington Post.

Tit for Tat."

It is a curious thing that the whole Christian (?) world stand back in perfect awe at the Turkish massacres of the Christians. Perhaps they have some recollection of the time when the Christians were slaughtering those who did not endorse their superstitions, torturing victims in the same brutal manner as are the Turks to-day, and perhaps the Turks have a similar recollection; at any rate the atrocities continue in the old-fashioned way and the other powers say naught to stay the hand of the "infidels" and "heathens."

Why doesn't God, the all-powerful ruler of worlds and infinite space raise his peaceful hand and stay the murderous hand of Turkey?

These are some of the important interrogatories that crowd themselves upon a skeptical, critical people at the present time.

When Spain was wielding the sword over Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines Uncle Sam shipped a few Jackies among them and called a halt in a very effective manner, and the wonder is that the humanitarian old chap doesn't do likewise in the matter of the Turks, and stay the murderous hands of these fiends incarnate.

LYMAN C. HOWE AND MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

Next week we will publish Mr. Howe's first communication in the debate with Mrs. Florence Huntley. Every Spiritualist should read the articles by these two truly gifted persons, on The Great Psychological Crime. The Progressive Thinker is opening a new field of thought to Spiritualists everywhere, and this debate will be specially interesting and instructive.

Bible Story Causes Crime.

That the story of Abraham and Isaac as told in the Bible was responsible for many of the murders committed by religious fanatics, was the contention recently made by Dr. Emil G. Hirsch at Temple Israel. Referring to the story of the attempted sacrifice of Isaac by Abraham, Dr. Hirsch said:

"More harm has been done by that tale than any other in the Bible. We read every few months of some man who, in a religious frenzy, has killed his children, saying that he did so in order that he might make a sacrifice to God. The story of Abraham and Isaac has been read by those religious fanatics and has led them to commit their fearful crimes."

Dr. Hirsch lectured on "Was Abraham Real?" and contended that no such person ever existed. Abraham, he declared, was the personification of a nation and the story of his life as told in the Bible is a story of the people of whom he was the type.

"We should realize that the Bible is a book of poetry and not a history," said Dr. Hirsch. "Its stories correspond to those that we find in the mythology of every nation from the ancient Greeks to the native inhabitants of North America. It is as a book of poetry that the Bible should be taught in the Sunday schools. The children should not be brought up to believe that every story in the Bible is true.

"Atheism has gained ground because of the manner in which the Bible stories are interpreted. When the children grow up they come to see that many of the tales cannot be literally true, and, not knowing that the Bible is a book of poetry and not history, are led astray by such men as the late Robert Ingersoll."

Dr. Hirsch compared the stories told in the Bible to those told in Shakspeare's plays.

"We know that such a person as Hamlet, prince of Denmark, never existed and yet the play that bears his name is not the less instructive. It narrates the story of a struggle which an entire people had with the idea that a son must seek vengeance for the death of a father.

"So, too, the Bible stories tell of the struggles of a people. The story of Abraham and Isaac is a poetical version of the struggle to do away with the custom of offering human sacrifices to the Deity which found its way into the creeds of nearly all the races. The other stories in the Bible and the biblical biographies are similar to the story of Abraham."

To an onlooker it does seem somewhat strange that an allwise Being, who knew beforehand the terrible results, should inspire any one to write a narrative that would in after time produce such murderous acts. But, as depicted in the Bible, the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David and the rest of them, including the orthodox believers of to-day, is a very peculiar personage.

Dr. Hirsch's views are interesting, and his line of interpretation is far preferable to the ordinary orthodox evangelical views on the Bible.

THE "BURNING BUSH."

Moses' Burning Bush Is Explained.

At Kew Gardens, which are botanical grounds located on the Thames river, London England, there grows a plant which exhales an inflammable gas from its flowers, which, when a lighted match is held near it, takes fire and burns brightly for a few seconds.

In its habitat, the deserts of Arabia, this plant grows vigorously, reaching a height of six feet, and its discovery is particularly interesting owing to the fact that its existence explains the "burning bush" phenomenon which the Bible states Moses witnessed. To Moses, therefore, really belongs the honor of its discovery, and if he had been a botanist we would now have an interesting as well as valuable account of its finding, instead of the highly-colored, superstition-tainted story which the Bible contains.

Scientists who have examined the peculiar plant have declared it quite probable that the burning rays of the sun might ignite the gas given off by the flowers, thus causing the bush to be literally aflame, the branches, owing to their sap, remaining uninjured by the flames. No doubt this occurred that memorable day when Moses happened to be passing one of these plants.

It has been truly said that an ignorant savage does one of two things when he sees or hears something which he does not quite understand or which appears extraordinary to him—he either runs away terrified, or he falls down and worships it. This would seem to apply to Moses, for, according to the Bible, he adopted the latter method of expressing the depth of his ignorance of things botanical—burning bushes, in particular.

Prof. B. F. Underwood, A Lay Funeral Sermon.

B. F. Underwood's Lay Funeral Sermon on Life, Death and the Future, delivered October 8, 1903, on the occasion of the funeral of John L. Moore, a descendant of Sir John Moore; a prominent Freethinker, a unique personality, and for many years one of the most picturesque figures and best known men in Quincy, Illinois.

We have assembled, here—relatives, neighbors, friends—to express the sympathy and sorrow we feel over the departure of John L. Moore, whose lifeless body is before us. Although death is as inevitable as fate, it is impossible for us from our finite and human point of view to think of it otherwise than as a loss; and, indeed, the death of every good man or woman is a loss to family, to the community, to the world, though in the higher sense this loss may be only temporary and relative rather than absolute. Death belongs to the natural order, and, therefore, is not in itself to be accounted an evil, unless, indeed, we regard Nature herself as evil, which is contrary to the convictions and feeling of the wisest and best of mankind.

LIFE AND DEATH NOT EVIL.

That life is not regarded as an evil, the welcome which we give to the newborn child, our love of life and our desire for its fullness and for its continuance, are sufficient proofs. But, if life as it exists here and now is good, and if life is possible only because death also exists, then, death, without which the joy of living were unknown, without which that childhood which "shows the man as morning shows the day" would be impossible, without which love's young dream and the delights of motherhood, the maturity of manhood and the serenity of old age could not be—then, I say, death should not be regarded as an evil to be deplored.

What we call death, which is as natural as birth and which is no more a mystery than is life, is more universal than is the daily rising and setting of the sun (for there are regions on the earth's surface where the sun remains visible during months together). But from death, which sooner or later claims us all, there is no possible escape. Death is co-extensive with life; it has prevailed in all ages and climes; wherever life has existed death has existed; no creature lives which shall not die; and death has all seasons for its own.

From birth the approach of death is as certain and as unceasing as the flow of time. As the taper, from the instant it is lighted, is being consumed, so with every heart throb from the moment that we are born we are going to our death. As the poet says: "Our birth is nothing but our death begun." Generation and growth imply decay and death, one process being impossible without the other, and both necessary to the continuation of the race. Neither can be absolutely evil unless both are.

Of the fact and of the certainty of death we are being constantly reminded. Our fellows drop away from around us, as if our immediate circle remains for a time intact, its members may, when once a breach in it is made, go more rapidly. And how irreparable seems the loss, how keen the sorrow when death takes from us those near and dear! Of the absent ones we are continually reminded, not only by their disappearance from their accustomed places, but by the indefinable feeling that something is wanting to our surroundings—a feeling which keeps alive the memory of the calamity which we have suffered.

As common as death is, we are so constituted that we do not think about it continually in relation to ourselves. It is so familiar to us under its ordinary aspects that we do not, until we meet it face to face, recognize its real character or even fully realize that we must soon be overtaken by it. Yet we know it is inevitable; and that which is inevitable should be accepted with philosophical resignation.

Before all of us stand veiled in impenetrable shadows the dark portals of exit from this brief existence, and through these portals we see our friends and comrades vanish one by one until we all follow them into the silent land, whither have gone countless millions since man appeared upon this globe. Meantime the human race, being perpetually renewed, knows no diminution and feels no loss in the death of any of its individual members, however illustrious and highly gifted with genius they may have been. Nature, the "inscrutable and mute," gives no sign of regret or of remembrance of the innumerable millions of human beings whom she has heretofore upborne and nurtured in the past; but as fresh and vigorous as ever, she is continually welcoming new-comers to her domain of mixed good and evil, joy and sorrow, to tread the routine of life, as if it were something novel and inexperienced before.

In view of the brevity and uncertainty of life from day to day, and of the mystery and certainty of death after a few short years, the energy, hopefulness and activity of the human race at the present time are something wonderful; and this energy and activity are constantly increasing. Why is this? Because we find this life itself good and desirable. Everyone who has made the most of earthly life, so that in living it he can say, "Vixi," "I have lived," has been a guest at the table of Life, where the seats, as well as the bill of fare, are limited, and has reason to be glad, even though he has to make place for others, as others made place for him. We all feel that it is better to have lived than not to have lived.

It is not surprising that man clings to life even amidst the greatest privations and misfortunes. It is, as I have said, good to live, to breathe the fresh air, to feel the warmth of the sunshine, to gaze on the beauties of Nature and, above all, to love and be loved, to commune with our friends, be they near and dear to us in the flesh or be they now found only in the printed page where their thoughts, by the inventive genius of man, are preserved as the common heritage of the race; for, as John Milton says, "A good book is the precious life blood of a master spirit embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life." Who can regret having had a seat at the banquet table of life, where coming guests, welcomed and full of joy, are constantly taking the places of those who leave?

Our brother, John L. Moore, has passed on into the invisible to make room for another guest. We no longer see him.

But because he has ceased to be part of the visible order, it does not follow that he has ceased to exist. It is a fact of science, not less than a philosophy, that the permanent is the invisible, the intangible, the uncognizable. Ultimate being is unrepresentable and unpicturable in thought and indescribable by any terms which apply to the relative world; but it is that ultimate power that lies behind, so to speak, of all objects of sense, that of which phenomena are but the appearances to the mind of man, that which is the basis of all activity, of the inorganic and organic world alike. There is a universe of which the physical universe is only such a symbolical representation as is possible to the finite and sense-imprisoned mind of man, with its organically imposed limitations. It is in ourselves that the universe is revealed, that the world of sense, with all its wealth of hue and sound and odor exists, with more senses than we possess or with senses more acute and capable of more comprehensive cognitions, glories in the natural world would doubtless be witnessed, which have never dawned upon the mind of any human being in the flesh. It would seem that our senses, instead of enabling us to know all things that exist, as some people superficially suppose, serve to restrict us from knowing all but a comparatively few things.

LIMITATIONS OF THE SENSES.

With increase of knowledge the mind comes to see that neither sensibility nor conceivability is the test of possibility, that there are objects beyond the range, beyond all possible extension of the senses, and that actualities exist which transcend all present knowledge, and of which the mind may be able to form no representative idea. It is by exercise of the "scientific imagination" that discoveries are made and the boundaries of the known extended. The man of science tests his imagination and inferences by verification. But lying beyond the proven is ever the great, unexplored region to which the mind has had no access; and, in regard to the possibilities and probabilities of that unknown region, men always have imagined, believed and hoped. And there is no reason to think that they will resist the inclination to do so in the future.

We have caught only a few glimpses of the universe and they are such only as sense limitations have permitted us to obtain. This view is altogether upon a priori grounds, in favor of a larger conception of life than that which is based upon the conception that life is the result of mere collocation of matter. The mind must have a deeper basis than that which is afforded by the fleeting phenomena of material combinations; and as sunset and night bring to view a multitude of stars, the blazing suns of other systems than our own, so the end of earthly life and the darkness of death may reveal glories quite as august which belong to another order and stage of being.

This life in itself gives no explanation of our being, unless indeed it be conceived as philosophies and religions teach, and as the millions believe, that death is a door to a larger life. The conviction of future life persists through centuries with a vigor, which no superstition can destroy, giving comfort and consolation to all who mourn for their loved ones removed by death.

Our brother, John L. Moore, did not dogmatize in regard to the details of the future life nor shall we in the presence of his mortal form. Certain it is that the best possible preparation for death is the faithful performance of the duties of this life. In this conviction our brother lived and passed from the scenes of earth to whatever realities lie beyond, and in this conviction his friends bid him farewell with the belief that the personality which has disappeared from earthly view, still continues under conditions higher than those known to us, and that a gladsome reunion with the departed awaits those who now sorrow in their bereavement.

Man's life on earth, even continued through his word and deed, is, in one sense, limited only by the duration of his race with whom he has a corporate existence. Man's words, said Tennyson,

"—like the stone-cut epitaph, remain
After the vanished voice, and speak to man."

The memory of a beautiful life is always fragrant. Such a life dispenses a gracious influence as sweet as the perfume of flowers, when the body through which it looked, spoke and acted is dust and ashes. This influence, which, to use a familiar illustration, like the rippling circle caused by a pebble thrown into a lake grows wider and wider till it reaches the shore where, even then, the movement does not cease, is a precious legacy which one of a good life, departing, leaves not only to family and to immediate friends, but also to the world. Such belong to

"—those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence."

To live in the minds and the hearts of those whom we love in the transmitted influence of our thoughts and deeds, to have a corporate immortality with and in our race, is all that some think that they have reason to expect; but, for most people, such an impersonal, post-mortem existence is not enough to satisfy "this pleasing hope, this fond desire, this longing after immortality." They aspire to individual survival and immortality, and expect when they leave there to pass out upon a shining sea of life beyond.

Neither our beliefs nor our doubts can change the nature of man or the constitution of the universe; neither can make us mortal or immortal. Our destiny is determined by the Power which brought us into conscious existence, not by our creed, not by our fancies, not by our denial, not by our hopes, not by our fears. The best that was possible has been; the best that can be, will be. Necessity, not chance, governs the world. If continued individual life is desirable we shall have it; if it is not, we should be glad to escape it.

SUPERSTITIOUS BELIEFS.

Unfortunately, the imagination of the superstitious has filled the unknown future with terrors, and these fancies of ignorance, of fear and of hate, formulated in articles of faith, and preached as solemn truths of religion, have frightened the multitude and made many slaves—slaves of superstition and of priestcraft, enemies of science and knowledge, of progress and reform, and often persecutors of the wise and the good, of the best and noblest men and women that the world has produced. These absurd and horrible beliefs, reacting upon ignorant and credulous devotees, have not only retarded the progress of truth, but have also hardened the hearts of men, made them unsympathetic with those in distress and indifferent to the condition of the wronged and oppressed. It was these dogmas which John Moore opposed.

As the mind becomes more enlightened and humane, conceptions of the future are divested of their horrors and the authority and sway of irrational dogmas decline. If we believe there are reasonable grounds for expectations of continued life beyond this state, we should rise above the errors of the past and have rational and humane ideas as to the life beyond. Then, only, can such a belief possibly be a source of comfort and encouragement amidst the trials of life or of consolation in the hour of death. When no longer shall be taught as a dogma a future life of joy for so-called believers and of eternal punishment for so-called unbelievers, men, doubtless, will cherish the hope and belief, as did our Brother Moore, that death leads to a higher life beyond this mundane sphere. The head and the heart both demand such a life.

SENTIMENT ON THE BATTLE FIELD.

One night in October, 1861, under a starlit sky on the Potomac, a group of soldiers belonging to the Fifteenth Massachusetts Volunteers was discussing this old problem—the immortality of the soul. An opinion expressed by one and concurred in by several was that with no hope of anything beyond death, a man is a fool to imperil his life in battle for his country or for a principle. Others, full of youthful enthusiasm and patriotic ardor, claimed that the nation needed the services of her sons and that every true American should feel that it is sweet and glorious to suffer, and if needs be, to die for his country, with no hope of reward beyond the consciousness of having faithfully done his duty.

A few days thereafter occurred the fierce and bloody battle of Ball's Bluff, in which some of those who took part in this conversation were slain. As I (who was wounded in this engagement, and the morning after the battle was captured by the Confederates) saw the dead lying on the field of carnage and heard the groans of the dying, an appalling spectacle, I recalled the discussion of a few nights before and I could not help thinking that if for the poor fellows who, in the flower of youth, when life was all bright before them, had fallen fighting for flag and country, which they were never to see again, there was nothing but annihilation, then, indeed, justice and right do not exist in the power that rules the world.

In this thought emotion was probably stronger than reason. Yet, after all these many years from the date of that tragic event—"all of which I saw and a part of which I was"—I am unable to reconcile with justice the death of those comrades who perished in the springtime of life, if there is no unseen world supplementary to this into which their death was a birth and in which they did and do perform parts in the great drama of being.

If the millions who, for principle, for country and for race have suffered imprisonment, torture and ignominious death, if they survive not beyond, there seems to be something lacking which is needed to satisfy the moral nature and the heart of man. We admire the self-sacrifice which gives up all and expects nothing when truth is to be advanced and humanity is to be benefited; but the thought that the most exalted moral goodness, the unselfish love, may perish with the effort it makes to help and save those who may not even appreciate the cost of the blessings which they, through the suffering and death of others, receive, is, to say the least, depressing.

IMMORTALITY A RATIONAL BELIEF.

It is more in consonance with our feelings and with our moral sentiments to believe that whatever is worth preserving persists in an unseen order, or in an unapprehended dimension of being, in which will be solved the problems of this life of lights and shadows, of joys and sorrows.

In justification of the hope may we not point to the progressive development of life on this earth which has been going on amidst struggle and suffering for so many ages? Has humanity appeared after this unimaginable duration, after these millions of years of preparation, as the final products of evolution, only to be extinguished forever? Is the development of the human race from savagery to civilization, is the ascent of man to the mountain peaks of intellectual and moral greatness, are all the conquests over wrong, all the victories of virtue achieved through sacrifice and undeviating devotion to principle, all the love and goodness which have brightened and bettered the world, and all the hopes and aspirations which have appealed to human hearts and sustained man in the midst of disaster and in the face of death—are these to be followed by the complete extinction of all light on this planet and by the return of the planet itself to fire-mist? Will there remain no enduring results of the mental and moral condition which it has taken so many ages to produce? Is not the fact that all which has been and all which will have been achievd on the earth must ultimately be blotted out, so far as it can be by physical dissolutions—is not this fact an indication that the results of this long process of evolution and ascension—intellect, character, virtue—will continue to exist unimpaired by death, even when our planet has run its course and has been resolved back to the worldstuff from which it was developed?

Many—most people, perhaps—have no difficulty in believing in immortality, which they assume to be true without much interest in arguments for or against the doctrine. Many feel an abiding conviction in its truth. During a walk and conversation which I had with the poet, Fitz-Greene Halleck, more than forty years ago at Guilford, Conn., he said: "There is no proof of such a life, and we need none," or words to this effect. His contention was, as Cicero says, "that there is, I know not how, in the minds of men a certain presage, as it were, of a future existence." Thomas Paine, commonly regarded as the arch heretic, declared that the "belief in a future state is a rational belief founded upon facts visible in the creation."

Faith in immortality will not atone for moral shortcomings. Indeed, belief in heaven for one's self may take a very selfish form, as belief in hell for one's opponents in religion, or for one's enemies in war, may be full of revenge. He who is continually concerned about the salvation of his soul may not have a valuable soul either to save or to lose. He whose thoughts, as his life closes here, are on the crown of glory which he expects to receive, may be less deserving of such a crown than is he whose last concern is for his country or his family. Charles Sumner's dying words, "Take care of my civil rights bill," were more noble than would have been any mere expression of confidence in the certainty of his "calling and election."

Of course, misinterpretations and perversions of belief in immortality, by which it is made a substitute for character, or an excuse for neglect for the practical concerns of life, should not be confounded with the belief itself, which we know is consistent with a life of practical usefulness and to the unselfish and the good, may give not only comfort and consolation in bereavement and sorrow, but hopefulness and encouragement in their labors to benefit and bless the world.

Mankind will never be without belief in immortality. Man's love of life, his moral ideals, the injustice and inequalities of social conditions, the wrongs unrighted and the virtues unrewarded here, together with the impossibility of disproving the reality of a future life, are, without other reasons perhaps, sufficient to insure general adherence to the belief when the special dogmas and traditions associated with it in the popular mind shall have been outgrown.

How much of what we regard as the spiritual part of man is of the essential and the permanent we may not be able to know, at least, while on "this bank and shoal of time." If in the night of death shall be opened to man's vision the realities of a world now hidden from sight, they who have expected nothing beyond this life we may imagine will be happily surprised and will rejoice with their exultant brothers whose beliefs and anticipations shall have been realized in the continuance of conscious life beyond the scenes of earth.

SORROW IS NATURAL.

Sorrow at death is natural, and not to feel grief when we part with those whom we love would not be human; yet, how unreasonable is immoderate grief on the occurrence of an event which we know must happen if not at the present moment, at a comparatively early date! Seneca observes: "No man has cause to complain for that which every man must suffer as well as himself. * * * It is but traveling the great road and to the place whither all must go at last."

They who mourn their dead should consider this fact and remember that to all comes the sad experience of bereavement. All through the ages, in all lands, hearts have felt as they feel today the loss and the agony of separation by death. The epitaphs written today do not show more mournful sorrow than those written by pagan Roman centuries ago. In all lands, Christian and pagan alike, devotees show the same grief. Neither religion nor philosophy can, in the moment of bereavement, wholly reconcile us to the loss of the presence and the companionship of those whom we love. "Philosophy," says Rochefoucauld, "triumphs easily over past and over future evils; but present evils triumph over philosophy."

Yet we may, if reason is not overpowered by emotion, when it comes our turn to mourn the loss of one whose life has been very close to ours, moderate our grief with the thought that our experience is only one of countless millions of similar ones and that soon time will assuage the intensity of our grief and add our personal loss and sorrow to the multitude of sad experiences which are forgotten by the world as the new generations, taking the place of the preceding ones, renew the novelty and the charm of life. Happily Nature provides that when our time comes to pass to the silent realm we shall not indulge in vain longings to remain. Why should we be more indulgent to our grief when it is another and not ourself who is called to pass on into the shadow?

Death closes our record here. It ends the follies as well as the dreams of youth; the anxieties as well as the ambitions of matured manhood; the weaknesses as well as the wisdom of age. In contemplating at his death the life of a just man we can say, "The past is secure." He whose faults we deplore we can think of as at rest free from evil tendencies and temptations, and in charity reflect that with the same organization and in the same circumstances our lives would have been no better.

But if, as many are confident and most people believe and fondly hope, death is a change which brings to man the flower and fruit of life, we ought, when the first flow of emotion is past, to rejoice that our friends have passed the portal which leads to the higher and larger sphere of being. If the dead have vanished from existence they have simply lost a few years of happiness and sorrow which they would have had with longer life, and the loss is one they know not of. But if death is the birth of the soul into a happier life, where the mourner will, in a short time, rejoin friends passed on before, he should not be inconsolable.

As there is no pleasure unalloyed, so there is no unhappiness, even that arising from the death of a friend, without its compensation. It is a trite saying that "Distance lends enchantment to the view;" and time is like distance in this respect. How different is the appearance of a mountain when seen as a whole from a distance and when viewed on the spot. Here every detail obtrudes itself on the notice and as it cannot be properly compared with other details so as to give an idea of their just proportion, the pleasure arising from the conception of beauty in one feature is marred by the sight of ugliness in another. At a distance the sense of disproportion, on which the idea of ugliness largely depends, is lost and every detail being reduced in the same ratio the whole blends into a prospect of beauty which has no feature which can give rise to the idea of incongruity.

It is much the same with human character and disposition. We do not meet with actual perfection in life. All have blemishes more or less pronounced which may hardly be noticed, however, by those who are familiar with them, as we may be accustomed by daily association to the rugged appearances which, to a stranger's eye, mar the face of Nature. But habit may also blind us to the perception of beauties which are constantly before our eyes, just as we are so accustomed to the sight of the heavenly hosts which glisten like gems on the robe of night, that we seldom take notice of them; so they who live amidst the beauties of earth may be regardless of scenes which arouse in those who see them for the first time and are able to appreciate their harmonies, the deepest emotion.

In like manner, though not to the same extent, we may become so accustomed to the goodness of those around us that we may almost lose sight of beauties of character which are most striking to comparative strangers.

The peculiarities and eccentricities which assume so much importance to superficial observers may fade into nothingness when the whole character is appreciated, when the whole life is contemplated and fairly estimated.

PURE RELIGION.

So it will be with John L. Moore even by those who were sometimes offended by his scathing criticism of what many people regard as religion—theological dogmas and creeds. Mr. Moore was no enemy of true religion. The Bible contains but one definition of religion—that in the Epistle of James, which says that "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the father is this, "To visit the fatherless and widows in affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Purity of life and a kind and helpful disposition toward our fellow beings, put into practical effect, is the religion taught by Jesus, and it is the religion of the best of men. This religion John L. Moore possessed in an eminent degree. He was generous to the poor and in the support of whatever he believed just and right. His intellect was keen, his wit was as sharp as a razor, his sensibilities were as tender as a woman's. He was widely read, a vigorous writer and a philosophical thinker.

Mr. Moore was of English descent, and the family coat-of-arms bears evidence that the family are direct descendants of Sir John Moore. He was born in New York City, Jan. 15, 1820; came West with his father in 1833, studied in Illinois College and in 1834 he came to this city, where he for many years had been one of the most unique personalities and one of the most picturesque figures, as well as one of the best known citizens of Quincy. He lived a brave and useful life and left behind the legacy of the influence of an honest man—the noblest work of God. The world is better for his having lived, and now that he has passed from earthly view, all who knew him will cherish his memory with grateful appreciation of his high character and useful life.

THE BATTLE FIELD.

Some Exceptionally Interesting Experiences, Illustrating Certain Grand Principles Connected with Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—The annexed original war sketch, which appears in the New Philadelphia (Ohio) Daily Times, comes so near to what in my humble judgment is Spiritualism, pure and truthful, that I offer no apology for asking you to give it space in your excellent paper, merely remarking, in common parlance, that the secular press will get "onto it" unwittingly in due season; that is, they will surely "reap if they faint not."

C. H. MATHEWS.

New Philadelphia, Ohio.

ON THE BRINK.

I have told of my experience on that battle field a hundred times, and never yet have found one listener but believed it was the creation of an overstrained brain. I, the only one fitted to pass judgment upon what I alone was cognizant of, have no opinion to offer. One thing I know—we, living in this age of rationalism, have banished all save the material. Fools! We see stars in the heavens countless millions of miles away because our eyes are adapted to see them. How easy for our Creator to have given us another lens with which to discern spirits near at hand! And may not a man's eye, under certain strained conditions, be so changed as to form a spiritual image?

From early morning till afternoon the Confederate General, Albert Sidney Johnston, had flung one battle wave after another upon the Union army under Grant. He had said at sunrise, "Before it sets we shall water our horses in the Tennessee." Before that setting he and thousands of his men had passed from their material bodies. The first day of the battle of Shiloh had passed, leaving no sound save an occasional boom, here and there a rifle shot, but above all the cries of the wounded.

I had fought in the "hornets' nest," and there I had been severely wounded, lying where I fell, among a heap of slain. It was early in April, and in Tennessee April is what June is in the northern states. I looked up and saw the leaves of a tree lazily fluttering in the breeze. I remembered it because of the peaceful contrast with the hell raking within me. Oh, that thirst! How it was driving me mad! Then for a time I lost consciousness.

When I came to myself it must have been after midnight. I think so because the wounded, at least those near me, had been removed, and there was no living thing near me. Doubtless I had been left for dead. Was I not in the first stage of death, yet not destined for the last stage? I had no feeling of pain. I lay thinking of the events of the past day. Suddenly I heard a bugle call. It was "the assembly." But instead of having the rasping ring of metal it was like a seraph's voice.

I started up. How light I was! Nothing was an effort. Looking around, I saw over each body its counterpart rising and hurrying away. I stood on my feet, and, looking down, there lay my own corpse. Turning, I saw men forming in the ranks of war. I called to an officer who passed me and asked him:

"What does this all mean?"

"They are coming!"

"Who?"

"The Confederate dead."

"What! Do the dead fight on?"

"Yes; we are simply what we left off being yesterday. We shall now develop differently, more rapidly and on a much broader scale. But for the present—come, we must join."

We hurried forward to where this singular army was forming, and, passing the flank, I stood for a moment looking down the line. In the faces of the men was all the war passion of living beings, but none of the fatigue, none of the suffering. The forms were like a night mist, and I noticed that they not only flickered with an unsteady motion, but the line seemed like a flag through which a breeze is passing, imparting undulations.

By this time there was a line of battle formed composed of regiments whose meager numbers were indicated by the nearness of the standards. I heard a cheer—it sounded like a distant whistling of wind—and a man rode by in a general's uniform.

"He was the ranking sacrifice yesterday," said a man at my elbow, "but he is no match for the Confederate general in chief."

Our leader waved his sword above his head, beckoning us to follow him. There was neither sound or firing nor tramp of men. Often since, when looking at the great panoramas of battle fields in which the action is vividly portrayed without the slightest sound, I have thought of this advance of dead men. Here and there we would come to a part of the field occupied by camps, but we passed through them as though they were of vapor. Then suddenly emerging from a wood we saw the Confederates advancing to meet us.

Their leader was a tall, magnificent looking man in the uniform of a Confederate general. When I first saw him he was riding back and forth before his troops encouraging them. They were a singular army, infantrymen, artillerymen, cavalrymen, standing shoulder to shoulder. The battle flags were torn and dingy.

THE LYCEUM.

Notes by the National Superintendent of Lyceum Work.

At Anderson, Ind., I met some very earnest workers, and though my stay was short I enjoyed the acquaintances formed and hold them in pleasant memory. They have a very beautiful temple, which I believe is kept open certain seasons of the year.

At Waldron, Ind., I found truly kindred spirits. Messrs Shoup and Heck, who own the largest fancy fish farm in the United States, very kindly secured the use of the Adventist church, and on my return trip, as the Adventists were using their building, the Baptist people very kindly and willingly gave us the use of their building, and on each occasion the choir furnished music; the reason of this liberality is the fact that the few Spiritualists there live their life of tolerance and purity. Mr. Heck's 11-year-old boy, Chester, holds his own among his schoolmates in telling them the beauties of Spiritualism.

At Columbus, Ohio, I was most pleasantly entertained by Mrs. S. E. Delong, who does a most excellent work as message medium both in private and public; we ministered to the earnest and devoted people of the West Side Society, where a most admirable work is being accomplished in both lyceum and society. Mrs. Delong's messages bore the stamp of reliability and sincerity.

At Conneaut, Ohio, I found many of the friends of several years ago, but behold, where then all was chaos and we met in the town hall, they now have a most comfortable and homelike hall, controlled entirely by the society; all the members are workers and the cause is prospering. Oh, for the time when each and all will unite on the cardinal principles and move on to the goal of right living, regardless of personalities.

Buffalo, N. Y., proved to be a haven of rest. Late trains prevented me from meeting the members of the lyceum, but I was royally entertained by the P. R. C. at their parlors, and next day visited Nature's marvel, Niagara Falls, in company with one of the dear lyceum boys.

Sunday, the 18th, I again ministered to the society in Conneaut, Ohio, being unable to keep my engagements in Philadelphia and Baltimore.

Monday night the reception preceding the eleventh annual convention of the N. S. A., in Washington—a very enjoyable evening. The next four days fleeted so rapidly that scarcely had we become acquainted when farewells must he said. Others will tell you about some of the notable events, but I shall proceed to ride my "hobby," the lyceum.

Forty minutes the last day, beinning at fifteen minutes to twelve, were devoted to the lyceum work; I hope you will not think me sarcastic as to the hour or amount of time, for I believe that more business was done then than in any other forty minutes of the convention. I read all of my report, made a speech—long enough, I think—Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle, Mr. Hudson Tuttle, and several others made speeches and Mrs. Pruden, of Minnesota, made the only speech that she made during the convention, because she felt the importance of the issue—attention to the little folks. One hundred dollars were appropriated for the work during the year and my expenses to and from the convention were allowed. I was informed that I had been reappointed Superintendent for the coming year—the appointment had taken place when I was in committee room. Miss Maggie Gaule donated five dollars to the cause of the little folks and several subscribed for the Progressive Lyceum and a spirit of good-will prevailed, although the dinner hour was half gone, so I think that it was a very important forty minutes of the convention.

RESIGNATION.

Among the changing scenes of life,
Amidst its pleasures, cares and strife;
There comes a feeling I have known,
That I've a little older grown.

The furrows 'pon my cheeks appear,
Their presence brings a falling tear;
For now I'm going down the hill,
I simply yield unto God's will.

He knoweth all! He knoweth best;
I am resigned to his behest;
Our coming, going, who can tell?
I know "He doeth all things well."

I'm here because he wills it so,
His purpose wise, ah, who may know?
His power we witness everywhere;
His bounty each and all may share.

I would not drift from him apart,
I need his presence in my heart;
'Tis His design in me revealed,
His loving presence not concealed.

A helpful presence all may know,
As thro' life's journey here below;
We wend our weary toilsome way,
He's with, to guide us, every day,

And give us strength from realms above,
If we His faithful children prove;
Oh, Lord, we of Thy strength would share,
Enfold us in Thy loving care.

May we behold ourselves within,
Protect, and guide us from all sin;
Reveal to us the heavenly light,
And we'll walk humbly in Thy sight.

And when on earth our work is done,
Convey us to our heavenly home,
Where all earth's weary ones find rest
"Among the mansions of the blest."

CURES DEAFNESS AND CATARRH

ONLY ONE REMEDY IS CERTAIN AND THAT IS "ACTINA."

Deafness is the direct result, in 95 out of every hundred cases, of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The effect of catarrh is to fill up and clog the air passages with deposits, these in a short time stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Deafness ensues, and the hearing cannot be restored until those deposits are removed. It is impossible to reach the inner ear by probing or spraying, and that is the reason why the greatest aurists and physicians find their skill baffled. But science has discovered a way to reach these heretofore inaccessible portions of the head. This discovery has been named "Actina." It is a vapor current which, passing through the Eustachian tubes attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal deposits, so that they pass away, and at the same time loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, so that they immediately respond to the slightest sound vibration. Ringing noises in the head are also caused by catarrh, and are the premonitory signs of deafness. "Actina" never fails to cure this distressing affliction; we have known cases of years' standing to be cured in three weeks. "Actina" is also a certain specific for asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are either directly or indirectly caused by catarrh. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, also sent Free. ..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Geo. H. Brooks is at liberty to fill engagements for November. Address him at once at 114 President street, Wheaton, Ill.

H. H. Jones writes: "The Progressive Thinker is a searcher after light; without fear or favor it speaks out all right."

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "Mrs. Mary T. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A., will lecture for the First Spiritualist Association for the month of November. Subject for the morning service, Spiritual Progress; evening subject, The Life of the Soul. At the first evening service, Payson Longley sang one of his beautiful songs, 'Open Those Pearly Gates of Light.' His songs in time will become as popular as Moody and Sankey's gospel songs. The Educational Society of Spiritualists, Mrs. Milan Edson will lecture for this society for the month of November. Mr. J. H. Altemus holds meetings every Sunday eveneing at Wonn's hall."

The Inter Ocean has the following from Lamont, S. D.: "Lured by the promise of a few dollars, Ole Rasmussen, a young farmer, offered himself as subject to a traveling hypnotist, who gave an exhibition here Wednesday, and consented to be hypnotized and buried. To-night Rasmussen still lies rigid in the coffin he voluntarily entered, while his friends are scouring the country in pursuit of the hypnotist, who fled in terror after trying vainly for more than an an hour to revive his subject. Yesterday the coffin containing Rasmussen was dug up from the grave in which it was buried, and the entire town flocked to the lecture-room to witness the revival of the young man. The lecturer's first attempt failed, and so did the second, and likewise the third. Then the hypnotist began to show signs of uneasiness, but most people in the audience thought nothing of the failures, supposing them to be a part of the performance. After repeated efforts with the same fruitless results, the lecturer became excited, lost his self-control, fainted, and fell to the platform in a swoon. Realizing the desperate situation, the audience was instantly in a state of greatest excitement. The lecturer was trampled under foot by the infuriated mob, which swarmed onto the platform, and would have been killed had it not been for the presence of a few cool-headed men who took charge of him, removed him to a farm-house near-by, and locked him in a bedroom, but in the midst of the uproar at the schoolhouse he regained consciousness, and, realizing the situation he was in, fled through a window. All efforts to arouse Rasmussen have failed."

G. H. Brooks writes: "I lecture in Marshalltown, Iowa, Nov. 8 and 15. My address while there will be 130 West Main street. The 22d and 29th I lecture at Ottumwa, Iowa. My address while there will be 625 West Fourth street. I would like to hold week-night meetings near Marshalltown and Ottumwa. Will respond to calls for funerals."

Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt has returned from a very pleasant month's engagement with the Spiritualist society at St. Joseph, Mo. He speaks highly of Dr. J. O. Stephens, president of the society, for his unremitting kindness, and his self-sacrifices for the cause; also of Mr. John M. White's platform test work, and of Mrs. Tiffina, trumpet medium, who gave a seance for the benefit of the society; says many kind words for the society people in general on account of their intelligent and refined courtesy, which made the visit enjoyable. The Doctor's home address is 533 West Madison street, Chicago.

Another religious society has been formally organized in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, to be known as the Progressive Spiritualist Society, which has received a formal charter from the state organization. V. Drahos is president of the society, and states that regular services will be held as soon as suitable quarters can be secured.

Dr. Beverly writes: "Over 250 people visited Lakeside Hall last Sunday to hear the best speakers than can be procured and receive free tests and messages from the finest psychics in the city. I will soon start a branch at South Chicago, where meetings will be held every Friday evening. Geo. H. Brooks, of Wheaton, a fine lecturer of national reputation, has promised to be with us soon."

The Psychic Research Society of Rockford, Ill., with other societies of Northern Illinois, will hold a mass-meeting at Rockford, Ill., Nov. 15. The meeting will be opened at two o'clock p. m., with a business meeting for forming a circuit of the different societies, followed by a conference meeting. At 7:30 lecture and tests. An effort is being made to secure first-class lecturers and test mediums. Also good music. The public is cordially invited. Mrs. H. H. Howe, president, 729 Mulberry street, Rockford, Ill.

Geo. Hamilton Brooks, 6600 Normal avenue, Chicago, corresponding secretary of the Englewood Spiritual Union, wants to hear from reliable resident platform test mediums, with terms and open dates.

Mrs. J. Lindsey is at present at Grand Rapids, Mich., where she can be addressed in care of the General Delivery. Mrs. Lindsey is a true worker in the cause of Spiritualism and exerts an excellent influence wherever she is.

Nellie S. Baade writes from New Orleans: "During October I lectured for the Independent Christian Church of Alliance, Ohio, where we held some interesting meetings. Mr. Dell Herrick, of Grand Rapids, Mich., officiates for this society during November. I arrived in New Orleans in time to commence my engagement for the Spiritual organization, Nov. 1. This society seems to have capable and efficient officers. A large audience greeted me, which is encouraging to any speaker. I love the sunny south, and as my health is so much better here than in the northern climate, I hope at some future time to make it my home. I have calls from different states in the south, and when my work is completed here I shall go elsewhere to disseminate our beautiful philosophy. At this time I wish to congratulate the Spiritualists of the United States on the re-election of Harrison D. Barrett for president of the N. S. A. Let us all send out best thoughts for his perfect restoration to health. Spiritualism has come to stay, and let us as Spiritualists combine our efforts. Support our spiritual literature; live spiritual lives; do all the good we can in this life; be true to ourselves, our fellow beings and our God, and then our efforts to establish truth as we understand it will prove successful. I have had more calls for engagements during the past months than I could fill in two years."

Maggie Waite writes: "The Metropolitan Spiritualist Society, on Sunday, November 1, had an audience that occupied every available space, and standing-room was at a premium to listen to the lecture by its pastor, Mrs. Maggie Waite, on Steps from Catholicism to Spiritualism, or the Story of Her Life, and held her audience for an hour. The messages were given by Chas. Peterson and shows a marked development in his mediumship, as every message was readily recognized. He was followed by Maggie Waite, who brought consoling messages from spirit life. The Progressive Thinker has a ready sale at the door each Sunday evening."

Scribe writes from Detroit, Mich.: "The Spiritual Workers, at their hall, 333 Michigan avenue, are pushing the fall and winter work under the most favorable influences. President Badger will address the society for the second time next Sunday evening. Mrs. Rose Ferris conducted the services most acceptably last Sunday, and Mrs. Jenkins, of Windsor, this Sunday, with excellent music by Miss Francis. Additional seats had to be provided. Although this society has just passed its second year, it has already put forth a sprout. There was a good-natured jar at the recent election of officers, that must have been taken as a jolt, for the retired ones have set out to hold meetings in another part of the city under the name of the Church of the Soul. Mr. and Mrs. Brockway have appeared at one of the finest halls in the city and held two Sunday evening meetings, to very large audiences. Mrs. Brockway gave tests that gave satisfaction all over the hall. They have fine consultation rooms at 29 East Columbia street. An immense audience greeted Rev. Arthur S. Vosburgh, at the Detroit Opera House, Sunday afternoon, on 'Christian Science.' Windsor, the vitosophyist, is here for a week. Dr. Mina Wise said to be the most conscientious hand-reader in the state, is permanently situated at her home on Miami avenue."

SPIRITUALISTS everywhere take notice of the Testimonial to W. J. Colville. C. G. and A. M. Oyston write from Seattle, Wash., as follows: "Twenty-five years ago, in Nov. 1878, W. J. Colville, the well known inspirational lecturer, author and poet, arrived in America from England, where he had, at a remarkably tender age, won high renown as a speaker of extraordinary ability. As a quarter of a century has now passed on and this indefatigable worker has, in this and many other lands, made hosts of friends who desire to show their appreciation of the good work accomplished through his instrumentality, it has been decided to celebrate this 25th anniversary by the presentation of a friendly offering composed of the free will donations of those only who esteem it a privilege to contribute. Though the first Sunday in November, 1903, is the exact anniversary of the commencement of W. J. Colville's ministrations in America, it has not been found practicable to make this project known early enough to enable all who desire to take part therein to contribute by that date, consequently after consulting with many who take keen interest in the event we have decided to make a presentation on Jan. 1, 1904. Knowing the widely representative character of The Progressive Thinker, and realizing the utter impossibility of reaching W. J. Colville's widely scattered friends by private circular, we venture to trespass on the editor's kindness far enough to request an insertion of this announcement. The smallest as well as the largest offering to this testimonial fund will be immediately acknowledged by us. Address us at No. 102 Queen Anne avenue, Seattle, Wash."

T. A. Thompson writes from Wichita, Kans.: "I arranged with Mrs. Maggie Vestal to come and spend this month and give trumpet seances, public and private, here. She began her manifestations last evening, and will continue each Sunday evening during this month. This is her fourth visit to this city, and the interest is greater now than before. She gives private sittings at which spirit friends come and converse in clear, strong voice familiarly with their anxious mortal friends. Today, our mutual friend, Chas. R. Miller came and said he wanted I should convey to you and Brother Moses Hull his cordial greetings; and was met at the threshold of spirit life by his daughter Carrie, who conducted him to her beautiful spirit home where he was happier

The Rev. William Chester, formerly the pastor of Immanuel Presbyterian church of Milwaukee, Wis., has written a book on "Immortality a Rational Faith," which will cause a deep seated pang in the hearts of those Christians who have a faculty of reading a work in fragments. There are passages in the work, and admissions, too, that will stagger the faithful who have been pinning their faith to the old-time philosophy of the pulpit, but taken as a whole the volume is a powerful argument in favor of the future life for man. As a clergyman in charge of the Milwaukee church, Mr. Chester was considered one of the most profound teachers of the truths of the gospel in the city. He resigned his position here against the wishes of his people, and, it may be said, the people of the city, to go to Europe and study deeper into the problems of religious life.

At Detroit, Mich., 58 W. Columbia street, on Thursday evening, at 8 p. m., Mr. Archie Morrow and Miss Grace Queenette were united in marriage. The bride was gowned in white silk, and carried white roses. The bridesmaid was Miss Florence Clayton; the best man, Mr. Harvey Demerest. The happy couple were in receipt of many valuable presents. Refreshments were served to about forty guests. Mrs. Marian Carpenter officiated.

Will C. Hodge writes from San Diego, Cal.: "B. Fay Mills has stirred up the dry bones of the old fossils in San Diego, but the preachers are fighting mighty shy of the 20th century religion. They hate to give up, but thank God they are going just the same."

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's subject for Nov. 15: Spiritual or Psychic Phenomena, Their Import, and Are They Natural or Supernatural?

Mrs. C. H. Stevens writes from Oxford, Mich.: "I am now past 95, and have taken The Progressive Thinker ever since it was published; must have it to cheer me on the remainder of the journey through life."

Wm. Fetzer, secretary, writes: "The First Church of Spiritualists of Pittsburg, Pa., having recently purchased a beautiful two-story brick church on Boquet street, held its dedicatory services, Sunday, Nov. 1, beginning at 10:45 a. m. Opening hymn by the congregation, 'Nearer, My God, to Thee.' Invocation by Mrs. C. L. Stevens, one of the oldest members of the society, she having made the opening address when the society first organized in this city in 1886, two years before our charter for church was granted by the court of Pennsylvania. Our president then followed with an address of welcome, congratulating the church on having attained the success made manifest by this large assembly to-day. His remarks included a brief history of the church, and the good works achieved since its organization. Next in order was a beautiful solo rendered by Mr. Harry F. Conners, a music teacher, accompanied by Mr. John Clouse, organist. Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., delivered the opening dedicatory address. His inspired and forceful words on 'What Spiritualism Means to the Awakening World' enthused his hearers and evoked the highest appreciation. In closing he made an earnest appeal for funds to clear the church from debt, and the responses were most gratifying. Rev. B. F. Austin followed with a short address. F. Corden White was introduced and spoke briefly when the morning services concluded with the new doxology. The afternoon services began at 3 p. m. with congregational music. The president, Mr. C. L. Stevens, opened the exercises with a few earnest, soul-inspiring remarks, followed by the christening of a sweet little six months old baby boy, Charles Robbins Fetzer, our worthy secretary's son, Rev. Austin and President Barrett officiating. Then followed a beautiful solo rendered by Mrs. Lina Hughes Butner. The services were continued in the form of a symposium, our ever-ready and faithful home worker, Richard F. Tischer and others making addresses. Then followed a pleasing solo with auto-harp accompaniment, by Prof. Bonnell. An address was then given by President Barrett, after which Mr. F. Corden White gave spirit messages. The evening services began at 7:45, with an invocation by Mrs. C. L. Stevens. The principal address of the evening was given by Dr. Austin, of Toronto, which was an eloquent continuation of the dedicatory address of the morning. Then followed a quartette by the organist, Mr. Evans and his musical friends. Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, of Chicago, was introduced, and gave a most inspiring address, and after more music, President Barrett made another appeal for funds, which was responded to with liberality, over $1,500 in cash and subscriptions being given during the day. Mr. F. Corden White then gave most inspiring and convincing messages from the spirit world. The meetings were most enjoyable, inspiring and spiritual, manifesting a unity of purpose and good will on the part of all concerned."

PRAYER.

"Behold there is no grief like this;
The barren blossom of thy prayer,
Thou shalt find out how sweet it is,
O fools and blind, what seek ye there,
High up in the air?

"Ye must have gods, the friends of men,
Merciful gods, compassionate;
And these shall answer you again,
Will ye beat always at the gate,
Ye fools of fate?

"Ye fools and blinds for this is sure,
That all ye shall not live, but die.
Lo, what thing have ye found endure?
Or what thing have you found on high Past the blind sky?"

—A. C. Swinburne.

EXCELLENT SUGGESTIONS.

How to Advance the Cause of Spiritualism.

We meet Spiritualists who are anxious to do something to advance the cause of Spiritualism, but seem to think the only way to help the cause along is to develop mediumship and go before the public. While that is a very good way, it is not the only way. There is need of others workers than mediums, and there are other ways to work besides preaching and giving tests. A most excellent way to help our cause along would be:

1. Make a thorough canvass of the community, taking the names and addresses of all Spiritualists and sending them to the secretary of your state association, if you have one; if you have none, send them to the secretary of the National Association, or to the missionaries.

2. After getting these addresses, if you have no society in your place, and there are seven good Spiritualists or more, send for the missionaries to come and hold meetings to awaken interest and organize a society.

3. If there are not enough Spiritualists to form a society, call the missionaries and let them help you to make more Spiritualists.

4. If conditions will not permit you to call the missionaries; get some good books on the subject, subscribe for the Spiritualist papers and start a reading class for the study of Spiritualism in its different phases, inviting your orthodox, agnostic and Spiritualist neighbors to join the class.

5. Start a lyceum. Yes, start a lyceum if you only have one child to begin with. You will soon get more. Write John W. Ring, Galveston, Texas, National Lyceum Superintendent, and he will advise you how to manage the work.

6. If you can do none of the things recommended above, do press work, write for the secular newspapers and other periodicals. You can also distribute leaflets furnished by the N. S. A. In this way you can preach to a large audience and not be overcome by stage fright. There are many ways to work and it seems clear that no one need remain idle if they are willing to work for our cause.

We are at present doing missionary work in Indiana. We want the hearty co-operation of every Spiritualist in the state. Indiana has a population of more than two and a half millions, and thousands of them are Spiritualists.

We wish to visit every society and every locality in the state where the services of missionaries are needed. We hope to encourage and strengthen the old societies, organize new ones, and assist in uniting the local societies in a fine state association.

The N. S. A. has sent us to do this work. We solicit correspondence from every part of the state.

THE GREATEST OF ALL FRAUDS.

Diss De Bar Spirit Painting to Be Sold to Mortals—Luther Marsh Gave a Fortune for Them, and They Were Seized by Police in 1888 and Kept at Headquarters.

Ann O. Delia Diss de Bar's spirit paintings are to be shown at last to the public. They were the most dearly sold, the most widely talked of, the least known paintings of the nineteenth century.

For them Luther R. Marsh, an old lawyer, well educated and refined in taste, a founder of the Union League Club and one of its vice-presidents, gave a fortune, the deed of his house, his reputation as an art collector. And everyone who heard of them thought of them as of spectres of paintings, ugly or foolish.

Inspector Byrnes' policemen, Mr. Marsh's son and one of Mr. Marsh's partners in the legal firm of Marsh, Wilson & Wallace, raided his house in June, 1888. They arrested Ann O'Delia Diss de Bar and her husband, who lived there, and seized the paintings. They were placed in cellars of police headquarters and kept there until a year ago.

The trial of the Diss De Bars is a celebrated case of New York's courts. The woman was convicted of fraud. The value of the paintings were not verified by experts. The paintings remained unknown. Mr. Marsh said that he had seen them come to the canvass under Diss De Bar's invocation of Rembrandt, Van Dyck, Guido Reni and others.

Some persons said that her husband was a good painter, and might have made copies of paintings, which she coated with chalk to be erased at her Spiritualistic shows. But David Valkenburgh, whose cafe at the Albemarle was fashionable, held in reserve a more plausible theory. He had known S. L. Loewenhertz, who died in a cellar at University place and Ninth street, miserably in 1886.

Lowenhertz had been an antiquarian, an art collector, and wealthy. But Ann O'Delia Diss De Bar came to him as the daughter of Lola Montez, whose charm caused Ludwig I. of Bavaria to abandon his throne, and Loewenhertz lost his wealth and his friends. Among Loewenhertz's papers the administrator of his estate, David Valkenburgh, found evidence that Ann O'Delia Diss De Bar had the paintings said to be by Rembrandt, Van Dyck, Guido Reni and others that were Loewenhertz's property.

Mr. Valenburgh had seen them in Loewenhertz's house and tried to regain them from the Diss De Bars vainly. At their seizure by the police in 1888 he tried to replevin them, but the Diss De Bars objected to that. A compromise with their lawyer, John D. Townsend, a year and a half ago, brought them into the possession of Alfred Pagelow, Mr. Valkenburgh's attorney.

Ann O'Delia Diss De Bar is in prison in England for fraud. The Diss De Bar that was known as her husband here has vanished. The heirs of Lowenhertz, if he have any, are not known. But he has left debts which may be settled by the sale of his paintings.

They are to be shown at the Fifth Avenue Art Galleries on Monday and to be sold there by auction by James P. Silo on Thursday and Friday evenings.

The above from the New York American only illustrates how easy it is to "draw the wool" over the eyes even of a prominent lawyer. All those paintings were produced by accomplices of Diss De Bar—they were fraudulent throughout. No one was ever connected with Spiritualism that brought such disgrace to it as this notorious woman. She did not seem to have a redeeming trait of character. Her crimes in England were of the worst character.

TO ALL CO-WORKERS.

A Letter From the Editor-at-Large.

For the words of appreciation expressed by the delegates at the national convention, of the work of the office for the past year, I wish to express my thankfulness. I also desire to thank those, who, by sending clippings and suggestions, furnished material and pointed the occasion for replies and secured publication by personal influence. I sincerely pray them to continue their assistance and that many others will join them.

To realize the fullest possibilities of this work, there must be co-operation of all those interested. In fact, its success depends on the watchfulness and zeal of correspondents even more than on the labor of the editor-at-large.

If Spiritualists would interview the editors of their local papers, they would often find that articles on Spiritualism would be accepted, if furnished. Thus it is possible to reach an audience that can be instructed in no other manner, and the prejudices and false conceptions of the public be corrected and the truth made known.

It is quite as important to present the positive side, as to repel attacks. Let us not stand on the defensive and apologize for our belief. We can make a campaign of education in this manner, the advantage of which cannot be overestimated.

The world is prejudiced against Spiritualism, because of misunderstanding from ignorance and misrepresentation. If it is presented in its purity, as a philosophy of life, here and hereafter; as a system of knowledge of all things beyond the border of matter; as a religion of devotion to the right and true, and self-consecration to the highest ideal, it will command respect of all the right-thinking.

All Spiritualists are missionaries elect to press forward this word of enlightenment. They can ascertain if their local newspapers will publish articles on the subject and the character of the matter desired. Then they can furnish this themselves, or request the editor-at-large to give it his attention.

The year before us is full of promise. We may not reap the harvest we are sowing, but we may rest assured that the seed will find lodgment, and cultured by angel hands, will furnish the very bread of life to coming generations.

TO THE MOON.

Oh, haunting specter of a long-dead joy,
Thou phantom of a dim and buried past,
Oh, fair lost sphere, what strange hand did destroy,
And draw the breath of life from out thy breast?

Or didst thou live the day mapped out for thee,
Eons ago ere this earth hurled in space
Did form itself? Thy day of mystery,
Whereof is writ in shade on thy pale face?

Did silver song of bird and rippling stream
Their melodies repeat? And did soft Love
Erect his wondrous castles built of dream,
There, tow'ring over all the mounts above?

Did sad hearts know love's voice only to break,
As here in this wide world. Ah, that 'tis true,
To break and perish all for love's sweet sake,
As drooping flow'r with ne'er a tear of dew?

Oh, phantom, turn thy pale sweet face away,
'Tis streaked with tears, sad tears of long ago,
Thy silent face that silvers night to day,
Beneath the mystic shimmer of its glow,

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
—OR—
DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

ASPHODEL BLOOMS
AND
Other Offerings.
BY
EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 235 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian, says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered, hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

AN IMPORTANT LESSON.

It is imparted by Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle, of Berlin Heights, Ohio. Her mind is overflowing with a deep and abiding love for the young, hence she feels a great interest in the Lyceum Movement, and is the author of an excellent work, The Lyceum Guide, which has proved exceedingly valuable. She has made her mark for good, in her efforts th properly educate the young. Her essay will be read with Interest.

THE LYCEUM.

A Paper by Emma Rood Tuttle, Read Before the Late N. S. A. Convention.

For a long time the children of Liberals had a rough time trying to keep in line with other ambitious boys and girls, sheltered by churches, Sunday-schools, and the broad wings of public opinion. Liberal men and women rejoiced in mental unchaining from belittling creeds; in controversy; in standing pat on their convictions, and growing exultantly strong, like human oaks in the forest of Humanity.

But the children—what of their children? They could not consistently send them to orthodox Sunday-schools to be taught the errors they were denouncing. If they did not go to church and Sunday-school, they were sneered at as queer, and unsafe, because their parents were Tom Paineites, or enemies of Jesus, or Spiritualists, who didn't believe in the devil, hell nor the Bible! Too bad were they to die—too dangerous to live.

So the children—the human flowers, growing beside the road where the grand car of Progress went thundering along, were covered with dust from its wheels and tramped on by the crowd running along the wayside, scrambling to climb into the car, shouting, "You little people, out of the way." There seemed to be no place for them.

They were social, ambitious, wisdom searchers; they must have opportunities for action. They must win the faith of their fellows. Their young souls must have a chance to climb up Mount Use, along the paths of truth, and Mercy, and justice to noble manhood and womanhood and to safe citizenship. How were they to do it? Not in solitude, and inactivity. I had a dear Cousin Cassius when I was a child; a precocious lad, blonde-haired, blue-eyed, who joined one of the lyceums of heaven before there was yet one on the earth. His parents left the church and embraced Spiritualism. So many hard things were said that Cassius would not continue with the Sunday-school, so he stepped out and stood alone. There was no place for him to go. He felt the mental solitude. There were many like him. So the Progressive Lyceum was evolved. The angels knew our need. They pitied the lonely children and gave us, through our renowned seer, Andrew Jackson Davis, a plan for Liberal Sunday-schools, which is so much more attractive, showy, broadening, elevating and spiritualizing than anything the world has ever had before, in the way of Sunday-schools, that the children at once felt they were needed in the front ranks with their flags, and that there were none better than they! The status of Sunday-school work had advanced, and the banner was in the hands of the children of Liberals. And this is the rallying yell which will ring down coming years:

LYCEUM! LYCEUM!
March, march ahead!
Never dead, File ahead!
COME! COME! COME!

Some years ago Mr. Tuttle and I were conductor and guardian of a lyceum in Milan, Ohio. We began with thirty scholars. In less than two years we had 400 members. That shows the attractiveness of the lyceum over the Sunday-school, for these children were drawn largely from the three churches in that place.

"Were there not many bloodless battles to fight with the pastors and church members?"

Oh, yes! They do not like to "get left"—no one does. But there was such a difference in the two methods that the children could not be held to the dead object of going to Sunday-school to learn how to die. They preferred the lyceum, where they teach children how to live!

A short time ago a beautiful little girl of eight years, who went to a Presbyterian Sunday-school, lost one of the most charming of mothers by death. Her little classmates told her Jesus had taken her mother away. When Sunday morning came she did not get ready for Sunday-school as usual.

Her father said, "Lovina, are you not going to Sunday-school?"

"No, sir," she answered firmly. "If Jesus has no better disposition than to take my mamma away from Junior and me, when we need her so much, I don't want to hear any more about him. I am through working for him. I'll stay home with mamma's picture!"

The lyceum is the best school for growth physically, intellectually, morally and spiritually, for both adults and children, that I know of. Its possibilities are limitless.

I have never believed in making it specially devoted to making Spiritualists and mediums. Its aim should be to make strong, self-reliant, justice-loving men and women, competent to act instead of waiting to be acted upon. It is better to produce lifters than leaners. And instead of encouraging a child to be influenced, and wait and see what it will be developed into—what it may be made into, it is best to encourage it to work patiently and make itself into just as much of a man or a woman as its size will permit.

Not that I disparage mediumship after the body is grown, and education obtained, and strength of character gained to enable the individual to run alone, to act with precision, and good judgment.

The most necessary lesson in life is to learn to make our own bodies servants for our own well cultivated spirits. This was the primary idea of Mr. Davis when he transmitted the plan of the schools, in the country of immortals, to the little people of earth, and to the adults as well. It is difficult to tell which derive most benefit from lyceum work, the children or the adults. They work so well together.

I said the lyceum teachings stand out in marvelous contrast with orthodox lessons. I take, to illustrate, a half-page from the Lyceum Guide, on a hackneyed topic:

No. 26—Duties.

What are duties?
The obligation to obey the laws of our being.
How may they be divided?
Into physical, intellectual, moral and spiritual.
Name the prominent physical duties.
We should obey the laws of physical health, eat pure and appropriate food, drink pure water, breathe fresh air, take exercise and rest.
What are intellectual duties?
To cultivate the reasoning and intuitive faculties.
What are moral duties?
To respect the rights of others and hold their welfare equal to our own.
What are spiritual duties?
They are the essence of all the preceding, held in relation to man's future existence—immortal life.
To whom do we owe our first duty?
To ourselves.
Why?
Because it is essential to our existence.
Must such duty be selfish?
No, for it is not selfish to care for ourselves, if we take from no one by so doing, and having cared for ourselves, gives us ability to care for others.
What is the next duty?
To care for those around us.
What is our duty to ourselves?
Self-reverence, control, culture.
What is our duty to others?
Justice, sympathy, charity, and love.
What is our duty as spiritual beings?
To love and cherish all things. The creative force of which is represented in the elements of our own spiritual nature.
What are these elements?
Truth, goodness, and beauty.
Where are they manifested?
In the mineral, vegetable, and animal world, and in their crowning excellence in humanity.

Discussed in orthodox fashion, before lyceums were known, Duty would be to go to church and Sunday-school, love God, and prepare to die.

One is broadening and leads on to perfect growth; the other is dwarfing and insufficient.

It was Pestalozzi's opinion that education of some sort should begin from the cradle. One of our modern philosophers antedates that, and says a child's education should begin one hundred years before it is born!

Powers, the sculptor, said what America needs is more education of the heart. Not a day goes by that we do do not realize that there are too many strong hearts in the world. Too many who have never been taught that the law of kindness is the law of happiness and that the Lord delighteth in mercy.

The kind citizen is the good citizen, the good husband, the good father, the good man. One cannot be changed from bad to good in an instant. Intelligent kindness is a matter of growth. So we must begin with the child. Realizing this, I added to the Lyceum Guide a Band of Mercy department to aid in spreading humane education among our lyceum children, and it has been made a part of our instructions. To add interest to this I made a plan, and got a prize medal for Humane Oratorical Contests. The National Grange commended it and urged that every Grange hold contests. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union adopted it and have held hundreds of entertainments. The American Humane Education Society have bought thousands of copies of the Book of Recitations. The Brethren Evangelists are now recommending and using it and our lyceum superintendent intends recommending it for lyceum entertainments. I wear the sterling silver prize medal, which I would be pleased to have you examine and see if your young lyceum orators would not like to win and wear it.

Cruelty is the school of crime. Let us see that we bar the gates to it by teaching love, mercy and justice to the children of to-day who will be the men and women of to-morrow.

The criminals of the future are now children and we are educating them. The men who might throw railroad trains off the track, burn buildings, rob, steal, murder are now in our schools, our Sunday-schools, where we may restrain their criminal tendencies and, by humane education develop the good in them and repress the evil thus preventing crime. That is the only sure way. The child is the only prime factor in solving many important problems. It is the base of the individual and individuals are the units which combined give us world conditions.

So child study is the great problem of the century.

Education should promote growth, physically, intellectually, morally, spiritually; steady growth from the kindergarten on through the university. Growth of heart which means sympathy, responsiveness, should not be left out. It is most important in all positions in life, and should have a place in the curriculum of all schools. It may be assured, secured if humane education is given due prominence.

The individual well equipped with a strong, normally-shaped body has the working basis for a useful life. A human body is not a cheap product. It is perfected at great cost, and is valuable in the home and to the nation.

Exercise is good, but the games which annul for the time, all moral responsibility and turn some lads into temporary lunatics are too costly. They cultivate in the wrong direction.

Intellectual education is the one thing never overlooked. Too often we see bright minds but weak bodies. We have straining as well as training; overcrowding and collapses. We want goodness as well as brightness. Our teachers should be versed in the art of producing it. Let us in the lyceum create a demand that it be furnished in our public schools.

Spencer says, "Strangely enough the most glaring defect in our program of education is entirely overlooked. * * * * To prepare the young for the duties of life is tacitly admitted by all to be the end which parents and schoolmasters should have in view. To fit for the duties of life, almost all young people expect to become husbands, wives, parents, and the highest and last place in the course of instruction should be given to the topic of fitting for the duties of life. They should qualify for the responsible position of parents and the heads of homes."

Those contingencies come to every nine out of ten and the neglect of all proper enlightenment on them is manifest in the numerous divorces and unjustly treated children.

The Progressive Lyceum covers the whole ground, but one day in seven can not do enough. It can, however, create a demand for breadth in our other schools. In the Lyceum Guide, which was really the parent of the English Manual and the Australian Lyceum Leader, I have introduced a department of "The Band of Mercy" because I believe that humane education is the most imperative demand as a protection against war, crime, and most of the evils which come from ignorance, and consequent hardness of heart. To promote it I have brought out a prize contest system which has been largely adopted, and is productive of great good. The prize medal you see is a decoration to be proud of, for its beauty and the cause it represents. A class of speakers is formed to contest for the prize. Music, dancing, songs are interspersed on the program, and a fine entertainment furnished, which, with management results well financially and helps along the education of those who are thoroughly cruel to their human and subhuman comrades in the complex relations of all sentient lives. I trust the lyceum workers will see its trend and realize that the law of kindness is the law of happiness, and the first qualification for a beautiful angelhood which we all hope to attain here and in the hereafter.

WISCONSIN.

Will J. Erwood's Notes on Various Matters of Interest.

To the Editor:—As most of us are a trifle inclined to pat ourselves on the back, and generously admit that other folks like to know what we are doing, I flattered myself that the good friends of Wisconsin, and perhaps of some of the other states, might wish to know "where I am at," and what I am doing. As usual I am trying to reach the uninitiated as well as the well informed, in the hope of bringing some conviction of the truths of Spiritualism home to them.

My first venture in the fall work was at Ontario, Wis., where we have a live society of Spiritualists. We always have a good attendance at this town, and the people are for the most part as congenial as one will find in a good many days' travel. I must say I always enjoy my visits to that place, whether the people of the town do or not. The society there is about to be a trifle crippled by the loss of several members, including their genial president, Mr. James Lower, but as in all battles and armies there are good men to fill the breach. Ontario is especially well fitted in this respect. While they will feel the loss of the president and their able secretary, as well as others who have gone, the Pacific Coast Spiritualists will be strengthened by their change of home, as that is the destination of those who have left.

One can readily appreciate the reception accorded the writer in Ontario, when the fact becomes known that he was placed directly under the care of the efficient marshal of Ontario. This I presume was a safeguard, but withal a very enjoyable one, as the marshal is also the vice-president of the above society.

LaCrosse has claimed a good deal of my attention so far this fall, as there has been much preliminary work to be done which could be accomplished there better than any place else. Our meetings in LaCrosse are being well attended, and every one who visits our new quarters has complimented us on the change. We were fortunate enough to secure what was once the Jewish temple, for our services, and have had the same redecorated and feel that we are moving ahead. The LaCrosse people are faithful in the work, and I as settled speaker there can only speak well of the way they have used me.

For nearly three years I have tramped back and forth on their platform and talked back at them, and their excellent patience is well attested by the manner in which they have endured me. We have some workers in the ranks who are striving to build up their society, and some day, I predict, they will meet with greater success than has been theirs for some time.

Among other interesting events in LaCrosse, we have but recently listened to the merry chime of wedding bells, and have seen the effect of Cupid's darts. Two of our finest young people have but recently been joined in the bonds of wedlock by yours truly. They were Mr. Walter Holmes, son of our able city comptroller, and treasurer of the LaCrosse society, and Miss Plasha Rozmarynowski. Their many friends wish them all kinds of joy.

Clear Lake, Iowa, though not in our state of Wisconsin, is one of the best places to visit, and has been the scene of my labors twice this fall. I have written of this place before, but a good thing will bear repeating, so I will say once more, they treat a fellow as well in Clear Lake as in any place I have even been. Their society is still offered by practically the same executive board, the president being Mrs. W. F. Howard, and the secretary, Mr. Ellis Vandenburg. Clear Lake Spiritualists have secured the Iowa Convention for January of 1904, and are working hard to make it a success. They should have the co-operation of all Spiritualists in that state.

While here I was entertained in the cozy home of Mr. and Mrs. Ned O'Neil, and was most royally entertained. The world has many good people, and some of them are named O'Neil.

There must be a good deal of the "Johnny Rabbit" in my constitution, as I am "long" on jumps. From Clear Lake I hurried home, filled three appointments, and then Sunday night sneaked out between two days and made direct for Osceola, Wis., at which point I am writing. The meetings here are being largely attended. Skepticism is rife, but withal the attention is good. No posse or vigilance committee has as yet put in its appearance. A goodly number of the people of this place are interested in our philosophy, but are, some of them, still in the "don't know" state. They will grow, however, and I have much hopes of Osceola.

My work will be principally in Wisconsin from this time hence. Among those places destined to be afflicted with my presence, are Almond, Oxford, Stevens Point and Portage. The last-named place is the home of our efficient president, Rev. Nellie K. Baker.

There are many points to visit, but I want to hear from all the good Spiritualists in Wisconsin. Personal memberships are of course solicited for the state.

I read with interest the reports of the convention, and note the team we have at its head. I feel the N. S. A. is well officered. Should like to have been there to make a noise for the west, but circumstances prevented, so I conclude everything that was done was for the best. The spiritual press is doing a great work. Reports from all parts of the country give evidence of the healthy state of Spiritualism. Sympo-

THE INFLUENCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL

OR

DEAD MAN'S REVENGE.

Nature, Fate or God—The Sense of Death—Ghosts Not Subjective Creations—Actual Appearance.

It was circuit time and in accordance with a custom which has always been scrupulously observed, the two judges were dining with two members of the bar.

As it happened, the conversation turned not on legal topics, but on the influence of the supernatural on the human mind in every-day life.

"Speaking for myself," said Mr. Justice Keswick, a dapper, self-complacent little man, with a very unmusical voice, "I believe none of us ever bestow a thought on the other world while we are engaged in our ordinary affairs."

"That has been my experience, too," said Mr. Bulstrode, a stout, pugnacious looking man, who had the reputation of bullying witnesses unmercifully. "I must confess I never bestowed a thought at ordinary times on anything but the solid world around me."

"With all respect, I must differ in opinion from two such eminent authorities," said Mr. Strood, a comparatively young man, with a broad unwrinkled brow, who was beginning to make his mark as a prisoner's advocate. "It seems to me that in spite of ourselves, and though we don't like to admit it, we are influenced by the supernatural in every action of our lives."

"That is a very sweeping assertion," said Mr. Justice Keswick, skeptically.

"There is truth in it, for all that," said Mr. Justice Bland, a fine-looking, middle-aged man, with clear-cut features, that reminded one of the face of Caesar on an old Roman coin. "If you feel ill or depressed, you begin to fear that you have not long to live, and you ask yourself, 'Where shall I go if I die to-night?' If you are unexpectedly successful in anything you have undertaken, you say to ourself: 'Luck was on my side,' meaning, of course, that Providence or some power outside yourself, assisted you. If you meet with a reverse, you are impressed with the notion that your evil genius had done you an ill turn. If you are going on a long journey, you hope you may not meet with an accident. What does that mean but that our destiny is in the hand of a higher power, whether you call it nature, fate or God?"

"You have given us a charming little metaphysical lecture, Bland," said Mr. Justice Keswick; "but pray, don't misunderstand me. I am not posing as a materialist—I hope I am a tolerably orthodox Christian—but I merely wished to say that we, at least most of us, are not affected in ordinary life by what George Eliot calls 'other worldliness.'"

"I am afraid," rejoined his brother judge, "you have never, my dear Keswick, analyzed your own mental condition sufficiently to be able to decide whether the supernatural has affected you or not. My contention is not that we ought to believe in ghosts, or that such a belief is rational. Indeed, the worst ghosts are those created by imagination, and I can easily understand what Coleridge meant when, on being asked whether he believed in ghosts, he said he had seen too many to believe in them."

"What, then, do you mean," said Mr. Justice Keswick, with a half sneer and in a harsher tone than usual.

"I mean," replied Mr. Justice Bland, with a certain quiet earnestness that could not fail to impress his listeners, "that we can't get rid of thoughts about the world beyond the grave. Putting the vexed question as to whether spirits are ever seen on earth aside, we must face the fact that we all have to die. Therefore, as some one says in Shakspeare's plays: 'The sense of death is most in apprehension.'"

"Yes," interposed Mr. Bulstrode, "the passage occurs in 'Measure for Measure.' It is in the prison scene, which Shakspeare, who knew everything—not only what had happened, but what was going to happen, gives us between Claudia and Isabella, where she says to her brother:

'Dar'st thou die?
The sense of death is most in apprehension,
And the poor beetle that we tread upon
In corporeal sufferance, finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies.'"

"I am afraid, my dear Bland, that does not assist you much," said Mr. Justice Keswick. "It merely refers to the physical pain attendant on death."

"If we are to settle the question by Shakspearean quotations," observed Mr. Strood, "we can find many passages showing that the great dramatist had a weakness for ghosts. We have the ghost of Hamlet's father, whose genuineness Hamlet is made to vouch for, if the hackneyed words: 'There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamed of in your philosophy, are to have any significance. Then there is Banquo's ghost in Macbeth, and in Julius Caesar we find Caesar's ghost appearing to Brutus, before the battle of Phillippi."

"Aye, and there are also the specters that terrified Richard III," broke in Mr. Bulstrode, impatiently, "but we must not assume that Shakspeare believed in ghosts. He may have intended to convey that these so-called ghosts were merely subjective creations, and not actual phenomena. In King Richard's case, the apparitions were evidently seen in a dream, as his subsequent interview with Radcliffe proves; and Brutus attributes the illusion to the weakness of his eyes."

"Let us deal with the matter practically," said Mr. Justice Bland. "I don't care a straw for mere theory, or for the fancies of any poet, no matter how great, when dealing with a subject like this. To show you that even strong-minded men are deeply impressed with the supernatural I will just tell you a little story, which has the merit, at least, of being true.

His three auditors sipped their wine and looked all attention. Mr. Justice Bland went on:

"The main fact in connection with the occurrence is known to all of you, of course, for it was published in all of the newspapers, and was a matter of common knowledge and regret in the profession. I am referring to the sad death of Judge Englefield some years ago. As you are aware, he committed suicide. I was with him for the last time before his death. I know more than any other person, except, perhaps, his tipstaff who acted as his secretary and valet, as to the circumstances under which he took his life. It was his misfortune to have to try a prisoner who was not unknown to him on a capital charge. The accused had been a bank manager in a provincial town and he had married a woman with whom poor Englefield had been madly in love when he was only a poor, struggling barrister. The bank manager, whose name—as some of you may recollect from reading the newspaper reports—was Mr. George Garvoyle, and was charged with having murdered his wife. They certainly lived a miserable life together. Garvoyle treated her badly, and in turn she proved rather reckless in her conduct—not that she was guilty of any actual impropriety—at least, nothing of the kind was proved against her. But the husband, who was addicted to drink and gambling, became furiously jealous and in their quarrels he often threatened to take her life. The evidence showed that he always kept a revolver in a drawer in the room where he slept, and it was with this weapon that Mrs. Garvoyle was shot. The evidene of the servants went to show that on the night of her death there had been a fearful scene between them. Altogether, the case was a very black one against the prisoner, though perhaps the chain of testimony was not logically complete. However, Englefield conceived a violent prejudice against the husband and believed thoroughly in his guilt, even before the trial came on. If he had been wise he would have asked me to try the case, but apparently he wished to have the satisfaction of sitting in judgment on the man he hated—and perhaps with good reason. You see, he had really been attached to this woman, for on her account he never got married, and avoided female society. Well, the trial came in due time. The prisoner pleaded 'not guilty.' He was ably defended, and after the case had occupied two days, he was convicted and sentenced to be hanged that day month in the jail of the city.

"I met Englefield after the close of the trial, and his mind seemed to be a perfect hell. He felt satisfied that the sentence passed on Garvoyle was a just one; but he looked on himself, now that the reaction had come, not as a judge but as an executioner. He told me that he had since the termination of the trial, dreamed of Mrs. Garvoyle, and that she had denounced him as the assassin of her husband. In his dream he tried to speak to her, to explain that he had only done his duty—he even sank upon his knees before her; but, with an inexorable look in her white face she vanished, leaving him in a state of utter despair.

"On his return to Chicago he tried to resume his ordinary habits. He visited his club, and passed some hours each day in either his own library or the club. But he could not feel the same. I often saw him during the month following that fatal trial, and was shocked at his appearance. He was himself more like a ghost than a man. He complained of sleeplessness, and went so far as to tell me that he had again seen Mrs. Garvoyle, and this time not in a dream, but as an actual apparition, and that she had cursed him in language too awful to be repeated. His conversation at this period was always on the one subject—the banker's trial and the approaching execution.

"On the evening immediately preceding the day fixed for the execution of Garvoyle, poor Englefield paid me a visit. His face was literally as pallid as that of a corpse. He wore a large traveling cloak, and was evidently going a journey.

"'Good-bye, Bland,' said he. 'We shall never meet again in this world.'

"'What do you mean?' I exclaimed. 'Are you not in good health? Why, you are a stronger man than myself!'

"'Nevertheless it is the last time you'll see me this side of eternity,' said Englefield, with a strange look in his eyes.

"'For God's sake, Englefield, don't do anything rash,' said I. 'That infernal murder trial has turned your head, I am afraid.'

"He laughed in a melancholy sort of way and appeared unwilling to discuss the subject further.

"'Well, old fellow,' he said, wringing my hand so that I winced, 'good-bye, again! I must go.'

"'Where are you going, Englefield?' I asked.

"'To the other world,' he replied, with a sickly attempt at a smile. 'No, not just immediately. I am going to—'

"I implored of him to stay in Chicago. In vain. He was as fixed as fate in his determination.

"Next morning Garvoyle was executed, and on the following night poor Englefield shot himself, in the very town where the execution had taken place. His tipstaff, a faithful fellow, who had accompanied him in his journey, and who had closely watched his movements, told me that before committing suicide, he had said he had seen Garvoyle with a rope around his neck, and that the culprit or his apparition solemnly declared that he was innocent of the murder, inasmuch as his wife had, after a deadly quarrel between them, got the revolver by stealth and shot herself. If the tipstaff is to be believed—and for my part, I think the man is no liar—his master's last words were, 'The dead man must have his revenge.'

"That's the whole story, and it ought to convince even the most skeptical that the supernatural has a deep influence on even the strongest minds in dealing with even the ordinary affairs of life."

"No, no," said Mr. Bulstrode, dogmatically, "it only proves that when a strong mind collapses, superstition takes hold of it, just as darkness creeps in when the sun has gone down."

"That explains the matter, in my opinion," assented Mr. Justice Keswick, "without resorting to any transcendental hypothesis."

"Have it your own way," said Mr. Justice Bland; "but, for my part, I believe there are many things in life that can never be explained."

The Influence of the Church in Politics.

In a recent sermon Rev. W. J. Cady, of Stamford, Conn., ended a vigorous sermon on local conditions by saying:

"I ask you to throng the primaries for the purpose of demanding the nomination of the cleanest, purest and best type of American manhood that can be found. If we fail to do this, then our nation will die."

Does not Rev. Cady and all other ministers who are making similar appeals to their congregations realize that they are made to a class of people, the great majority of whom have no right to go to the primaries or no power to influence the nomination or election of any candidate?

The church census shows that only one-fourth or one-fifth of the attendance is of masculine gender, the three-fourth have no influence in the election. How much more sensible it would be if these ministers would appeal to the women in their congregations to demand the ballot which would give them the right "to throng the primaries for the purpose of demanding the nomination of the cleanest, purest and best type of American manhood that can be found."

If the church ever hopes to influence elections it must secure the enfranchisement of women.

Increase Your Height

FROM TWO TO FIVE INCHES.

Our Free Book Tells You How--This Startling Discovery Will Revolutionize the Physical Condition of Man and Woman--Every Man, Woman and Child Who Is Short Should Write To-Day.

Success Absolutely Guaranteed, Distance No Barrier—No Matter How Short You Are or What Your Age, We Can Increase Your Height.

You Will Be Amazed at the Information Contained in Our Marvelous Book—A Postal Card Will Bring It.

IF YOU ARE SHORT YOU LOOK LIKE THIS WHEN WALKING WITH ANYONE OF THE AVERAGE HEIGHT

Of the many new discoveries none has attracted so much attention in the scientific world as that made by K. Leo Minges, of Rochester, N. Y. Mr. Minges is to short men and women what the great wizard, Edison, is to electricity. He has demonstrated beyond any question or doubt that he has gathered more information relative to bone, muscle and sinew than any one else in existence. Mr. Minges is very modest in his claims. He has the interest of the general public at heart, and every short man or woman may write him in the fullest confidence, and they may rest assured that the confidence placed in him will be kept so closely that his most intimate friends will know nothing of it. Making people grow tall has been a hobby with Mr. Minges for years, and the results he has accomplished are startling to a high degree.

Mr. Minges has been employed by the institution at a great expense, and he is at the service of our patients and students without charge. Our methods and appliances are fully protected by patents, and we will vigorously prosecute any infringement thereon. By this method every man or woman not over fifty years of age can be made to grow from two to five inches. This system is highly endorsed by the leading physicians of the land. Several prominent institutions of learning have adopted this system for the physical development of their students. Our free book tells the interesting story of how Mr. Minges made his remarkable discovery. Would you like to increase your height from two to five inches? If so, you should read this remarkable book. Failure is absolutely impossible. Let us send you the absolute proof of this statement. Remember, a postal card will bring it. You are not asked to spend a single cent with us in order to get this information. Write to-day and you will receive the free book and full information to-morrow. When you write, be sure to state your exact height and weight, as well as the date of your birth; also give full information relative to your physical condition and we will outline a method of treatment for you and tell you just what you may expect if you decide to place your case in our hands. We give you all this information absolutely free. If you desire it, we can send you the statements of hundreds who have grown from two to five inches in height by following our methods. The results are quickly accomplished. Some grow an inch the first week. We have many students and patients who have grown as much as three inches in two months. The results are accomplished without any inconvenience to you whatever. The treatment can be sent to any part of the world and you can take it without the knowledge of your most intimate friends. Our free book and letters will be sent in plain envelope, if you prefer it. The book also contains illustrations which will interest any one. Ten thousand of these remarkable books will be given away absolutely free, postage prepaid, as long as the present edition lasts. All we ask in return for this is that you allow some friend who you think would like to increase his height to read it. If you want a free copy, write to-day. "THE UNKNOWN"

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,

(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost; hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. Do not fail to send for a copy at once. J. R. FRANCIS,

A MOST IMPORTANT DISCUSSION.

Between the Veteran Worker, Lyman C. Howe, and Florence Huntley.

Please remember, LYMAN C. HOWE, of Fredonia, N. Y., one of the ablest lecturers on our rostrum to-day, a profound thinker, and in all respect amply qualified to maintain himself in any capacity he may be called upon to act, WILL HOLD A DISCUSSION in the columns of The Progressive Thinker, with MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY, a lady who ranks high in the literary circles of Chicago, and who is the editor of "The Great Psychological Crime," and the author of several other books, of great value to the world. She and Mr. Howe will enter into a discussion in regard to the merits of THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME, and the same will be published in The Progressive Thinker, affording a rich and valuable intellectual treat, never before offered to the readers of any Spiritualist paper. The discussion between Mr. Howe and Mrs. Huntley will follow right along after the Symposium.

Now is the time to send in your subscriptions for The Progressive Thinker. RENEW AT ONCE. Just think for a moment, this large paper furnished for two cents per week. Don't miss the valuable intellectual feast we have promised. You can not afford to stand in the rear destitute of the knowledge we give. You cannot afford to have "Rooms to Rent" in a vacant brain. Read over our Premium List and send in your subscription at once. Particularly should every medium in the land read the discussion between Mr. Howe and Mrs. Huntley.

siums in the N. S. A. convention and in the Spiritualist papers are causing an awakening which can but bring good results. By the time this reaches headquarters, and finds its way into press or wastepaper basket, as the case may be, I will have once more responded to the sound of Cupid's voice and two more of our liberal young people will be started up the hill of life in double harness, but more of that anon.

I have been much interested in the recent symposium, "The Great Psychological Crime," which called forth so many able letters from both sides of the house, and if I may be permitted to do so, I would like to say that mediumship is largely what we make of it ourselves. We have been blaming altogether too much upon our friends in the "Summerland" of life. If we will stand more firmly upon our own footing, and diffuse a little more reason in our dealings with those who have gone before, there will be less chance of crime in any way.

Abuse of mediumship is decidedly criminal, while on the other hand the proper use of it is beneficial. With this as with all things else we must learn the use thereof and apply it. It is all well enough for us to come out severely and denounce the authors of the different works contrary to our ideas, but it savors but little of Spiritualism. Who knows what experiences led up to the conclusions set forth in the book referred to? There are several ways to dispose of a question, among which are to ridicule it; to denounce it as a whole, or to investigate from every point of view. It is easy to judge which is right. Spiritualism teaches fairness in all things, but it discourages vituperation and condemnation without the best of cause, and even then it urges justice and charity.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; Price $1.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. For sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

SPIRIT OF THE TIMES.

The Conflict Between Greed and Humanity.

I desire to express a few thoughts on what I deem the paramount issue of the day for Spiritualists to grapple with. The common brotherhood of man is the most prominent question for the human family to solve. For years the Spiritualists have been talking brotherhood, but now the time is at hand to put it in practice. In an issue of the Appeal to Reason are given a number of instances where Socialist speakers have been arrested for proclaiming the truth on the public street. If there is anything that arouses my fire, it is to read of such persecution. This is a repetition of what the populists suffered from 1890 to 1896, and I was in the height of my glory when I could defend the people's cause against the attacks of some paid hireling of plutocracy.

Spiritualists who have any regard for truth and justice can not do otherwise than give a helping hand to the Socialist crusade that is now sweeping the entire civilized world. In the days of primitive christianity there were those who believed in spirit communon, but bitterly antagonized common brotherhood in the sense that the Christian martyrs (Spiritualist martyrs) taught it and practiced it. It was the antagonism to the divine right of kings, property and priesthood that caused thousands to be slain, and not the doctrine of spirit communion.

Instead of trying to minimize the lesson to be learned from the heroic struggles of the ancient Spiritualists, we should use their example to inspire the world to-day to do and to dare. If we had the Spirit of Truth to-day as they had, there would be no saloons, brothels and tenement houses that are a disgrace to civilization. Neither would there be any corporation that has it within its power to levy tribute, as well satisfy its avarice and greed. In all the religions of the world from Zoroaster, Buddha and Mohammed down to Jesus and the ancient mediums, there is not one that did not have as its inspiring tenet, opposition to the monopolization of the earth and the fullness thereof.

The church as never before (in modern times) is taking hold of the great social problem; but while some of the ministry are fearlessly attacking the corporate greed and rottenness that is undermining our government (as the postal and army scandals are revealing so glaringly that no one can help but see it), there is, however, a drifting together of the servants of monopoly that disgrace the pulpit. The time is not far distant when the Roman church and its offsprings (the various Protestant churches) that worship at the shrine of Mammon, will join hands and work together to maintain the divine right of property. All hail! the glorious victory of the German Socialists against the church and state.

While the Roman hierarchy stands for every form of oppression known today (either openly or by silent consent) yet the rank and file of the Roman church must not be classed as against reform as a whole, because there are thousands who are classed as loyal members of the church that are standing ready to throw off the shackles that bind them. Even some of their priesthood are deserting their ranks and nailing the Flag of Truth to the masthead. But while it is the duty of every liberty-loving citizen to do all in his or her power to bring about the amelioration of the proletariat and usher in the new heaven and new earth, yet it must be done with a feeling towards the benefactors of the present system that will prevent methods being used that will be a stain upon civilization. Let us show the powers that be, that their eternal happiness is more to them than the earthly pleasures enjoyed through wealth wrung from the hands of toil.

There is not a millionaire in the spirit world (that has become conscious of his continued life) that would not hail with joy the overthrow of this present era of commercialism. Yet it is true they do not want to see their former business go to financial ruin, because the love for earthly affiliations still remains and self-preservation is natural.

Once let the religious world realize that Jesus of Nazareth with thousands of his followers, were murdered because of their antagonism to the priesthood and the usury-mongers, and then the days of selfish commercialism are numbered.

I would say to the trade union advocate that noble as his ideal may be, yet the justice he seeks cannot be obtained through strikes and boycotts, but through the medium of the ballot alone, which is a heritage handed down to us by our forefathers. I firmly believe in being honest with your employer while working under the present system; but your employer has no right to dictate to you what way you should vote.

When the spirit world is planning the great inventions, they are not planning them for the benefit of the Morgans, Rockefellers or the Studebakers, but for the whole world.

Spiritualists above all other religious organizations should lead and not follow in this great work.

I also wish to mention one other question that is before my mind, and that is the tendency towards Christian Science. The Christian Scientists are making wonderful progress and teach some very good doctrines, but they are not defending the cause of the oppressed. But on the other hand tell the wage slave to "think" he gets what he earns, and he will find he has all he needs.

This is pleasing to the ears of those who revel in luxury and hence the scientists are attracting the millionaires of the world.

Last but not least let me say that while these changes are sure to come, they will come through those who will try to utilize the privileges at hand to make a living and intelligently and not viciously try to bring about a reformation. Standing on the street corners "cussin'" corporations, when you could be at work at something and earn a living for yourself and family is no credit to anyone, and brings into disrepute both yourself and the cause you represent. But to work at some honorable employment during the day and holding meetings in the evening, whether on the street corner or in a hall is both honorable and necessary.

The time will come when auditoriums holding thousands of people will be built, where public lecture will be given upon any subject that the people may desire to have discussed. It may seem to the reader as somewhat imaginary, but I firmly believe that the time will come when those who have been leaders in the earth life, will materialize and deliver public lectures and then the hypocrisy of the present will be a thing of the past.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

The funeral services of Anson Hewett were conducted by Rev. T. W. Woodrow on Oct. 21, at Arlington, Neb. For many years an avowed Spiritualist, he passed to the higher life at 73 years of age. Not an oath or vile word was ever heard to pass his lips; a man of marvelous patience, meeting life's trials without a murmur; a man of absolute honesty and character almost beyond compare.

T. W. W.

Mrs. Priscilla Pillsbury passed to the higher life, from Alliance, Ohio, hospital, October 25. She was left without relatives, as all had preceded her to spirit life, where a joyous welcome awaited her. Services conducted by REV. NELLIE S. BAADE.

Mr. M. C. White passed to spirit life, at Port Huron, Mich., October 5, after long years of suffering. He leaves a wife and one son, father and mother to mourn, who were comforted by the knowledge of Spiritualism, and that he can and will return to voice a message of love to them. Services were conducted by the writer.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,

Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crockee. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

Do Not Miss Our Winter Feasts of Intellectual and Spiritual Good Things!

HEAVEN AND HELL.

The following illustrates important facts. That the individual who met with this serious accident was brought in close touch with the Spirit-world, there can be no doubt. He saw the "infernals" of the dark spheres of Spirit Life as well as the beautiful scenes of the higher spheres, all more or less modified by the experience he had passed through.

He died, and yet he lives, a wonderful narrative as told by the New York Herald. The story is unparalleled in the history of electricity's accidents. About half-past three o'clock on the afternoon of August 11, Frederick Flad, of Jersey City, employed by the Westinghouse Electrical Company at the Kingsbridge power house, had half the voltage of the entire plant shot through his body—8,300 volts, of 265 amperes.

He was holding a joint of iron pipe conduit for containing electric wires at the time which a workman, Mallory, was measuring, when the plank on which Flad stood tipped. To save himself from falling on a nest of deadly wires below he threw up his arm to get his balance, touched other wires, and like a thunderbolt, twice the voltage required for electrocution in Sing Sing prison shot through the insulation and through his body.

Flad straightened out and as he stiffened like a corpse his head came near enough to still other wires above to form a complete circuit. Mallory saw a stream of blue flame eighteen inches long and six inches wide roaring out of Flad's head with the noise of a trolley car. He saw this flame melting the iron pipe above and the molten metal dropping white and hissing on the back of his head. How could the man be saved? To put hands on him to pull him away meant death.

WET CLOTHING A CONDUCTOR.

It was a sweltering August afternoon. Men and clothing steaming with perspiration were perfect conductors of the awful current, and there was no time to shout for help. But Mallory was an expert. He know what to do. Instantly, like a catapult, he hurled himself headlong against the paralyzed burning man, broke the circuit and they tumbled to the floor together. Mallory himself was badly shocked and burned in the contact, but he was saved.

This hero, Mallory, staggered to his feet and shouted for help. A dozen electricians leaped to his side, took in the situation and while Flad was still roasting and smoking seized his arms, and began the resuscitation movements used in cases of drowning. Six of the men "spelled" one another, keeping up this artificial breathing process—pumping air in and out his lungs by working his arms and chest. There was no sign of life—the heart had stopped beating—but they worked incesantly, never relaxing for a moment.

The thing to do in such cases is to excite the heart's action. A shock must be produced to start it beating again, just as one jogs a watch to set the balance wheel going when it stops. Injection of brandy into the veins is one way, but there was no hypodermic syringe at hand nor any brandy. Strong ammonia was used again and again, and still there was no response. The spark of life had evidently fled.

SCENE IN THE POWER HOUSE.

While the men were manipulating the arms desperately a young evangelist of the neighborhood, the Rev. G. Bert Carpenter, hurried in, fell on his knees in great emotion and began praying, and continued praying while the men pumped in the frenzy of desperation. Such a scene was never witnessed in a power house. The great engines, big enough to run an ocean steamer, were throbbing and thundering; the big dynamos roaring like a tornado and the brushes bathed in blue flame were sending their currents to all the lines between Harlem and Yonkers. Traffic could not stop for a dying man. But fully one-half of this Niagara of bolt lightning had passed through the human body over which strong men were working and a clergyman praying.

The Fordham Hospital ambulance, which had been telephoned for when Flad fell, was going at full speed, two miles away, the horse in a gallop tearing down the long hills above the river. It was a race for life. Never had such traveling been seen in that neighborhood. People rushed to the streets, and the news went up and down the avenue that a dreadful accident had happened at the power house. At last the ambulance appeared in sight, a little, bobbing vehicle, fully half a mile away, on the last long stretch of road that sweeps down to the Harlem.

The men working Flad's arms were fearing the poor man was beyond help when suddenly his frame heaved. Great knots of muscles twitched convulsively and Flad tried to leap into the air. It took five men to hold him to the floor. The contraction of his muscles and the terrible contortions which were now writhing him were enough to break every bone in his body. It was on the second gallery with hundreds of live wires, and the men were afraid that Flad would break from their grasp and tumble on the dynamos below. Finally he became quieter, his heart began to beat a little, very faintly; then froth bubbled on his lips, blood appeared and the heart began to beat strongly.

HOPE AT LAST WAS MANIFESTED.

"Thank God!" cried the preacher. Bless the Lord! The dead is coming to life." But Flad sank away until his heart barely fluttered. Fortunately the ambulance was at hand, the surgeon took charge of the case, putting the man into the vehicle, and away they dashed for the hospital.

The case seemed hopeless, but when they were half way up the hill Flad opened his eyes and in a faint, agonizing cry gasped, "Pray for me, Jack." Then to the ambulance surgeon: "Dear doctor, I will be good. Tell me what to do and I'll obey." Then the man fainted and did not come to himself again until three o'clock the next morning in the Fordham Hospital.

He seemed to wake out of a horrible nightmare. He stared wildly at the nurse and asked where he was. Then he fainted again. Yet he gained strength slowly, and finally was strong enough to talk intelligently and realize that a miracle had happened.

CLAIMS THAT THE ALMIGHTY SAVED.

The faithful young evangelist rejoiced greatly and assured the sufferer that the Almighty had saved him and that it was a warning to the unconverted. Flad, with a wild, far-away look in his eyes, said to the parson:

"YOU CAN'T TELL ME ANYTHING I DON'T KNOW ABOUT THE OTHER WORLD. I HAVE BEEN THERE. I HAVE BEEN IN HELL, AND COMING OUT OF HELL I'VE BEEN IN HEAVEN. NO MAN HAS SEEN WHAT I HAVE SEEN AND LIVED."

At this Flad went into another convulsion and it was many days before he would speak of the subject or explain what he meant.

A Sunday Herald reporter was present when he told the story in detail.

FOUND HIMSELF IN A HELL.

"I remember I was handling some conduit pipes for the wires that were being installed in the second gallery back of the switch boards in the power house. I knew that I was in a dangerous position, but thought I was all right until I stepped too far on one side and felt the plank slip on the sawhorses, which were four feet above the floor. As I was getting my balance I shouted to Mallory, 'Look out!' From that moment I remember nothing of what happened until I awoke in hell.

"There I found myself in a vast volcanic plain of rocks and hills with tremendous buildings of massive construction towering on every side. They loked like fortresses almost as big as mountains. But they were FULL OF FIRE AND FLAMES came out on all sides. Between the buildings and out in the open country everywhere, WERE RIVERS OF BLOOD, tumbling and dashing over cliffs and breaking in whirlpools around those dreadful buildings.

LEADING CHARACTERS OF HELL.

"I was naturally dazed for a moment, but coming to my senses found myself walking and slipping, partly through space and partly on the ground, going over stones and hills very slippery, for blood was everywhere. But this was not all. In every direction as far as I could see were millions of scaly green devils of all sizes.

"MOST OF THEM WERE DWARFS AND HUNCHBACKS, LITTLE AND BIG BROWNIE-LOOKING CREATURES, BUT ALL MONSTROUS AND HORRIBLE. EVERY FACE WAS WRINKLED. THERE WAS A MALIGNANT LEER, A SORT OF MANIAC LAUGH ON EVERY SIDE.

SATAN IN CHARGE OF HELL.

"One hideous shape, bigger than all others and as red as fire, with flames and smoke spouting from his mouth, was the satanic leader of the innumerable hosts. Though the devils were not formidable in size, they were terrifying and ghastly.

"They sickened my very eyes. They were in groups, clustered like bees and all tormenting human beings trying to escape. Beyond the millions of monstrosities near me were others, and long processions stretching away in serpentine lines to the very clouds, and above them were others rising in multitudinous masses, in tiers and amphitheatres and all were coming toward me. At every burning building they were tossing their victims, The structures, vast and appalling, were at white heat, with flames roaring from them like volcanoes. What seemed millions of devils, crowded together as thick as ants, in the air, on the ground, swarmed around the furnaces. I saw them dancing and gibbering as they caught their victims crawling from bloody pools, and hurled them like ninepins into the furnaces. Near me were groups of these tortured ones, with their tongues out, half blinded with blood, and as they were dragged to the furnaces they bit their arms in agony. All this I saw at a sweep of the eye, but it seemed of hours' duration.

PRAYED EARNESTLY FOR HELP.

"Finally the monsters made a rush for me. It was a nightmare race to get away. Many a time I was far in advance, when a cloud of devils swooped out of space and cut off my retreat, dancing and making horrible grimaces. I managed to escape, until at last a squad of fiends, more crooked and greener than the others caught me in their long slimy arms, on which the scales fairly rattled, and sticking their claws into me, dragged me to a big furnace, belching fire from roof and windows. They got me so near that I was scorched, my hair on fire and I thought the end had come. JUST AS THEY WERE TOSSING ME INTO THE FLAMES, I MUST HAVE PRAYED FOR HELP—AT ANY RATE HELP CAME. I SAW THE BLOODY LANDSCAPE AND THE GREEN MONSTERS FADING AS IN A DREAM, AS THE MOST BEAUTIFUL MUSIC EVER HEARD BY MAN CAME WAFTED TO MY EARS.

"To say that I was entranced does not half express it. At first it was like a murmur, a soft, whispering melody coming in waves through the air, in fact from every place, from the ground, from the clouds. It was like cathedral music, only a million times more beautiful. My joy was so great after my struggle with the fiends that I nearly collapsed.

"Then my wondering eyes saw palaces coming out of the very sky. They arose on every side, with domes and pinnacles soaring into the clouds. These palaces were of crystal, clear as glass and glittering like diamonds. Then I said to myself, 'I am in heaven.' I had heard much of the other world, but what I saw was beyond any man's power to describe.

"There were avenues as wide as a city. The pavements were of solid gold and dazzling to the eyes.

"Meanwhile the music was changing every minute in beauty and sweetness. Far up in the sky I saw palaces, and beyond them were palaces—the scene like a fairy picture—and yet I was there with my feet on gold pavements. Instead of walking I had but to wish to be in a place and I was there. I saw a group of temples at the end of a golden avenue wider than the others. I wished I could see it and instantly found myself under its crystal arches with the corridors resplendent with heavenly light. The music grew sweeter every moment. I examined everything minutely, but to my surprise did not see a living creature—neither angels nor human beings—though I searched through miles of temples and corridors. The scene was always changing, always more beautiful, and the music becoming grander.

"It was of neither brass nor strings, but like an invisible ocean of melody of entrancing sweetness, rising from a murmur to the loudest organ tones I ever heard. I knew that I was in paradise safe and happy, and wanted to remain forever. I had no wish to change my condition.

"While I stood in one of the great open courts with a forest of crystal domes and pinnacles rising in splendor on every side, and the music swelling like a thousand anthems, there came a sudden shock. I saw a young woman standing beside me, and then faces appeared and I asked her what it meant. 'Where am I?' I cried. 'Be quiet. You are in the Fordham Hospital, and will recover, we think.'"

BELIEVE HE WAS IN HELL.

Such was the narrative told by the man who died. For many days after this in the midst of conversation with friends he would faint or go into convulsions, but all the while the ghastly wounds in his head and arm where the electric flame had burned flesh and skull to a cinder slowly healed. An expert said after some figuring that the voltage which had shot through Flad's body was three times greater than the current required to run the elevated trains. The current that flamed from Flad's head would have run fifty cars on the suburban lines, or one hundred ordinary Broadway cars.

Flad and his associates believe that he was actually dead. It was twenty-eight minutes before his heart began to beat. They believe that she descended into hell and was enduring the torments of the damned, when God answered their prayers and translated him into heaven.

"No man can make me believe that I was not really in hell. I know I was there. I have had the experience to prove it. I also know that I was in heaven, and that I heard angel music and experienced the rapture of paradise."

It is not surprising after his fearful ordeal that the man should have periods of fainting and delirium. One day when telling his experiences to a visiting friend, a boilermaker, of athletic strength and giant frame, Flad suddenly gave a scream, leaped from bed and began swinging his long arms, shouting that he was going to smash things, and the boilermaker fled from the room.

Only Flad's young wife, a pretty girl of not more than eighteen, with an infant a year and a half old, can handle her husband, who is six feet one inch high and considered one of the best conditioned men of the Westinghouse works.

Flad told me electricity was still coming out of him, and friends declare that when standing on a wet pavement if they touch him they are shocked. After the accident every muscle stood out like cords and ropes all over his body. His back was a mass of knotted muscles, and for a week they had to swathe him in tight bandages to reduce them.

Mrs. Flad says no one could describe the horrors when her husband went into convulsions and delirium.

These are the men who worked Flad's arms to bring him to life: Jack Pryor, Ralph Wetter, Frank Craig, Arthur Holboork. Walter Bates, William Thompson and Edward Storer.

CAN'T PUT OUT OUR LIGHT.

If a deadly foe assail us with a cudgel all our own,
We should make him know that cudgels we have long ago outgrown,
That the weapons we are using are more potent in a fight,
And however bold or sneaking, he can not put out our light.

In the ancient times strong muscle was the height of manly pride,
And an agile form was something that the wisest ne'er decried,
But to-day it is diploma and deception that unite
To oppose our true religion; still, they can't put out our light.

We once stood the church's "devil," as they hurled him in our face,
And we pushed our truth among them with the easiest of grace,
And we still continue pushing with the same old will and might,
And defy all earthly powers to put out our beacon light.

They may hide within their trenches and in secret hurl their bombs,
Like the coward under cover when the heat of battle comes;
But no matter, we will fight them from the open, in plain sight,
For we know the truth will conquer and protect her beacon light.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

The morning of the eighteenth rose clear and bright. Martha went out into the clear, crisp air, and drawing her sled out upon the crust, lay down upon it. The breath of the longed-for spring was in the air. Already the robins had begun to sing. Where the paper birches gleamed silvery white in the morning sun mounds of bare earth sent forth a rich woodsy fragrance suggestive of moss and ferns. Over on the hillside where the stately maples had begun to thrill with the life of spring she could hear Uncle Ezra's cheery whistle and the jingle of tin buckets as he emptied the gathered sap into the steaming pan. She gazed into the clear blue of the sky above her. Only twenty-four hours, and it would roll away with a great noise, and the beautiful sunlight would turn to blackness, and flames would leap about her and her home, and her lambs and kittens would run about crying in terror until they burned before her eyes. Oh! it was dreadful! Martha laid her hot face upon the cold snow and groaned aloud. For hours she moved slowly over the patches of glistening crust pondering upon her probable fate. Of her parents and baby brother she had no doubt—the Lord would save them. After the crust had melted she went slowly to the house, but as she could not eat her dinner she went to the barn and slowly walked back and forth, still thinking deeply.

At last she stopped abruptly and standing frigidly upright looked up toward the sky and said: "Well, you will have to burn me if you want to; there is nothing I can do about it. I can stand it, I guess—I shall not be the only one."

"Peace, child, peace," said a firm, sweet voice beside her.

Martha started and looked about—she was alone. That mysterious voice again. A great calmness came over her and feeling strangely weak and quiet she went into the house.

The morning of the 19th day of ——— 18—, dawned; a day, according to Elder Drake, foretold by prophets of long ages past; a day which the Almighty God had revealed unto the Noahs and Lots of the last days as the time when the history of the world would be forever closed by a final conflagration "wherein the heavens would pass away with a great noise and the elements melt with fervent heat."

Martha was awakened by what seemed to her a terrific noise. Leaping out of bed she ran to the little window, and threw it wide open and leaning far out, gazed at the eastern sky. Great masses of clouds, crimson and gold, scarlet and purple, came flying up out of the east, for a very high wind was blowing. Martha looked toward the west, and saw the hills and forests lighted as if by the light of a great fire and there was her father coming toward the house upon a run! Yes, the Lord was surely coming!

At another time Martha would have known why her father was running, but this time terror deprived her of reason. With trembling hands she put on her dress and without stopping to fasten it she plunged down the narrow stairway into the living room. She was dimly conscious that her mother stood at the stove preparing breakfast, but without a word to her she snatched the sleeping infant from his pillows and rushed into an adjoining room where one small window looked eastward. Before this window she took her stand. A dazzling light streamed up the sky. Utterly oblivious of the fact that it was the hour of sunrise, Martha cried out, "He is coming! He is coming!"

Planting her feet firmly, she grasped the infant with a force that caused him to scream, and quivering with a power and energy she had never known before she cried out, "You shall not have him! You shall not take him without me—you shall not!"

It was not until long years afterward that the girl recognized the fact that she had then and there defied the great Jehovah, that her spirit had asserted itself superior to the mightiest power she had been taught to believe in.

Just as Martha hurled forth her defiance her mother came and seized her roughly by the shoulder: "What have you been and waked up that baby for?" she demanded fiercely. "What are you down here all undressed in that way for, I'd like to know?"

"He is not coming, after all," thought Martha, as she turned away from the window with a sigh of relief. "Mother has not believed he was coming to-day, either," she thought, "or she would have known why I was here and would not have scolded in this way."

At her mother's command she laid down the baby and went to her room to finish dressing, but the lesson had its effect, for never again did she put faith in Elder Drake and his prophecies.

It was early autumn. The asters and golden rod nodded to each other along the road sides and fences, and the maples waved their banners of crimson and gold. Mr. and Mrs. Weston, with Martha and little Charlie were seated at the dinner table. Through the open door came the shrill chirp of the cricket and the lazy drone of flies. All was peace within and without. Suddenly the family were startled by the sound of footsteps in the chamber overhead, followed by the sound of a chair rocking.

"Who is up stairs?" asked Mr. Weston in surprise.

"No one," replied Martha.

"Why, yes there is," he began, but was interrupted by his wife, who said peevishly: "There ain't anybody there unless it is the devil. It's been goin' on half the time to-day—if you don't believe, go and look yourself."

Mr. Weston rose and went hurriedly up stairs. Yes, the chair was rocking, but it was empty as was also the chamber. "It must be the cat jumped into the chair and set it a'goin'," he said, as he reappeared.

"The cat is asleep under the stove," wheel and who was the spinner?

Back up the stairs went Mr. Weston, folowed by Martha. There stood the old spinning wheel, once used by Mrs. Weston's mother and grandmother, but it was silent and motionless. Still the work of the unseen spinner went on. The whirr would rise and increase in volume until the thread was spun and then it would begin over again. Father and daughter gazed about in open-eyed wonder as the house fairly thrilled and quivered with the whirr and trundle, but not a breath of wind was stirring and not a creature was in sight excepting themselves. The air in the closed chamber was stifling and Mr. Weston soon went down and without a word went to his work, leaving his daughter to think and wonder. Some days after this occurrence Martha went timidly up to her father and said with evident anxiety: "Father, every day about ten o'clock I see a man go by that window. I can see him plainly, but when I get to the window he has gone, and if I run out doors there is never anyone in sight. He is there in the path one minute and the next he has vanished."

"Marthy Weston," said her mother, suddenly bouncing into the room, "do you stop that nonsense! I won't hear another word of it—it's just your silly imagination."

"Whose imagination was it that run the spinning wheel a while ago?" asked Mr. Weston.

"I wouldn't be a fool!" snapped his wife as she hurried out of the room.

Mr. Weston picked up his hat and looked thoughtfully after his wife. When her footsteps were no longer near he turned to his daughter and said slowly: "I don't know, Mardie, but I think your mother must be right about your imagination, only you probably saw a shadow of something. The Bible says the dead know not anything—if it warn't for that, I could explain some things that I can't now. There are angels, I suppose, but I guess folks don't see 'em as much now as they use ter."

Some days later Mr. Weston came into the house and shouted to his wife, "Sarah! I can tell you some news! Zeb Brown has brought home a wife and she is a Spiritualist!"

"How do you know she is a Spiritualist?" asked Mrs. Weston, as she entered the room.

"Because she told me so."

"I should think she was pretty bold about it," said Mrs. Weston decidedly.

"I hope you told her what you think about such works."

"I told her," said Mr. Weston, "that Spiritualism was all of the devil. I told her that it was one of the three frogs that the Revelator saw coming forth out of the mouth of the dragon working miracles to deceive. I told her that the Bible speaks of a class 'to whom God would send a strong delusion that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned,'"

"Well, what did she say?" asked Mrs. Weston, looking upon her husband with admiration and approval.

"She said," he answered, "that it was real kind of God to try and make people believe a lie, and then damn them besaid Martha. As she spoke a strange sound filled the house; it was the whirr and trundle of a gigantic spinning wheel. The three stood listening in dumb amazement. There could be no mistaking the sound, for it was too familiar for that, but where was the cause they did."

"Of all creation!" gasped Mrs. Weston; "the wicked creature! What kind of a lookin' woman is she, Silas?"

"Oh, she's quite good lookin' and real lady-like in her ways."

"I'll wurrunt it! What else did she say?"

"She said," continued Mr. Weston, "that the Bible proves Spiritualism." Why she said, 'I can just read it right out of the Bible anywhere,' and I told her she would have to read it out of the Bible, for she could not read it in it," and he went away, chuckling at his own wit.

"Well," said Mrs. Weston to her daughter, "I'm sorry any such woman has come into the neighborhood. I don't want anything to do with her, for I know I shan't like her."

"What is a Spiritualist, mother?" said Martha.

"Oh, they believe the dead are alive, and that they come back and rap and talk to folks sometimes."

What is there wicked about that?" asked Martha.

"Marthy Weston!" exclaimed her mother, "haven't you been told ever since you was a baby that the dead sleep in their graves until the Lord comes. Folks who don't believe that, believe the lie the devil told when he said they wouldn't die. Why, in old Bible times when women went to talking with dead folks—pretending to, I mean—they called 'em witches, and God ordered them to be killed."

"They won't kill them now, will they?" asked Martha in an anxious voice.

"No, I suppose not; the world is growing wickeder all the time. The devil has come down in great power knowing that his time is short."

"Who is the devil, mother?" asked Martha.

"What! Don't a great big girl like you know who the devil is? Well, that's a smart piece of business, I should think."

"Well, who is he?" persisted Martha.

"Oh, he was once a beautiful angel, but he got wicked and God drove him out of heaven."

"How came he to get wicked when he was in heaven with God?"

"I don't know; the Bible does not tell—come, run along now, I want to read awhile."

"But mother, who made the devil in the first place?"

"Why, God, of course."

"Did God know when he made him that he would get wicked and do all the dreadful things Elder Drake says he does?"

"Of course—God knows everything. Do run along and find Charlie."

"Then," said Martha, as she turned to go, "I think God is wickeder than the devil, or he would not have made him."

"Marthy Janet Weston!" screamed her mother with uplifted hand. You awful wicked girl! Don't you ever dare to say such a thing again or the Lord will burn you up; I know he will!"

Martha walked slowly out of the house, with burning cheeks and flashing eyes. "That's just the way," she thought. "God made me so I can think things and then because I do, he will burn me up. Let him!" she said, defiantly gazing upward to the tranquil heavens. "I don't see what I ever was born for. Nobody asked me if I wanted to be—that's just the meanness of things."

THE LATE PAPAL ELECTION

Some Very Interesting Inside History.

One of the ablest contributors to the columns of the American Citizen, an anti-Catholic weekly, of Boston, is Mr. Charles McArthur, of Brooklyn, a well-known Spiritualist. In the issue of Oct. 24 he has a whole page reviewing a sermon of Cardinal Gibbons on the "Late Papal Election," in which that prelate was one of the sixty-two electors. The cardinal assured his hearers "that the election of the pope was conducted with absolute freedom, with the utmost fairness and impartiality, and with a dignity and solemnity becoming the august assemblage of the Sacred College." Mr. McArthur meets this allegation as follows:

"We know that the conclave was not an harmonious gathering. Vannutelli, the camerlingo, who was to act as pope pending the election, chose some rooms in the vatican which he ordered fitted up for his use. Then Rampolla, secretary of state, ordered the servants to fill the room with chairs. Over a thousand were placed there, and in consequence there was a rupture between these two cardinals and they almost came to blows. So loud was the rumpus that the Swiss guards were ordered to clear the way, as it was feared the noise might disturb the dying pope. Then Vannutelli, in strict accordance with the duties of his office, which held him responsible for the safety of all the property, ordered seals to be placed on all the doors containing the private property of Leo, and the money of the church. When asked why he did so, he answered: 'The cardinals and their relatives, who have access to these apartments, have long fingers.' This appeared in the New York Herald, in a special dispatch, and most certainly the Herald is not an anti-Catholic paper. Most of its staff are papists.

"When the conclave met, every member had hopes. It was felt that a dark horse would win, and everyone hoped to be that dark horse, even Gibbons had hopes. There were four prominent candidates, Rampolla being in the lead. The cardinals were divided according to their nationalities, each having received instructions from his own government. The Italians supported Rampolla, and at one time it looked as if he might be elected.

"'Then,' says the dispatch, 'one of the Austrian cardinals stated in the conclave that if Rampolla were elected the Emperor of Austria would use his ancient privilege of vetoing the choice. Rampolla thereupon arose and protested against any lay power meddling with a pontifical election.' Germany favored Sarto; Austria joined; France followed. The cry was, 'Anybody to beat Rampolla.' Finding the case hopeless, the Italians deserted Rampolla, voted for Sarto, and thus elected him.

"This account came to the New York Sun direct from a cardinal. Other cardinals have verified it since then. It is no longer a secret, and the only thing that puzzles me is, why did Cardinal Gibbons find it necessary to give a distorted account and tell a wilful and deliberate lie, when the truth would have answered his purpose better and could not possibly have harmed any one?

"Yes, Cardinal Gibbons, standing at the altar and in the presence of God, gives an untruthful account of the conclave and prates about the 'new pontiff who has been happily chosen to preside over the church of God,' and then he winds up by saying: 'On leaving the Sistine chapel, at the conclusion of the conclave, and contemplating the overruling action of the Holy Ghost on these heterogeneous elements, I exclaimed, 'The finger of God is here.'"

"Is that a new name for Joseph of Austria? When the new Catholic History is written will Joseph of Austria and his veto appear as the Holy Ghost, or as 'the finger of God?' I opine not, if Rampolla should edit it."

I now quote another paragraph from Mr. McArthur's article:

"It is well known that the Associated Press is practically dominated by the Roman Catholic church. Anti-Catholic news items are excluded as far as possible, and whenever anything leaks out it is by accident, and the leak is stopped instanter. Nearly two years ago President Roosevelt gave a public reception, and a room was prepared for Cardinal Gibbons, in which he sat in state, and the crowd passed before him, kneeling and kissing his hand. A reporter of the New York World happened to be present and the item appeared in the afternoon edition of that paper. It was what reporters call a 'scoop,' as no other paper had the news. Being anxious to obtain some extra copies, I called the next morning at my newsdealer's and was told, 'All sold out.' I then called on several other dealers, with the same result. I knew this to be unusual, as every dealer always had more or less unsold copies, and I crossed the bridge to inquire at the office of publication. Same answer. I noticed a newsboy at the counter and asked him if he could get me twenty-five copies. 'What will you pay for them?' he asked. 'Five cents each,' was my answer. 'O g'wan with your five cents,' he retorted, 'I am offered twenty-five cents for every one I can get.' Now, who was buying up and paying twenty-five cents for a one-cent paper? I cite this to show the close scrutiny kept on the press, and that when any article appears such as the one I have quoted, it is bought up regardless of price."

Not long ago Mr. McArthur declared in a like contribution to the American Citizen, that such was the control of the American press by the Catholic power that less than fifty newspapers dared to open their columns for an anti-Catholic discussion, and not one daily newspaper in the lot.

What a startling and humiliating fact! The Catholic hierarchy commands all editors to print nothing derogatory to the holy Catholic church, and they obey! Only a few weekly or monthly papers dare to disobey and one of the boldest is The Progressive Thinker. WM. HENRY BURR.

PLATFORM OF MEN'S LEAGUE FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

It seems there is an organization in Great Britain known as the "Male Electors' League for Woman Suffrage." Their platform contains the following reasons for their existence:

1. Because women equally with men are subject to laws.

2. Because, being themselves one-half of humanity, women are concerned as deeply as men in the legislation that affects humanity.

3. Because, therefore, the opinion of women as expressed by their vote would be of the highest service to the whole commonwealth.

4. Because the denial of this equal legislative right to women is the refusal of justice to half the human race, and a detriment to the whole.

5. Because under a system of partially representative government the interests and the lives of the unrepresented always suffer.

6. Because experience has proved that men alone are as unfit to legislate for women as women alone would be unfit to legislate for men.

7. Because while "taxation without representation is tyranny," legislation without representation is yet greater tyranny.

8. Because by the legal recognition and establishment of women's citizenship the intellect and character and reciprocal estimation of both sexes would be raised.

9. Because the help of politically enfranchised women is indispensable for the upbuilding of the higher humanity that is to be.

10. Because—

"The woman's cause is man's; they rise or sink Together, dwarf'd or godlike, bond or free."

Spiritualist Pastor Says Spirits Do Not Need Windows or Doors, and They Can Outspeed Mortals and They Do Not Get Tired.

Spirits Hypnotized by Mortals.

Prof. W. F. Peck, of St. Louis, Mo., is one of the leading lecturers in the ranks of Spiritualism--logical and eloquent. His views will be read with interest, opening up a new phase of thought, that Spirits can be hypnotized by mortals.

1. Is it a fact that matter is a bar to the passage of spirits and must the windows or doors be left open to permit their ingress and egress?

2. Is it a fact that spirits can travel no faster than mortals?

3. Do they become tired or require a bed or pillow to rest upon when they visit their mortal friends?

BY REV. W. F. PECK,
Pastor Church of Spiritual Unity.

No one can read the remarkable story of Mr. Babcock's experiences with the spirit girl, Amelia Bauer, as detailed in a recent issue of the Sunday Post-Dispatch, without being impressed with the extremely realistic, not to say materialistic character of the relations between the spirit and its earthly friends.

The spirit is constantly in Mr. and Mrs. Babcock's company, goes to the theater with them, sits on Mr. Babcock's shoulder and enjoys the play. She accompanies him to the Exchange, evidently interested in the business transacted there. She assists Mrs. Babcock in selecting and making up her clothing. She becomes tired and rests upon the bed with a pillow for her head and presumably, a blanket for her body. She must have the doors and windows left open for her, or she cannot enter or leave the room.

She is liable to become offended and when angry calls harsh names. In short, she does everything that a mortal girl would do except to eat and drink. Why she should not require food and water as well as the other mortal necessities—amusements, sleep and rest—is not quite clear.

Many Spiritualists, whose experience and communications from the invisible world have led to diametrically opposite conclusions from some of the statements think that Mr. Babcock is either self-deluded or that he is being made the victim of some mischievous spirit amusing herself at his expense.

I am of the opinion, however, that it is not necessary to resort to either alternative to explain the rather singular state of affairs existing in the Babcock household. Therefore, while I differ widely from the views and conclusions expressed in the statement I do so without impugning the honesty of either Mr. Babcock or the spirit girl.

Among the questions which this singular story suggests are these:

First—Is it a fact that matter is a bar to the passage of spirits and must the windows and doors be left open to permit their ingress and egress?

Second—Is it a fact that spirits can travel no faster than mortals?

Third—Do they become tired and require a bed or pillow to rest upon when they visit their mortal friends?

To answer the above questions in the negative and yet admit the more or less genuineness of Mr. Babcock's experiences involves a great psychological fact. All students of Spiritualism recognize that mortals may be hypnotized or psychologized by disembodied spirits and become what is known as prophets, seers, mediums, psychics, etc., but it is not so commonly known that mortals may also psychologize disembodied spirits almost as readily and bring them under their mental, moral and physical control. Yet there is much evidence to substantiate the fact.

The subject of the hypnotist is, for the time being, merely the reflex of the controlling mind. He sees with the eyes of the operator, hears with his ears, thinks with his brain, knows only what he knows and believes only what he believes.

Many instances could be cited to show that spirits, disembodied, have been so completely hypnotized by the earth conditions and the minds of mortals that they realize only in a vague way that they are no longer dwellers in the body and so live largely the life of earth, subject to its limitations and participating in its amusements and interests generally.

Admitting the facts as true, it is evident that the spirit of Amelia Bauer is a case in point. Mr. Babcock says: "Now she never leaves us night nor day." Father, mother, in spirit life, have no attraction for her. The transcendent scenes and the limitless fields of the spiritual spheres have no power to draw her away from the companionship of her chance earth friends and the pleasures of the theater. Could a more complete illustration of an earth-bound spirit be found than in this case? And is it at all surprising that one so situated and environed should demand that the doors and windows be opened before she ventures to attempt to enter or leave the room?

Is it not clear that she is either ignorant of the laws governing the relations of spirit and matter, or else, psychologized by her earthly environments she has never attempted to enter or leave a room except through an opening provided for that purpose.

But whatever the facts may be in the case of this particular spirit, and however we may try to account for the singular statements made by her to her earthly friends, the truth is that to spirits who know the law and who are not earth-bound, matter is absolutely no impediment to their movements. To a spirit, a wall of granite or of steel is no more an obstacle than a morning mist would be to the movement of the physical body.

The popular opinion regarding the solidity of material forms is a very exaggerated one, but the latest thought of science is greatly modifying our concepts of the nature and quality of matter. If the ultimate atom is merely a vortex ring in the imponderable, invisible and intangible ether, and if, as someone well expressed it, "all material forms, even the granite rocks, are m ely concentrated masses of those atoms braced up and held together by an invisible and intangible force, the withdrawal or suspension of which would dissolve the substance into cosmic dust in the twinkling of an eye," then we can begin to realize that the so-called solidity and impenetrability of matter is largely imaginary; far more apparent than real.

There is no such thing as absolutely solid matter. Solidity is relative, comparative. Substances which would be impervious to sand or soil would permit water to percolate freely. Receptacles which would hold water would be pervious to air. Vessels which are air tight may permit the passage of light, while ordinary substances which are opaque to ordinary light permit free passage of the X-rays. And the ether, so far as we can discover, passes freely and without friction through every known form of matter.

A moment's consideration of these facts should convince any rational mind that the assertion that spirits cannot pass through material substances is, to say the least, an extremely reckless one without a single fact in nature to substantiate it. Nay, that every known fact regarding the nature and quality of matter tends to prove the contrary. Such an assertion could only be based on a very shallow and superficial knowledge, not only of spiritual, but of physical science as well.

Wonderful as are the marvels of the seance room, they are simplicity itself compared with some of the alleged facts of science. Take, for instance, the most modern scientific statement regarding the ether and its properties. Not one of the physical senses can take cognizance of it. It is beyond the reach of the chemist, nothing is known of its constituent elements if it has any. Yet its existence is as well established as is the existence of electricity, and physicists boldly proclaim its properties.

Sir William Thompson, Prof. Stanley Jevons and other able scientists, tell us that invisible, intangible, imperceptible though it be to all the physical senses, yet it is infinitely more solid than granite, and, marvel of marvels, the planets perform their journeys and men live and move without apparent friction through this medium, which Prof. Jevons says, is "infinitely harder and more elastic than adamant."

The statement that spirits can only move about as fast as mortals is also an absurdity. The spirit, freed from the mortal clay, is also freed from the dominating force of gravity, which holds the physical body so firmly to the surface of earth. Relieved of this overpowering attraction spirits move by the power and with the swiftness of thought.

Disembodied spirits may possibly experience, to some degree, the sense of weariness, but one can scarcely repress a smile at the simplicity which provides a bed and a pillow for an angelic visitor.

The truth seems to be that the spirit of Amelia Bauer is so earthbound by the hypnotic influence of her earth friends that she scarcely realizes that she is not still in the mortal form and subject to all its limitations. One may be permitted to suggest that it is rather fortunate that the spirit "has no teeth," as otherwise the consequent enlargement of Mr. Babcock's board bill might be an item.

CAN SPIRITS BE IDENTIFIED?

Mr. Jamieson's Views on Evidences of Spiritualism.

The greatest defect in the "evidences of Spiritualism" is the entire lack of proof that a particular spirit actually does communicate. Add to this the fact that people in this world have had many cases of "mistaken identity" of their earthly neighbors, some of them sworn to, and the difficulty in the way of identifying the spirits of our departed friends appears to be insurmountable. The lecturer, of whom I made mention, who was so sure he saw his wife materialize, who would have sworn to her identity, showed, as Mr. Howe says, "exuberance of imagination, and unreliable testimony." If all such witnesses are to be discredited, the judgment day for Spiritualism is close at hand. If it is dangerous, as he says, to swear to the identity of your own materialized wife; if you cannot be sure of the identity of a spirit, away goes the last prop of Spiritualism. Upon this question of identity have Spiritualists prided themselves, claiming they have "scientific certainty of the fact."

I will have use for this later in this discussion.

Brother Howe tells us that there are even careful people who "relax vigilance, and leave unguarded many conditions that admit of fraud."

I, too, know that this is the case, and you will notice one thing: It is impossible for Spiritualists themselves to discuss Spiritualism without voluminous reference to fraud. Brother Howe says: "It might have been safe" for the lecturer who was deceived in the identity of his wife, "to swear to the fact that the phenomena was not a trick performed by the medium."

There is where he would have been deceived again, for it was a trick performed by the medium! How true it is, that "many are careless, impulsive and jump to conclusions," just as Mr. Howe says. This is the trouble with thousands of Spiritualists, the uncritical class.

He says: "If I mistake not, Prof. Jamieson has often used in argument the statements of such scientists as Tyndall, Huxley, Darwin, et al., and put them before his audiences as if there was no question of their authority."

Mistaken again. No scientist accepts any man for authority; he accepts "truth for authority, not authority for truth." I have rejoicingly quoted their statements for instruction. Anybody was at liberty to call them in question, and investigate for himself. That is the glory of science. In all my experiments in the science of chemistry I took no man for authority, not even Josiah P. Cook, Prof. Youmans, or Steele; but accepted instruction from them all. Their advice always was, Doubt, observe, experiment, reason for yourself.

It appears to be difficult to make my opponents understand the difference between knowledge and belief. Brother Howe asks: "Does Prof. Jamieson accept the atomic theory of matter?" Certainly, I believe in it. No scientist in the world knows that there are atoms. The very question shows that it is held as a theory. Take the new chemical element, radium, the most costly metal in the world, discovered by the joint efforts and experiments of those two distinguished French scientists, Prof. Currie and his wife. It is a metal that possesses the strange power of constantly emitting light one-hundred thousand times greater than uranium, discovered by Becquerel in 1896. Its projected and positively charged atoms fly away at an immense speed, probably one hundred thousand miles a second. Radium has been photographed by its own light. There is probably not two pounds of the metal in the world in marketable form, and is worth two millions dollars a pound. It is needless for me to say I have never seen a grain of the high-priced stuff! It constantly emits, without apparent diminution, three different kinds of rays. A simple and beautiful experiment has been made by holding a magnifying glass over the radium from which light and heat are shooting. A multitude of luminous specks or flashes of light are seen darting hither and thither. When these flying atoms strike each other, or strike an obstacle they are stopped and their energy is turned into heat.

Hence, when you ask me, "Does Prof. Jamieson accept the atomic theory of matter?" I say, yes; but I do not claim that it has ever been demonstrated, from the time of Democritus to the present, that there are atoms. It is a theory, or to be more exact, an hypothesis, a guess. If there are atoms, then matter is proved to be indestructible, and the soul, or mind, or ego, the real self, may be immortal! But it has been suggested by scientists that all matter, by the action of its own inherent forces, such as radium is now known to possess, may vanish into the stillness of universal death.

Brother Howe asks me if I believe "in the evidence of the hypothetical ether?" Yes, I believe in it; but do not know it.

No; I have never measured the distance from pole to pole on the earth; and never "measured the distance to Venus and Mars." He asks: "Does he believe anyone ever did it?" Yes.

Now, let me say to my inquiring friend that I know these celestial measurements have been made; that the weighing and measuring of heavenly bodies are so accurate that events, past as well as future, such as eclipses and occultations, are mathematically figured out to the fraction of a second. Will the time ever come when spirits can be measured and weighed? When we can learn the distance of the spirit land with as much exactness as we have measured the miles to Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune? That will be bringing Spiritualism within the purview of knowledge.

Is Brother Howe merely a reader of science? It would seem so, judging by his remark that if I accept "statements made by reliable men in science, and takes for granted what they say is true." Is that what he does? I do not; and there is not a scientist on earth who "accepts statements" made by even reliable brother scientists; he proves them. No man in all the realms of science is accepted as authority. This was the attitude of Spiritualism in its early days. It refused, point-blank, to "take for granted what they say is true," either in religion, philosophy, or science. Not even the statements supposed to have been made by the loftiest angel, or highest spirit, were taken for granted as true. Spiritualism combated the pernicious principle from its beginning.

I remember that one eminent scientist wrote to another equally distinguished thirty years ago about some psychic facts. They were old intimate friends, these two scientists, and these are the words:

"Any intellectual reply to your facts I cannot see. Yet it is a curious fact that even I, with all my tendency and desire to believe spiritualistically, and with all my faith in your power of observing and your thorough truthfulness, feel as if I wanted to see for myself."

Every philosophical Spiritualist, I think will endorse that.

In my next I will aim to point out the "weakness of witnesses."

OUR PREMIUMS.

BEAR IN MIND.

Remember, please, that we send many of our Premium Books by express. If you do not receive your order promptly by mail, inquire at the express office. If not there, notify us at once.

Remember, please that it costs ten cents to get a personal check cashed at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of these Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you order one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until further notice, the two following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "Seers of the Ages, or, Spiritualism Past and Present," by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills an exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have TEN Premium Books only, and you can select from them as follows:

Any three of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Lastly all of these TEN valuable Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.10, a price never before equaled in this country or Europe. The following is the list:

TEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.10.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism.
6—The Next World Interviewed.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.
10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These ten books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $3.10, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these ten premium books is about ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.10, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—a bargain the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS!

To Clubs of ten or more we offer the following terms to each one: The Progressive Thinker one year, and ONE of the following books, $1.15: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science"; "Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present"; "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands"; "The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," Vol. 3. The one who gets up the Club will be entitled to the paper one year free, and any two of the books he may select among our list of premiums.

LOAVES DISAPPEAR.

While an Invisible Choir Sings.

London, Oct. 31.—The mystery of Raikes farm, Beverley, grows deeper with investigation. It has hitherto been believed that the manifestations were confined to the dwindling away and ultimate vanishing of loaves, but startling though these phenomena are they do not comprise the whole of this weird Yorkshire story.

Strange noises are heard about the house after nightfall—noises loud enough to wake the children, and to cause the Websters to believe at first that either a practical joker or a sleep-walker was responsible for them.

"Many times," said Mr. Webster to your correspondent, "I have come down stairs in the middle of the night to find the cause of these uncanny sounds, but however stealthily I went I have always been baffled."

Footsteps have been heard upon the stairs by both Mr. Webster and his wife. Listening to them as they approached, Mr. Webster has opened the bedroom door suddenly and shown a light. The sounds have sometimes ceased at this interruption and sometimes continued; but though they have been heard quite close at hand no human agency has ever been found to account for them.

"I am not a Spiritualist," said Mr. Webster, "but I am driven against my will to the belief that superhuman agencies are at work to cause these strange things."

Sometimes the noises have been so loud that Mr. and Mrs. Webster have been convinced that some one was making free with the chairs and fireirons in the room beneath them.

One night, while ex-Police Constable Berridge stayed in the house in charge of the dairy, he heard a footstep, which he took to be Webster's, outside the door, and was astounded next morning when Webster told him he had never left his room.

But even these phenomena do not exhaust the mysteries of the haunted farm. One night, when Webster had heard strange noises, he went to Berridge's room, and together they searched the house. Everything, however, was as they had left it on going to bed.

At breakfast next day Webster's 14-year-old son remarked that some one had been singing during the night. His father, anxious for the peace of mind of his family, told him he had been dreaming, and was not to say another word about it.

Others, however, had heard this midnight music. Mrs. Webster's mother was so terrified by it at first that she buried her head in the bedclothes. Now she listens for it with pleasure. "It's the sweetest music I've ever heard," she is said to have told a neighbor. "It is just like a choir singing;" and, apart from the Webster family, the heavy slumbers of one of the farmhands have been interrupted by these minstrel voices.

Mr. Webster woke up one morning and found that his clothes were missing. A search discovered them scattered through other rooms of the farm.

Spiritualists from Hull and elsewhere have assured him that the phenomena are to be attributed to beings of another world. Unbelievers in occult manifestations look for the explanation elsewhere, and suggest that the singing and removal of the clothes are the work of a sleepwalker. But what about the dwindling bread? Even a sleepwalker with a mania for clawing and consuming cannot pass beyond locked doors without a key. Moreover, the wasting is as continuous by day as by night.

On the other hand, it has been well established that the decay of a loaf is immediately arrested once it is removed from the precincts of the farmhouse, and it has been whispered about that something of the same kind of thing occurred at Raikes farm forty or fifty years ago. The oldest inhabitant of Bishop Burton, however, can tell of definite story on this subject, and at present the theory of supernatural agency is the only one that finds general acceptance.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

MOTHER AND HOME.

Synopsis of Lecture by John W. Ring.

As long as the records of man's experiences rule, supremacy and progression have been speculated upon. We find that the most imperative and foremost conclusion man has put to this earth life is to gain something. In his efforts he has found many ways by which the laws of justice have been perverted. Now why is this? Is it because his desire for something unattainable has made him forget the law?

May be so—who knows? Can we tell but this is part of the Infinite's plan for unfolding the latent qualities co-equal to the supreme soul of all life?

How closely we measure the great things in life, and how little is thought concerning the small details which make up the sum of the great problem of life.

Anyone may know he is a soul, but few know with what detail and from what tiny atoms its self-selected portion of the Infinite it may consist.

We are then but the concentration of thought—thought embodied—the supreme essence of infinite wisdom.

Having each and all the greatest possibilities, these possibilities are talents, and talents are our intrinsic worth. Every man feels the impulse of the soul life within, knowing that the fatherhood is with and always part of the ego—and self, when we speak of self it brings us in close touch with the Infinite God. When we speak of God—we see him in nature everywhere. God is to man what the mind of man is to his body. As the mind of man deals with matter, so does God deal with the soul of man. The mind or soul has many departments—one for love, wisdom, knowledge—aye, even hate, envy, all being the expression of the extremes of human emotion.

Now, who would see God's face must first learn to know the details of the things which concern life. Great is the evolution of time, carrying with it all the details, being the aggregation of the real and material atoms. From the grain of sand to the mountains, greater still, the earth, and with more magnitude the system of our planets and those systems around which revolve on—on—into infinite space. We, to understand the working of God's power, must put ourselves in a condition to conceive the wonderful simplicity of Law. To do this we must be natural, and to be natural means the uniting of the forces that compose and affiliate with all harmonious vibrations, making us pure in heart, noble and good.

All nature beats with the strength of God. The creative energy—that loving principle of nature which has for its source—God—the indefinable intelligence that pervades the limits of all space and envelops all the life energy of the universe. When we see God we will find him something kind, gentle, good.

Where is this powerful agent of expressed law? In me, in you, in all things. The spiritual energy part of the whole deals with every human soul like the rays from the sun's first awakening, that thrills all nature into new and ontinuous life. Every soul breathes this energy and is enompassed by the indestructible love—the God principle within. If we do a wrong act, or cause an inharmonious vibration by the misdirection of thought, we are compelled to recognize the law of justice which denamnds retribution. But no matter what sin one commits, the hand of tender mercy is laid lovingly on the wrong-doer's brow, and speaks encouragingly, pointing to a higher plane of existence. This mercy points the way to right, one road—no cross-roads—just straight road, leading to a place called—home. The weary pilgrim's hope is home, and we all love home.

What makes home? It is where love abides; there we find mother—the corner-stone of home—without whom the world—would be sad indeed—so sad that the whole universe would stop in solemn pity and send its electrical waves of comfort and mother principle, that it might be glad again.

Home is the limit to the horizon of the infant, until he grows to manhood, and builds and fashions another home by the use of the mother-given faculties. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God, and if we stop to think, we find God in mother.

Mother is the angel of earth,
Blesses humanity because of her worth;
She lives to assist the loved ones so dear,
Comforts their sorrows and adds to their cheer;
To brighten and gladden, and make life sweet;
Oh, with what love does a mother entreat;
For all she loves dearly, kindly and true,
She fills the place of the angel for you.
When mother is with us no more,
How sad is the heart alone and sore;
Then into the silence we lovingly go,
There to find mother waiting, we know.
Gladly we listen to this angel of good,
Who conquers by love and makes right understood.

Notes and Reflections on Persons and Events.

The symposium on The Great Psychological Crime has doubtless proved of interest to the forty thousand readers of The Progressive Thinker. Pity that it can not be said forty thousand subscribers, which would be true did only one-quarter of the Spiritualists have any interest in sustaining our publications.

The Great Psychological Crime, instead of being a destructive bomb hurled into the ranks of Spiritualists, has so far proved harmless, as no one seems to have been killed nor even seriously wounded.

We shall continue the even tenor of our way, demonstrating through mediumship the cheering fact that man survives the change called death; hungry hearts and souls will continue to be fed with the bread of life from supernal realms, and we shall continue from time to time to feel the touch of the vanished hand and hear the voices supposed to be forever stilled.

It is surprising, the number of cults springing into existence, and it is an off year when there are no new religions (?) to claim the attention of poor and half distracted humanity. In this sunny corner of Uncle Sam's domain it would be hard indeed for any mortal not to find a religion or philosophy suited to his needs. While all the regular orthodox churches, including the M. E. Church, South, are to be found, we have our full quota of Spiritualists, Theosophists, Mental and Christian Scientists, Mormons and the Salvation Army as well as the Texas Jumpers. We only need the Hell-Roarers of Kansas, to make the list complete. The Jumpers are a new cult and are strenuous in their methods, for they can easily be heard three blocks away. They shout and sing and pray until worked up to the proper pitch of enthusiasm or are filled with the holy ghost, then manifest the same by jumping into the air and around the street until exhausted.

A Quaker revival is also in progress, services being held in a commodious tent. These people claim to be reformed Quakers, and are in their methods much like the Free Methodists.

Last, but by no means least are the series of meetings conducted for the past three weeks by the noted evangelist, B. Fay Mills, who, when here several years ago held union services in a very large tent and having the co-operation of every regular minister in San Diego.

He was advocating the old-time Christian dogmas, a personal God, ubiquitous devil, the fall of man and original sin with the provisions made by the atonement for restoration to the favor of God, with hell-fire thrown in for seasoning.

For some reason a great change has taken place in this man's mentality, and he is now giving a series of discourses on the general subject of 20th century religion, and is attracting audiences that fill Isis Theatre and Unity Hall, two of the largest auditoriums in the city. He has cut entirely loose from all dogma, insisting that there is but one religion and that it is comprised in love to God and the practice of the Golden rule in our dealings with our fellowmen. He is a pronounced Socialist and, while speaking three times a day has not as yet made any reference to any future expression of life. He did, however, in one of his lectures, make this significant statement:

"It is not inconsistent with what we know of the past, it is not inconsistent with the great revelation of God, to believe that the world of spirit is about to be more fully revealed unto men."

I should not wonder if the truth were known, if Spiritualistic lightning had struck in his vicinity, and, if so, there is danger of his becoming a victim of The Great Psychological Crime. In view of his change of front it is not strange that with the exception of Rev. E. R. Watson, Unitarian, broad-minded and liberal, the clergy of San Diego are conspicuous by their absence from these meetings. It is understood that Mrs. Mills, who is also an ordained minister and a very talented woman, will in the near future accompany her husband, preaching the new gospel wherever there is a demand for their services, and that there is a growing demand for a reasonable, sensible and practical gospel is evidenced on every hand. These talks, lectures or sermons are so far as they go, good, practical spiritual philosophy, though not so labeled, and hundreds will go to hear it who never enter a meeting of Spiritualists. Seed is being sown, however, for future harvest and many who are gladly accepting Mr. Mills' 20th century religion will not rest content without further investigation.

Surely the world is moving, and while the old dogmas are hard to eradicate, we may take courage and thank the powers that be that they are dying.

Matters at the new temple are very satisfactory, the new home is approaching completion, our audiences are good and a good degree of harmony prevails. Your scribe who had the honor of serving the society for October, holds over for November, while effort is being made to secure Mrs. J. J. Whitney for December, as the time is propitious for a first-class demonstrator of the phenomena. WILL C. HODGE.

ECHOES OF THE SYMPOSIUM

LYMAN C. HOWE. MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

The Great Psychological Crime

A Comparison of Views and the Reasons Therefor.

Lyman C. Howe, the veteran Spiritualist Lecturer and Medium, a man well and favorably known as one of the foremost thinkers and writers in our ranks, will Champion the Cause of Truth as reflected in Spiritualism, while Mrs Florence Huntley, the well-known Author and Journalist, will defend all the statements in The Great Psychological Crime, which Mr. Howe will dare to assail, making a series of articles instructive, suggestive and inspiring, and which every Spiritualist should most carefully read.

Mrs. Florence Huntley, Chicago, Ill.:

Dear Madam:—I have been reading a book, in which your name appears as editor. The author is incog. Hence, I look to you as the one qualified to answer for him. I take it for granted that you are familiar with his views, know his personal character, and vouch for his integrity. I also infer that you sympathize with his ideas, if you do not fully endorse them.

It is of some moment that an author has the confidence of his readers, whether they share his conclusions or not. To thoroughly believe in the integrity of motive animating every sentence, may act as a hypnotic suggestion to the reader that might disarm the criticism necessary to a reliable estimate of the author's conclusions. Nevertheless a constant distrust of the motives behind a book, must act in an opposite way, to prejudice the reader against the ideas advanced as well as the statements put forward in support of the claims advocated. A steady desire to learn the truth for its own sake, irrespective of its bearings upon our predilections, is the most essential qualification for a profitable discussion of any subject. This qualification I hope to bring to this correspondence, and hold it as a vital talisman against all misleading suggestions. Observation has taught me that very few people are capable of rendering a just judgment in any case that bears against their strongest mental habits, or infringes upon their most pronounced predilections. I am also persuaded that few people love the "naked truth" more than their favorite beliefs—whether such beliefs are of a religious nature, or certain dogmas of philosophy, or long accepted conclusions endorsed by authorities in science. In fact there are many illustrations of scientific (?) dogmatism, quite as absurd as anything recorded in the history of religion. Prejudice is prejudice whether it rules in ecclesiasticism, science or social life; whether it favors or condemns any school of thought, religious creed, or spiritual hypothesis. It is not unlikely that it may have some part in the shadings of thought and shaping of conclusions that our most sincere desires would have free from all intrusive meddlings of antecedent impressions. No mind, I think, can be accused of acting independently. Antecedents, circumstances, and a vast realm of occult causes, may be, and probably are, modifying our thoughts, molding our desires, and directing our conduct, while we fancy we are "free moral agents."

I may as well admit, at the outset, that I am a thorough believer in Nature, and an eternal chain of causation running through the cosmos which leaves no place for a "chance" to make havoc with destiny, and hold the smallest area of boundless Nature subject to uncaused and uncausing chaos.

"The Great Psychological Crime," which is the cause of this writing is not, I am quite sure, an accident. It is not difficult, in reading it to trace many of the most distinguishing ideas and paragraphs, to causes that have been known to Spiritualists for many years. But, in the author's own brain, and psychic sphere are many causes added to those of general antecedents, which give an added impetus to the cumulative force that has culminated in this remarkable book. Without any effort to analyze the author's character by his mental aura impressed upon the pages, I involuntarily float into the tide of his thought and feel much at home with him. I sense an earnestness born of sincerity that inspires confidence in his motives.

I am too much inclined to accept without question all that he asserts, to leave me free to analyze and criticise as is necessary to arrive at a correct estimate of his views. The author's definition of "hypnotic suggestion" does not include this condition. I suppose it is what he calls "independent suggestion." But as nothing is, or can be, independent, this must be accepted in a modified sense. It is suggestion to my thinking processes which impresses and colors the quality of my thought. But it is not a suggestion forced upon me by the conscious effort and determined will of the author; neither does it monopolize my "voluntary powers and sensory organism;" but is there really any difference, except in degree? Undoubtedly it was the author's wish, and therefore his will, to carry his thought with as much force and effectiveness as he could, to all who should read his books. How much that wish was instrumental in forcing his ideas upon my willing reason may not be determinable. But it seems to me probable that his wish, desire, or will, enters as a potent factor in an attempt to solve the problem, and determine his psychic relation to me, and his influence upon my thinking while I was reading his book, and unconsciously accepting the authority of his suggestions.

In so far as the author's words are concerned, in this case, we are bound to abide by his definitions. But in an attempt to arrive at the truth respecting his theories it seems to me legitimate to trace the relations—if we can—between those more definite phases of the suggestive processes, and the more delicate and remote influences, which seem to lead to similar, if not identical, results in their culmination. Approaching you as one competent to instruct me in the subject matter of the book in question, I do not propose a polemic discussion, but rather a comparison of views and the reasons therefor. If we diverge—as we are liable to—both of us acting true to our convictions, the conflict of ideas may partake of the nature of debate, but not, I trust, with any ambition for victory, except the victory of truth.

In this introductory letter I do not propose to attempt any special analysis of the many startling statements made by the author, but to prepare the way for what may follow. If all that is set forth in "The Great Psychological Crime" can be substantiated, it is of the highest importance to the world. It is difficult to understand how anyone could desire to remain in ignorance of such vital truths—if they be truths—or to continue a practice which in its very nature must result in such immeasurable calamity.

If after carefully perusing the pages of this book, hypnotists continue their practices, and subjects continue to volunteer for experiments, it would seem self-evident that they did not believe the statement or endorse the theories of the author.

A subject involving such momentous issues, fraught with such appalling calamities to individuals and to society cannot be too carefully or too thoroughly examined, analyzed, sifted and tested at every point by the most painstaking and scientific methods possible to apply. If it be partly true, and partly false, the need of testing every claim is not less.

One error in data, one mistake in the application of facts, may vitiate a whole system of philosophy or ruin the most elaborate structure of science. I think I have found some radical errors in "The Great Psychological Crime;" but you may be able to correct my reasoning and show me the truth more clearly. It is for this purpose, and with this hope that I undertake this correspondence.

Brother Francis informs me that you are willing to try to enlighten me. I fear you will find me a dull pupil, and perhaps a little obstinate; but I believe I am willing to accept and acknowledge any truth when it is made clear to my reason, irrespective of any foregone conclusion.

The author's definition of hypnotism limits it to a comparatively narrow range, which makes it easier to deal with. But he predicates all upon the assumption that it robs the subject of the free exercise of the will and individual sovereignty, and therefore destroys the moral responsibility, and steadily, progressively, leads the soul down to death. By various expressions I infer that this means annihilation of the conscious individual!

This places the issue of life and death, and the eternal destiny of a conscious human soul, upon a most fickle and fortuitous basis. It does not seem to me in accord with that steady march of nature, in her processes of progressive evolution, apparently moved by an almighty fiat of irresistible causation, towards a specific goal. From a fiery sea to granite mountains thundering with volcanic voices, and from mollusk to man, there appears to be a purposeful order of progressive advances, not dependent upon the will of any created type, or individual, and apparently no one of all the millions that play a part in this tremendous process can stop or hinder the onward, upward march of individualization, which appears to have its culmination in the evolution of a conscious soul with an inheritance of limitless possibilities, inspired by progressive impulses and tendencies irresistible. That any man, or class of men, can so act upon such a soul, thus endowed, as to defeat the order of the ages, and turn backward and downward the course of its destiny, and continue it progressively to annihilation, does not seem probable, or possible to my reason. Here I rest the case until I hear from you. Hoping you will approve my object, and enlighten my understanding, and that readers of The Progressive Thinker may profit by the correspondence, I am most sincerely and cordially yours for light,

LYMAN C. HOWE.

NO STAR CHAMBER.

Brief Notes From Lyman C. Howe.

To the Editor: Last Thursday about 10 p. m., Mrs. Howe was suddenly oppressed with suffocation. For three hours she struggled in terrible agony, gasping for breath. A physician arrived at 11:30 and stayed an hour. At 2 a. m. she got easy and slept a little, but at 5:30 was taken vomiting. She now seems convalescent, and is up and walks some to-day; sat at table with us.

In my notes from Washington I thought I mentioned all the message mediums; but I see I omitted the name of Mrs. Kates. As I wrote in great haste it is not strange, but Mrs. Kates might think it an intended slight. Her work was as good as any there, I think, and I did not intend to leave her out. Perfect justice to all under all circumstances is my motto and my aim. But I often forget some things when writing in haste.

I notice that "Our Moses" refers to the petition asking Mr. Barrett to allow his name to be used as a candidate, as a "star chamber" performance. I do not know as I understand what that means; but I was consulted and advised the petition, and was the first to sign it. I did not know it was "star chamber" or secret, or had any wire-pulling about it. If it was it is the first time I was ever in a "star chamber" without looking out at the windows, if it has any!

CAN NOT THINK ALIKE.

The thoughts of different ones will not run exactly in the same groove. The differentiation is certain to manifest itself somewhere as presented in the following articles. Mr. Titus is a thorough and accomplished Student of Occultism and a believer in the Phenomena of Spiritualism. Geo. A. Bacon, of Washington, D. C., is a well-known Thinker along Psychical lines also, yet see how they differ on the main point at issue.

THINKS THE BOOK WILL DO GREAT GOOD.

E. D. Titus, M. D., of Minnesota, a Prominent Thinker Along Psychical and Occult Lines, and a Firm Believer in the Phenomena of Spiritualism, Believes the Storm Center Agitation Will Do Good.

I have read with interest the various articles on The Great Psychological Thinker and all are well written and creditable to the philosophy of Spiritualism.

As a whole they seemed to embody a brilliant display of rhetoric rather than scientific logic.

To me these writers are all right and at the same time all wrong, due to the fact that they have taken either one extreme or the other.

The real truth lies between the two extremes.

A dray horse could hardly stand the race track, and neither could the race horse bear up under the grinding work of the dray.

The same rule applies to the effect of mediumship upon persons.

It depends upon their mental and physical peculiarities, or as St. Paul expresses it, their particular gift.

After thirty-seven years' scientific investigation, I am opposed to hypnotism in any form, whether trance mediumship, or the influence of mortal upon mortal; in the long run the effect upon the subject can only be harmful, either physically or mentally, and especially so to persons not endowed with that peculiar mentality or gift.

All nature teaches that power and strength comes from action and it matters not whether physically or mentally activity is applied.

Now, if we allow ourselves to become passive and permit another, whether mortal or spirit, to take possession of our physical organism, it is like lending our horse or ox for another to wear out its energies, while we, like the unused arm, grow weaker through inactivity.

Another still greater danger lies in the path of the average trance medium. They know not the unknown spirit that may at any time take possession of their organism, if once the habit (I will not call it power, because it is the reverse of power), is once developed.

I never knew a trance medium that was not influenced at times with many spiritualities, both good and bad.

I have experimented with it for years in my own household and seen the injurious effects of obsession in hundreds of cases.

Drifting into these conditions was of course due largely to the acts of the persons themselves. In their anxiety to produce phenomena they would embrace as an angel any thing that produced a rap or moved a table.

Father Gneimer, in charge of the House of Good Shepherd, wrote a work a few years ago, entitled "Spirits of Darkness." He ransacked all history to prove that the so-called dead still lived and under certain conditions could be communicated with. He holds that the Catholic church from its first inception has always taught its priesthood this, but they forbid their members from making investigation on account of the dangers of obsession and evil spirits that deceive.

While I am known from the Rockies to the Alleghenies, and from the Gulf to Canada, among business men as a champion of the philosophy of Spiritualism, I have never prominently identified myself with spiritual organizations, merely because of the lack of interest shown for a philosophy. Too much time is spent in criticising the churches or else in chasing phenomena.

This great mental struggle about the Storm Center is doing good.

Thanks to The Progressive Thinker, thanks to the able writers who have come to the front and contributed their mite. I may not agree with them in some particulars, but let them come. It starts people thinking and it is thought that begets philosophers.

Listening to a gibberish spirit squaw control and chatter through a trance medium may amuse us, but does not teach us philosophical truths.

I addressed an audience last winter at the Masonic Temple in this city, on the laws governing the formation, existence and decay of a solar system. At the conclusion, a lady medium came to me and said: "Why, your theory on that subject, is different than my guide told me. He says the earth was once the moon."

I relate this as a specimen of the manner in which certain people assume that everything that comes from a spirit must of necessity be true.

A lecture was recently published in one of our spiritual papers from one of the noted trance lecturing mediums on the subject of other worlds being inhabited.

It was a jumble of meaningless words showing that the spirit control did not know the difference between a star and a planet.

Now Brother Francis, you have thrown down the gauntlet and out of the Storm Centre, Spiritualism must arise to a philosophy, which is hers above all others, else fall back and confine itself to phenomena chasers and fortune telling.

But it is not going backward. On every side there are truth seekers craving a philosophy. In my travels over twenty states I meet them on every hand.

APPRECIATES THE ARGUMENTS OF OUR LEADING INTELLECTUAL LIGHTS.

George A. Bacon, a Prominent Spiritualist of Washington, D. C., Takes Especial Pleasure in Commending Those Who Have Expressed Their Disapproval of The Great Psychological Crime.

The gratitude of all thoughtful Spiritualists are due to those critical reviewers of The Great Psychological Crime, like Hudson Tuttle, Mrs. Richmond, Prof. Lockwood, Lyman C. Howe, J. J. Morse, Mrs. Longley and a few others, who have in their respective individual capacity, so cleverly and masterly laid bare the criminality of the author of that work.

The ability displayed in these criticisms would honor any cause, and it is a most creditable evidence of the intellectual power to be found in the ranks of Spiritualism. Each of the above writers, and there are others to be mentioned with them, is much better qualified to treat the question of mediumship, by observation, study and experience, in a far more rational and philosophical manner; indeed and in fact, in a less pretentious, but in a much more satisfactory, justly discriminative and truthful manner than that of our anonymous author. Confessedly he is entirely ignorant, in an experimental sense, of what he seeks to elucidate, while those who reply to his charges, have been thus conversant with the subject from one quarter to one-half of a century. No wonder they prove many of his positions untenable—but assumptions, which their experience demonstrates to be false.

Seeking to build an elaborate superstructure upon partially false foundations, upon only half truths, it is not difficult to predict its results.

Personally I want to express my sense of indebtedness to Mrs. Richmond and to Hudson Tuttle, whose replies I chanced to read first and in the order named, for the unusually clear, convincing and conclusive manner in which they discussed the subject. Rarely will one be able to find more cogent statements, straight-forward argument and virile thoughts, all leading up to irresistible conclusions, than in these two papers.

This much was written when the late convention interrupted further comment. I now see that others regard these papers in a similar light.

I want to make a suggestion, pro bono publico, that Brother Francis select some half-dozen of these worthy replies—those that stand out for their conspicuous ability in presenting the other side of this Great Psychological Crime, and publish them in book form.

MY CREED.

Not rounded into phrases, set in speech,
Nor framed in numbered articles to teach,

The tongue some hidden meaning to proclaim,
Of God, and of his rules, and righteous reign.

In none of these, find I the vital seed,
Of what my soul can call its crowning creed.

But rather in the hours of every day,
In little things that meet us on the way.

God's purpose do I seek, his symboled sign;
As writ in common lives, like yours and mine.

The loving thought that lights the plainest face—
That fills it full of beauty, and of grace.

The open hand, that brings the wayward in,
And heals the hurt, and washes out the sin.

The kindly voice, that speaks the words of cheer,
Till hope, and health, and courage reappear.

The heart of oak, that stands for truth and right,
And works for these, with all its strength and might.

The faith and trust, in everlasting good,
Beginning here with human brotherhood.

These are the living threads that throb and thrill,
Within the web of man's awakening will,

Whose circled lengths are held at centered source,
And sharpened there by laws of loving force,

To fit the day, to fit the present time,
And build from lowly deeds God's deeds divine.

'Tis here I find the germ, I find the seed,
Of what my soul can call its crowning creed.

THE THREE WISHES.

Three girls sat idly on the beach;
One like a lily, tall and fair;
One brilliant, with her raven hair;
One sweet and shy of speech.

"I wish for fame," the lily said,
"And I for wealth and courtly life,"
Then gently spoke the third: "As wife,
I ask for love instead."

Years passed. Again beside the sea
Three women sat with whitening hair,
Still graceful, lovable and fair,
And told their destiny.

"Fame is not all," the lily sighed,
"Wealth futile if the heart be dead."
"I have been loved," one sweetly said,
"And I am satisfied."

BIRTH OF THE HOURS.

See, the crescent moon is beaming
On the regal brow of night,
And her sable robes are gleaming
With the sprinkled stars so bright.

See the glorious morn, her lover
Flies to her with winged feet—
And he gently bends above her,
Kissing his fair lady sweet.

And anon there is a wedding,
And anon, amid the flowers,
See the rosy limbs their children
Play together, sunny hours.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. HE TREATS OF MAGIC.

Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt was at one time a prominent Unitarian Divine. He finally became a Spiritualist, and is clairaudient, and in his article he gives the sentiments of those Spirits who talk to him. It will be read with interest, illustrating the kaleidoscopic character of the Spirit World.

The attention of the readers of The Progressive Thinker has been called lately to a recently published work, entitled "The Great Psychological Crime." The author is vouched for as a man "profoundly wise and yet possessed of that simplicity and kindly spirit that shows he is actuated by no selfish motive," consequently we will take for granted that he has in this work contributed to the world his honest, manly thought; and what we may say, must not be taken as a personal attack if we present different conclusions, in our own research, as well as search for truth.

Permit me to say of myself that for over thirty years I have been a close student along the same lines of psychic investigation, and like himself a participant in "the mysteries" in their modern dress of "Free Masonry (and like himself" I do consider "Masonry" as the lineal descendant of Egypt's famous school of what may be called both a philosophy and a religion.

In writing at this time, I confine my attention more particularly to what he calls "Magic," and defines as "the individual exercise and use of the natural powers of the body, spirit and soul, in controlling and applying the forces, activities and processes of nature"—which we must infer that he believes to be an inherent psychic "gift" or attribute of humanity.

"White" or "Black" is but a relative term, though he makes what seems to be difference; but is it not such difference as we would make of powder, steam or any other power of nature, material or psychic—use, not the power itself? So I take it, and treat it accordingly, as "a psychic power."

It is what I would call for this paper, hypnotic in its character; calls of an intelligent exercise of the will of an individual, in order that it may influence (control) the action of another. But whether it be trance or suggestion, it is still an influence, and in so much is a moving force—call it what you will. It is also an innate force that finds in all ages an expression in the human race. Somewhere in the universe of life, "Man" began to be. We will not any of us deny that in man is found something not existent in other species, that has been the cause of progression. Man as man is "a progressive thinker," and by what means?

I answer "Magic," or in other words, by means of hypnotic (?) suggestion or trance. The "wise men and women" of the Orient, that cradle of the race, became aware that at times a psychic force outside themselves gave to them in the silence of their hours of reverie, words of a wisdom not their own, and though they did not know the personality unseen that imparted to them "the gift" of oracular speech, they personified it under the general name of Hu, or the god-speaker.

They realized also a kind of omnipresence in this Hu (or God) and worshiped it, i. e., "acknowledged worth." These magicians of the long ages felt that it was to themselves so closely joined, that at last to "man inspired" the name of humanity, and realizing that all men were consciously or unconsciously subject to the magical power of this psychic force, what better name could they coin for the race or "species, man?"

They also found that as they (these scientists of the Long Ago of Sanskrit speech) entered into certain states of mind that we call reverie, they came at once in rapport with Hu—the unseen thinker of thoughts, with wisdom superior to their own. These reverie-men are the original "Reverends," that so many of our Spiritualistic friends so despise, yet it was the proper title of the world's first mediums.

That superstition, that other name for ignorance, should draw wrong conclusions, formulate wrong creeds for the people, is perfectly natural; these things are still done in regard to other objects than psychic, but the fact remains, these "Reverends," these mediums, knew that theirs was a wisdom inspired, and called themselves the word-speakers of God. "The word came to me," was their constant assertion, and, too, they told of visions given ("clairvoyance"); a sight flashed upon their consciousness. But did these, the Magi of the Ohient, become "demoralized," with "will destroyed," because of the "magic" divine? On the other hand, they were the leaders of a world's thought. Their mediumship, was it "a great psychological crime"? By reason of this "crime," the race has climbed from savagery to enlightenment! Let this be my answer.

But as time passed, there came the thought that may be it was not "an outside force," that it was "subconsciousness"; that it was a property of the soul—the man. Then began psychical research—study of the powers and properties of man as man.

As a matter of course the scientist directed his attention first to acknowledged abnormal "subjects"—mind not normal, whether from disease or from drugs or drinks; and we have the saying of those insane, "they have been touched of the gods"; also "the gods protect the drunkard."

In Egypt's "mysteries" I find a thoroughly organized system of seances, and recognize as a fact that from Egypt went forth the teaching of the soul's immortality. There they found that "the god" was spirit-man; the unknown "magician" of the reverends was excarnate man! And in their initiation's expressive symbolism the initiate was constantly impressed with the thought that under all circumstances he was attended by a friend.

His final bringing to light was a revelation of the personality of that, till then, unseen friend.

And so, too, he was taught that death could not kill the man!

The different phases of one's mediumship were severally recognized as clairaudience or reverie; direct inspiration of words; enthusia or excitement of emotions in speech; semi-trance (or control) where the speaker or actor was conscious of events, but still under hypnotic control and "the deep sleep" or trance, in which the subject or medium was not conscious or either act or word; but they had learned "the secret of the race," the "mystery" of the God. If that was "black magic," what was "the white"? If it was so destructive to the individual, why did the wisest of their time so earnestly seek admittance? Why did Plato say that "no man was fitted for a legislator who was not an initiate of the mysteries?"

That there was danger in the practice of mediumship to the unwise, the ignorant, they knew, and hence only those famed for their intellectuality, either as philosophers or leaders, were admitted, and even to these "strong-minded ones" by degrees—years of study must pass ere they were really brought to light, the light of the seance room. We may take lesson here concerning dangers as well as concerning advantages, but we may not ignore the discoveries of Spiritualism, in every age: Personal immortality and spirit presence, and with the power—the ability to intelligently communicate with us.

The fact of the race is, that we are all of us psychics in greater or less degree; all are subject to clairvoyance (vision) and clairaudience; and there are none who are not at times "the hypnotist"—"the subject"; and to me, it is a blessed fact that we are, for if we did not have the elements of psychism in us, we would not be able to grasp understandingly the wisdom that is brought to us by the "divine ones" whose touch has enlightened the world.

Briefly I would say that the book appears to me as the expression of an extremist, rather than that of a scientist. Truth lies between the extremes of positivism and negation; let him who reads take note accordingly.

In closing, permit me a word in regard to the editorial question, thus expressed:

"Mediumship, however perfect it may be, has its limits, its drawbacks, almost invariably the communications or messages given partake of the characteristics, idiosyncrasies, or the peculiar bent of the mind of the medium.

"It has been fully established that a wire is not essential to conduct a message from one city to another, and is it not equally as possible and equally as practicable, and equally as desirable, to open up communications with the spirit realms without intermediaries, those acting as mediums?"

To this really important question I answer unhesitatingly, Yes; and yet until we have, as it were, "grown into" a consciousness of spirit presence; of an almost constant rapport of mind, the medium is, I may say, a necessity, as the race would become conscious of this, to the majority, occult power, or magic, that sways more or less the human mind.

I can see wisdom on the part of the spirit world, that we are flooded, so to speak, with phenomena. By this method men are forced to see. There has been enlightenment, and in consequence there has been awakened a desire for mediumship of their own. This desire is born of the same feeling of our editor: personal possession of self-conscious communication. Naturally, they are seeking first (for it was their first awaking) the phases of the seance room; but the time is surely coming WHEN WHAT THE AUTHOR OF THE BOOK WOULD CALL NORMAL RAPPORT, WILL BE UNDERSTOOD AND TAUGHT.

Our friend Loveland calls it, if I remember aright, "the higher mediumship." Personally I have claimed this knowledge as an experienced fact for the past thirty years, but let me tell you all that there is no phase of mediumship MORE LIABLE TO DANGERS TO THE UNINSTRUCTED than this! Yet we will attain to it as a race, I do believe. But while the world of man is skeptical of all that is denominated Spiritualism, we may be sure that the wisdom of the spirit world will continue to give us phenomenal mediumship; in other words, it will "rap" into the dull-brained ones the fact of presence, and will trumpet its words, if necessary, until they will believe, and if as wise and practical a man as Pythagoras was willing to confess to a spirit levitation, that carried him thirty miles, I do not think it will hurt us or "the cause" if spirit hands paint pictures, write on slates, or bring us flowers in the seance room!

It is true, though, that we ought to carefully choose our medium, in respect to personal character. We say we are in this phenomenal business "CURSED WITH FRAUDS," but the remedy is in our own hands. We can let them alone, they will quit the business. Be not afraid of our magicians. Spiritualism has come to stay, and its phenomena will stay until the race is awakened out of its "hypnotic" state of materialism, and man realizes in some better measure what immortality means, and spirit presence becomes to him a consciousness and a life.

DR. J. O. M. HEWITT,
Chicago, Ill. Lecturer.

A Washington Lady Approves.

She assumes that the book is an answer to a pressing need. This variety of thought, conflicting in its nature, sets each one to thinking for himself, and the result is always good.

THE ANSWER TO A PRESSING NEED.

This book bears a distinct message to the multitude in the simple, yet ungainsayable, form of its presentation of the fundamental truths that are of the deepest concern to every conscious soul. It responds with an all-potent promise to the universal and most profound aspirations of the soul. It makes clear the definite possibility within each of communication with the beloved ones in their different spheres, whether embodied or disembodied, by raising our own spiritual gravity up to the degree of harmonious relation. To the few it presents a rational hope of immortality and indicates the way to its realization.

In brief the message is that immortality, as rationally defined and demonstrated, MEANS A SPIRITUAL EVOLUTION so far beyond the ordinary powers of perception as to suggest, though not prove, progress in conscious-consciousness "forever and ever." That individual immortality is an achievement offered the human identity; that this achievement is obtained by the growth and exercise of the will. The essential means for the use and exercise of the will is selfcontrol. That the hypnotic and mediumistic processes deprive not only the subject of self-control, the means of developing the will, the instrument of immortality, but thereby according to the reverse action of the law expressed in, "it is more blessed to give than to receive;" it is more cursed to take away than be taken from.

The operator, whether embodied or disembodied, not only cuts the subject off from alliance with the constructive principle of nature and the achievement of immortality, but yields to himself the same bitter fruit, and both subject and operator are swept into the awful current of the destructive principle of nature, and unless rescued, are carried down to eventual individual extinction so far as is known.

This proposition seems clear enough and forceful enough to call forth the exclamation: "Oh, God! the truth! the truth!" from every human being who has had the great privilege of being familiar with the data of the present wave of psychic sensitivity with its incoherent, contradictory, inadequate, disorganizing manifestations, and of reading the coherent, lucid, sequential presentation in "The Great Psychological Crime," whatever personal prejudices, conceits or desires it may uproot.

It seems almost powerful enough to quell the petty warfare in which almost everyone engages in defense of hereditary, habitual or preconceived notions, when meeting any new and often higher form of truth instead of being alert as a lookout or watcher on the ramparts of life.

"The Great Psychological Crime" comes in answer to a PRESSING NEED OF THE RAPIDLY EVOLVING CONSCIOUSNESS of the race for more light upon truth as related to fundamental principles and evolutionary processes; something to intelligently guide the impulse toward goodness which in the stupidity of its ignorance assumes that it has the truth and thus often nullifies its own good intent, for motive has its realm, great and splendid, with its powers and offices, but it cannot rule in the kingdom of justice, of conscious knowledge, and all effort to give it dominion results not only in failure but the downfall and disintegration of its legitimate domain.

"The Great Psychological Crime" brings a boon to the individual truth-seeker, even though the individual be not at once convinced of the whole truth of its statements and arguments. It in any case furnishes material so formulated, and opportunities so immediate as to amount to a working hypothesis which opens the way for individual verification, acceptance or rejection. This is all that can be asked by any one who seeks not, accepts not "Authority for truth but truth for authority," for neither statement, discussion or even demonstration can wholly convince. Proof is something that must arrive within the individual either through external experience or interior consciousness.

"The Great Psychological Crime" speaks to each as if that one stood with the one warning alone in the universe, at the same time states so clearly that he who runs may read, the awful import of choice in every act on every plane, not only primarily but momentarily.

This book makes clear free will within the law, the relaxation of spontaneity at one with the firmness of fixed principles, as a human possibility and necessity, thus removing one of the greatest of stumbling blocks to the many. It reveals the perfect working of the law of balance, justice, the all-inclusive, retributive and compensatory. May it be the connecting link between the "incoherent, indefinite homogeneity of the mass of vague unintelligent psychic manifestations and a "coherent, definite heterogeneity" of revelations possible to the trained psyche.

"The Great Psychological Crime" HOLDS ONE SPELLBOUND BY ITS VIVID PRESENTATION OF THE SUBLIME SCHEME OF THE PROGRESSIVE CREATION OF A HUMANITY; of the design of the evolving immortality in the consciousness, or nature's evolutionary processes bearing this unconscious immortal potentiality up to where the identity is face to face with the law in obedience to which it came into being. There alone in the "Infiniverse" it awakes to receive the awaiting opportunity, to be offered the choice of taking up the work of its own evolutionary completions on to immortality, or of dropping out back again into the universal, into the crucible where cosmic energies are working with cosmic materials.

It is marvelous, this picture, so simple and so stupendous in that the splendor of the goal but illumines the practical way.

May it be read by every awakening soul.

Never Neglect Constipation.

It means too much misery and piling up of disease for all parts of the body. Death often starts with constipation. The clogging of the bowels forces poisons through the intestines into the blood. All sorts of diseases commence that way. Most common complaints are dyspepsia, indigestion, catarrh of the stomach, liver complaint, kidney trouble, headaches, etc. The bowels must be relieved, but not with cathartics or purgatives. They weaken and aggravate the disease. Use Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine instead. It is a tonic laxative of the highest order. It builds up and adds new strength and vigor. It assists the bowels to move themselves naturally and healthfully without medicine. One small dose a day will cure any case, and remove the cause of the trouble. It is not a patent nostrum. The list of ingredients goes with every package with explanation of their action. It is not simply a temporary relief, it is a permanent cure. Try it. A free sample bottle for the asking. Bishop Says the Bible Is Not Infallible.

It is decidedly refreshing to those who are stigmatized as "infidels," to be informed that a high dignitary of the Church of England denies that the Bible was inspired literally, or that it is historically correct or truthful.

As stated in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, it will doubtless come as a surprise to many churchmen that an Anglican bishop should pay a public tribute to the work of Charles Darwin and frankly state, as an elementary truth, that the Bible is not infallible.

This is what the bishop of Wakefield did in an address at Leeds, on the teaching of the Bible to children, in the light of modern criticism.

His lordship recognized the possibility of offending the susceptibilities of some of his hearers, but explained that such wounds as he might inflict would be the wounds of a friend. "Some people," he added, "need wounding before they will awaken and take a proper view of the Bible."

Many of the questions asked by children revealed to parents and teachers that they themselves had no really sufficient answer to give, and they were obliged to put the questions aside.

Three courses were open to them. Like many devout but not well-informed persons, they might shut their eyes and leave alone all that did not harmonize with their old preconceived views about Holy Writ; or they might give up their faith and say that modern science had exploded the Bible; that the Christian religion was a thing of the past. Between these two was the third and the true course—to inquire into these things.

First, the nature of inspiration ought to be understood. Scriptural inspiration was not a verbal, mechanical, absolutely accurate and infallible inspiration—not an inspiration of pens, but of men, who stamped their own characters upon their writings—men who were not free from mistakes, but who were led by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost to embody in their writings a revelation of God and the offer of salvation to men in Christ.

For centuries it was believed that every part of Scripture was equally inspired—texts had been twisted and tortured into meanings and fixed interpretations as absurd as the Jewish cabbala. Even educated people had found it a great relief to be told such elementary truths as these:

The Bible is not infallible.

The Bible is not necessarily literal and exact.

It is not a scientific text-book.

The books were not necessarily written by the authors whose names they bear.

These names have absolutely no authority, except old tradition of the Jewish race.

The old chronology was not inspired.

The dates in the ordinary Bible are no guide to the dates of the books.

The world was not created 4004 years before Christ.

Many of the books are composite, and some embody older records like flints in chalk formations; others are by more than one author, and still others are admittedly compilations of various historical and traditional accounts.

Once we realized these facts and understood the great purpose of inspiration we should lose the paralyzing and crippling fear of answering truthfully the direct questions of children.

Scientifically and morally (his lordship continued) there had been a great revelation since the days of the Jewish writers. Charles Darwin had placed not only scientific but also religious thought upon an altogether firmer basis, while the progressive moral revelation was shown by the fact that the Jews allowed slavery, polygamy and many things which we should never think of permitting to-day.

The imprecatory clauses in the Psalms, in the bishop's opinion, are not fit for public worship, and he would be glad if permission were given to omit them.

For the rest, his lordship would have the Bible taught from a literary point of view, with Oriental literary methods freely exhibited. Such teaching would have a peculiar charm, especially for the older children, but to ask them to believe in the literal accuracy of the Bible was to put a strain upon the intelligence which it could not easily bear.

Unselfish Salvation.

A notable advance in the ideals of religious effort is indicated by an article written by the Rev. John Watson—widely known under the literary pseudonym "Ian Maclaren." From one occupying the position of an evangelical minister, his words will appear strikingly sound and sensible. Spiritualists will find much to which they will yield ready assent.

As set forth in the Chicago Tribune, he says the old principle of every man for himself is dying out from national politics, from the organization of commerce, from the life of society, and is bound to die out from religion. There was a day when a preacher could appeal to his hearer and awaken his heart to praise because God had saved him while thousands had been left to perish, but to-day the hearer would firmly suspend his praise for his own salvation till he knew what was going to become of other people. No longer does a man think that the great effort of life should be, as the Romans say, "to make his soul," but that it should be to help his brethren both in soul and in body.

Dying people of, say 1850, were solely concerned with the question of what would become of themselves on the other side; dying men of to-day forget themselves in thinking of what is to become of their wives and children. Appeals to the individual to escape hell, because of its suffering, or to make sure of heaven because of its joy, have little effect; and the tract which asks a by no means unimportant questions, "Whither are you going?" is an anachronism, but any appeal for the service of others will secure willing and sympathetic attention. A sermon on the hell beyond the grave would be heard with indifference, a sermon on the hell in the ghettos of cities will lay hold on every man's mind. The days of the Manchester school in religion are over, and a new sense of solidarity has sprung up. Rightly or wrongly, people do not wish to escape from the wreck if their shipmates are to perish. They want to see the whole crew saved together.

Young men who will not teach in Sunday-school are ready to work in a boy's institute, and women who have wearied distributing tracts are anxious to bring more comfort to the lives of their working sisters. The sense is creeping over the community that socially and physically we stand together, and religion cannot remain a watertight compartment of spiritual selfishness. With such a wind blowing like a gale upon one's face, have we not reason to expect that the message of the next revival will be social righteousness and its effect the redemption of the national life?

Years ago, to illustrate the change which is taking place in the attitude of religious people, I was present at a meeting when reports were given in regarding what was called "aggressive work in the poor quarter of the city, and great stress was laid on the usefulness and the ingenuity of a certain lantern mission. According to this scheme the missionaries were provided with a large lantern on a pole, and the transparent slides were graven with gospel texts, such as "God so loved the world," and this lantern was carried after dark to the center of some miserable court and then addresses were given to the people from the texts on its slides.

To-day it would be thought a bitter irony to invite people living, father, mother, grown up sons and daughters, in one room, without light or air or sanitary accommodation, to think of the love of God. What evidence had they of his love or of the love of their fellowmen? How could they be Christians in the circumstances in which they were living? To-day the desire would be, not to send a lantern with a text but to send an inspector to examine the property; not to give money for preaching in courts of that description, but to give money for pulling down such courts altogether.

One feels that that lantern was a parable of the irony of the situation, when the church preached the divine love to those who had no sign of human love, and the church asked people to believe in the sacrifice of Christ when she herself was making no sacrifices to save them from the life of beasts. When God is pleased to send his new prophet one expects that he will preach the gospel of social deliverance; that the white female slaves who sew from morning till night and half through the night, and hardly get the wherewithal to keep soul and body together, should be delivered from their bondage, that every laborer who is willing and temperate should have his living wage wherewith to keep himself and his family, that every citizen, however humble, should have his own little home wherein to live in peace and comfort, that the countryman should not be evicted from the land to make room for wild animals and rich men's sport, that the owners of unsanitary property should be punished and not compensated, that temptations should not be placed at every street corner in the way of the poor and miserable, that every man should have free access to education, to the country, to health and just enjoyment, and that the burden of weariness and sickness and tyranny should be lifted from the shoulders of them who labor and are heavy laden.

The Four Corner Stones

From "What Is Religion," Col. Ingersoll's address before the Free Religious Association, Boston, Mass., June 2, 1899--his last public words, and as such ever memorable, and because they are true and free us from an immensity of nonsense. Dresden Edition, Vol. 4, p. 497. Col. Ingersoll was one of the intellectual giants of the age in which he lived.

If we have a theory, we must have facts for the foundation. We must have corner-stones. We must not build on guesses, fancies, analogies or inferences. The structure must have a basement. If we build, we must begin at the bottom.

I have a theory and I have four corner-stones. The first stone is that matter—substance—cannot be destroyed, cannot be annihilated. The second stone is that force cannot be destroyed, cannot be annihilated. The third stone is that matter and force cannot exist apart—no matter without force—no force without matter. The fourth stone is that that which cannot be destroyed could not have been created; that the indestructible is the uncreatable.

If these corner-stones are facts, it follows as a necessity that matter and force are from and to eternity; that they can neither be increased nor diminished. It follows that nothing has been or can be created; that there never has been or can be a creator. It follows that there could not have been any intelligence, any design back of matter and force. There is no intelligence without force. There is no force without matter. Consequently there could not by any possibility have been any intelligence, any force, back of matter.

It therefore follows that the supernatural does not and cannot exist. If these four corner-stones are facts, Nature has no master. If matter and force are from and to eternity, it follows as a necessity that no God exists; that no God created or governs the universe; that no God exists who answers prayer; no God who succors the oppressed; no God who pities the sufferings of innocence; no God who cares for the slaves with scarred flesh, the mothers robbed of their babes; no God who rescues the tortured, and no God that saves a martyr from the flames. In other words it proves that man has never received any help from heaven; that all sacrifices have been in vain, and that all prayers have died unanswered in the heedless air. I do not pretend to know. I say what I think.

If matter and force have existed from eternity, it then follows that all that has been possible has happened, all that is possible is happening, and all that will be possible will happen. In the universe there is no chance, no caprice. Every event has parents. That which has not happened, could not. The present is the necessary product of all the past, the necessary cause of all the future.

In the infinite chain there is, and there can be, no broken, no missing link. The form and motion of every star, the climate of every world, all forms of vegetable and animal life, all instinct, intelligence and conscience, all assertions and denials, all vices and virtues, all thoughts and dreams, all hopes and fears, are necessities. Not one of the countless things and relations in the universe could have been different.

If matter and force are from eternity, then we can say that man had no intelligent creator, that man was not a special creation. We now know, if we know anything, that Jehovah, the divine potter, did not mix and mould clay into the forms of men and women, and then breathe the breath of life into these forms. We now know that our first parents were not foreigners. We know that they were natives of this world, produced here, and that their life did not come from the breath of any god. We now know, if we know anything, that the universe is natural, and that men and women have been naturally produced. We now know our ancestors, our pedigree. We have the family tree. We have all the links of the chain, twenty-six links inclusive, from moner to man.

We did not get our information from inspired books. We have fossil facts and living forms. From the simplest creatures, from blind sensation, from organism, from one vague want, to a single cell with a nucleus, to a hollow ball filled with fluid, to a cup with double walls, to a flat worm, to a something that begins to breathe, to an organism that has a spinal cord, to a link between the invertebrate to the vertebrate, to one that has a cranium—a house for a brain, to one with fins, still onward to one with fore and hinder fins, to the reptile mammalia, to the marsupials, to the lemures, dwellers in trees, to the simiae, to the pithecanthropi, and lastly, to man.

We know the paths that life has traveled. We know the footsteps of advance. They have been traced. The last link has been found. For this we are indebted, more than all others, to the greatest of biologists, Ernst Haeckel. We now believe that the universe is natural, and we deny the existence of the supernatural.

Views of Lilian Whiting.

CHANGES IN THE SOUL.

Prayer the Intensest Form of Spiritual Experience.

The idea so humorously embodied by Dr. Holmes in his poem, "The Chambered Nautilus," is also expressed by Emerson in this pasage:

"The changes which break up at short intervals the prosperity of men are advertisements of a nature whose law is growth. Every soul is by this intrinsic necessity quitting its whole system of things, its friends and home, and laws, and faith, as the shellfish crawls out of its beautiful but stony case, because it no longer admits of its growth, and slowly forms a new house. In proportion to the vigor of the individual, these revolutions are frequent, until in some happier mind they are incessant, and all worldly relations hang very loosely about him, becoming, as it were, a transparent fluid membrane, through which the living form is seen, and not, as in most men, an indurated heterogeneous fabric of many dates, and of no settled character, in which the man is imprisoned. Then there can be enlargement, and the man of to-day scarcely recognizes the man of yesterday. And such should be the outward biography of man in time, a putting off of dead circumstances day by day, as he renews his raiment day by day."

There are many things true in the sense of great and eternal spiritual laws which are not true when reduced to a temporary and finite explanation. Thus, for instance, the theory of reincarnation is unmistakably true as a law of spiritual growth; but when it is staked out at right angles and formulated like the multiplication table, and laid down that each individual returns again and again to this earth and retraces his steps through infancy and childhood and youth; when certain individuals assert with convincing eloquence that they recall their past incarnations and recollect themselves perfectly well as having been Bruno, or Mary Queen of Scots, or Plato, or Marie Antoinette, the asertion is, to put it mildly, quite open to reasonable doubts and to a final verdict of "not proven."

But to return to the great realities of the life of the spirit; the life of the spiritual man, inhabiting, for a time, a physical body, that he may thus come into relations with a physical world; slipping out of that body, by the process we call death, and dwelling there, in the ethereal world, in his ethereal body, which Paul terms the "substantial" one, because the spiritual body is permanent and the physical one temporary; turning to the great realities of the life of the spirit—what does one find? Certainly, a series of lives, even in that one part of the great and infinite duration which is lived in this world. As Emerson says in the paragraph quoted above: "The changes which break up at short intervals the prosperity of men are advertisements of a nature whose law is growth." These changes constitute a series of what are, practically, incarnations. The change of circumstances; the entering into new environmenth, the coming under the recasting laws of all influences—all these make up a series of new states which are to a great degree new and different lives. For the element of time does not count. It is intensity, not duration, that determines experiences. Emerson asserts that life is unnecessarily long, and he is quite right. A day, a week, may be so filled as to serve the purposes of many an ordinary lifetime.

The keynote of life—the only and the unerring clew to its labyrinthine experiences—is trust, absolute trust in God. "What is this saving faith to be and how can it be attained? Can we find any sure way of touching the spring which moves us so potently?" There is, assuredly, one means of attaining the saving faith; of touching the spring, and that is by prayer. For prayer is the means by which one lays hold of the divine life; enters into the divine spirit, and is as one with it. The most wonderful and radiant results come from the intense effort to purify the spirit by prayer before entering into sleep at night, for sleep holds the body passive, while the spirit is for the time free to enter into the higher spiritual realm and be companioned with higher intelligences. Sleep holds the body and liberates the spirit, which then may, and often does, hold sweet communion with those who (by death) are entirely liberated from the physical world. To enter on sleep through the gates of prayer is to be led, for the time, into the spiritual world and into companionship and communion with those in the heavenly life.

Often there is wise counsel given; suggestions, intimations, that lift up the level of human life into closer connection with the divine life. These experiences during sleep—when the life of the spirit is more intense than in waking hours, because it is liberated into its own world—are a vital factor in that law of growth by which the soul "quits its whole system of things * * * and slowly forms a new house." Let life be, indeed, "a putting off of dead circumstances day by day." Putting off those that are old and dead, one enters into those that are new and supremely alive. It is the process by which man builds "the more stately mansions;" by means of which he leaves his "low-vaulted past" and comes out into the luminous and golden days of the life radiant.

LILIAN WHITING.

"THE LIFE RADIANT."

"The Life Radiant," by Lilian Whiting, is deeply, intuitively thoughtful, and intensely spiritual and inspiring. Lilian Whiting, with her poet soul, sees the spiritual significance of the things of material science as well as the finer essences of thought and soul life; and with pure cultured taste blends them into a radiantly polished gem of beautiful literary work.

"The moment one realizes himself as a spiritual being, belonging of right to the spiritual world; one whose true interests are in and of that realm, and to whom communion with the Divine is the very breath of existence, the one elixir of life, that moment he asserts himself aright. From that hour his life becomes a significant factor in true progress."

"One attracts to himself from the unseen world companionship of the same order and quality as that of his own spirit, with the exception that in proportion to the purity of his aspiration does this quality of companionship come to him of a still higher order than his own."

"The physical universe in which man finds himself is not only surrounded by the spiritual universe, but the two are so absolutely interpenetrated that he may live in both, and, as a matter of fact, whoever lives the life of the spirit does live now and here, as an inhabitant of both realms. The spiritual universe is the reservoir of energy. 'The things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal.'"

Such thoughts as these can only have an excellent and uplifting influence, and this new volume by Miss Whiting teems with such spiritual riches.

The book is beautifully printed and bound in cloth. Price $1. Gilt, embossed, $1.25.

Mysterious Occult Power.

In the humble walks of life we often find remarkable spiritual or occult powers manifested. This lady could trace with absolute certainty lost goods or missing articles. Whether a wonderful medium, or possessing this occult power within herself, in either case the result was most remarkable.

Binghamton, N. Y.—This is a characteristically proper middle New York town, with the regulation number of churches, banks, schools, mills, mill sites and dam sites. But more than this, it has a title to distinction that outweighs all other considerations. It is the home of a soothsayer, a real No. 1, first chop, topside sayer of soothing things, without any discount at all.

This oracular individual does not confine herself to mystical allusions and veiled prophecies of vague and unnamed good fortune certain to come some time in the future if you only wait long enough. She deals in facts so hard and cold that they glitter, and there is just a sufficient admixture of past, present and future in them to drive them home all the harder.

Almost anybody can tell some kinds of facts from the past, but facts of that sort this woman fails to mention. She does business with the facts that only two or three persons know and they usually have a vigorous desire to keep them dark.

Her special stronghold is the recovery of stolen goods, or things that have been lost, and the range of her operations seems to have no particular limit. For instance, there was the case the other day of the doctor's wife.

She had lost a valuable brooch. As usual in such cases, it was one to which she was attached for particular reasons, outside of its intrinsic value.

It happened that she had not worn it for several months, and supposed that it was in the case with the rest of her jewels. When she had occasion to use it, it could not be found.

There was a commotion in the house. An inventory of the jewels showed that the brooch was the only article missing. That seemed to dispose of the theory that there had been a robbery, at least by any one outside of the house.

There was, of course, the usual suspicion that some of the servants had taken it. The house was searched from top to bottom. Every nook and cranny was ransacked. The brooch could not be found.

Because it had been a gift from the doctor, his wife was unwilling to tell him that it had been lost, until every possible means of recovering it had been exhausted. In this dilemma she thought of the soothsayer. Straightway she called on that remarkable person, and, without making herself or her errand known, received an appointment for the next morning.

This miracle worker does business with many of the usual accompaniments. You write your given name on a slip of paper and turn it face down on the table. Then you write whatever question you desire to ask and turn it down also.

The soothsayer's eyes are closed. She folds up the papers, with the writing inside, and rubs them on her head. Then the trance begins.

The doctor's wife had asked simply where her pin was. The clairvoyant began by describing the pin. Then she remarked that it had not been stolen, and that Mrs. Doctor's suspicions of her servant were groundless.

In a certain room of the house there was a chiffonier the top of which extended back a little in the rear of the glass. On this ledge, behind the mirror, the pin was then lying.

Mrs. Doctor got home as quickly as she could. She knew the chiffonier very well. It was in the doctor's room. It had already been searched, but no one happened to look behind the glass. There, sure enough, the brooch was found.

When the doctor came home his wife asked him about it. He remembered at once having picked up the pin just before they went away for the summer and put it there to tease his wife. Then he forgot all about it.

Now, says the doctor's wife, how did that woman know all about it? She was never in the house and couldn't have known anything about the chiffonier in the doctor's room.

Then there was the case of the Angora cat. It belongs to the daughter of a banker, and had always been kept in the bank.

Not long ago the bank changed its quarters and the kitten disappeared. There was a commotion of search, all in vain.

The loss was advertised in all the city papers, with offers of a reward, but with no success. The cat did not come back.

Thereupon the banker's daughter said she would consult the clairvoyant. The banker is a practical man and had no faith in such things, and he forbade it. The girl was not so skeptical, however, and she got one of her friends to make the visit to the soothsayer for her.

This friend went at once, and wrote on the slip of paper the simple question, "Where is the cat?" The clairvoyant went into her usual trance.

"I hear the rattle of money," she said. "There is a great deal of it. It is in a bank."

She went on with some more remarks of that sort and then got down to the business of the cat. The questioner was told to go back to the bank at once, and to go up three flights of stairs to a vacant room at the rear of the building. There the kitten would be found shut in.

Just as soon as the banker's daughter heard the clairvoyant's directions she went back to the bank building and climbed the three flights of stairs. When she neared the vacant room she distinctly heard the kitten meowing.

The door was opened and there was the missing Angora, very thin and hungry. It had been gone for about a week. Now, the banker says, "How the devil did that kitten get there, and how did that woman know it was there?"

There is the case of the Colonel's widow's dog. It is a valuable setter, of which she is very fond. One day it disappeared.

Mrs. Colonel hunted everywhere she could think of. She asked all her friends. She advertised in all the papers, offering a reward, with no questions asked, for the return of the setter. No result. As a last resort she consulted the clairvoyant.

When the preliminaries of the trance had been gone through with, the soothsayer directed the Colonel's widow to take her carriage and drive seven miles out on a certain road which she indicated. At that distance there would be a house, which was carefully described, at the right of the road.

Mrs. Colonel was to stop there and ask for her dog. It would be denied that any such dog was there. Mrs. Colonel was to insist, and, if necessary, force her way into the house. There she would find her dog.

Mrs. Colonel obeyed orders. She drove the seven miles and found the house. When she asked for her dog she was told that there was no dog on the premises. She insisted and made an excuse to get into the house.

The reluctance of the residents to admit her only confirmed her suspicions. She stuck to it and finally got inside. Then she heard the whining of a dog, but could not locate it exactly.

She inquired where it was and was told that it was something else that she heard. By this time her blood was up and she would not be denied.

The whining kept up and grew louder. She finally located it in the cellar and demanded that she be taken there. The people in the house evidently began to be fearful of the results, for they let her go down.

There she found the dog, tied up. She released him and took him home. When the Society for Psychological Research has a day or two off it can come to Binghamton and get all the facts in this case without any trouble whatever.

Within a few days there has occurred the case of the fur circular. It was the property of the mistress of a private school. During the usual fall house cleaning and renovation it was put out on the line in the yard, whence it disappeared.

The owner made the customary hue and cry without finding her circular, and, as almost always happens, suspicion fell on one of the servants. The police were called in, but could do nothing. Then the owner went to see the clairvoyant.

The circular was stolen, was the verdict, but not by one of the servants, as was suspected. It was taken by an extremely dark man, who carried it away. The owner should go home and advertise her loss, offering a reward. On third day of the advertisement the circular would be returned.

The school mistress followed instructions. On the morning of the third day a farmer drove up to the house and inquired for her. When she saw him he began to ask questions about the circular. He had her describe it in minute detail, and when she had finished said:

"Your circular is out in my wagon."

It was, sure enough, the missing circular. When it had been delivered the farmed said he supposed the lady would like to know how it came in his possession. She said she certainly would, and he replied that on the day which she had given as the date of the theft he had bought the circular for $1 from an Armenian who had come to his house with it.

The Armenian had said that his wife had run away with another man, taking everything they had except this circular. It was now no good to him, and he would sell it for a dollar.

The farmer suspected that it had been stolen and thought the owner would be glad to pay a dollar to get it back. So he bought it and waited for the advertisement.

These are some of the more remarkable cases of this clairvoyant's skill in recovering lost or stolen articles. A great many more might be cited.

When it comes to the business of fortune telling there is the same old platitude that is the main stock in trade of most of them, but there is enough of solid fact in such cases as these to set Binghamton people to wondering what is the explanation.

The Churches on Divorce.

The Roman Catholic church, boldly asserted that through its priests it had the sole and exclusive right to legalize marriage, and if this state was entered into otherwise, by forms of state or the officiation of ministers of other denominations, such contracts were null and void. It has held to this arrogant assumption, and Protestant ministers, although receiving their right to officiate at marriages from the state, hold fast to the Catholic idea that marriage is a sacrament, and hence under the control of the church. Hence the constant wail of preachers about the awful state of morals indicated by the prevalence of divorces. Not that the churches care anything about the matter, only when marriages are sanctioned by the priests, they want them indissoluble.

An exchange side by side presents a screed of the Universalists, and the mandate of the Roman Catholic Cardinal Gibbons.

At the general convention of the former recently held at Washington, a resolution was passed condemning in strongest terms the increase of divorces, and counseling ministers to be careful to make inquiries and not join those together whose divorces had objectionable features.

The representative of Catholicism would withhold divorce from the laity. What the infallible priests have joined together must so remain. He grants the privilege for members of his church to mingle in society with those who have been divorced, but they must not accept invitations to the houses of divorced persons, nor invite them to their own homes.

We are not in favor of hasty divorces, nor in hasty marriages, but of two evils, compelling a man and women to live together, when they abhor each other, or allowing them to separate, it seems to us that common sense should maintain the latter course.

The causes which make divorce desirable may be disgraceful to one party, but that should not cast reflection on the other. It should be the object of every married couple to make each other's lives happy and home ideal heaven. But if their home-life becomes the very opposite, and hate takes the place of love, does policy of state or religion demand that because a priest has pronounced them one, they must remain helpless victims to their mistaken choice?

Where is the immorality of such mismated souls being granted divorce? Is it not the height of immorality to hold them in a union so repugnant?

FROM THE N. S. A. OFFICE.

A Card to the Spiritualist Public.

To the Editor and Friends at Large:—It gives me pleasure to again address you from this home office of the National Spiritualists Association, and to extend to you one and all the hearty fraternal greetings and expressions of good will of our board of trustees, and of all connected with this organization. We deeply acknowledge and highly appreciate the grand work of our spiritual press and the ever ready and kindly courtesies extended by the editors in our ranks, toward the N. S. A. and its constituents, and it is with much satisfaction that I hereby publicly announce that at the last N. S. A. convention in Washington, the president and secretary each made special mention of the help constantly received from the spiritual papers, and that the delegates with one accord passed a specific vote of thanks to the editors of each of the spiritual papers for efficient and unfailing service to this association.

It is now my duty to notify the public that the N. S. A. has appointed as special missionaries for the year—under salary, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, and for a specified time, which will probably be extended, Mr. Max O. Gentzke, the able editor of the good German Spiritual paper, Lichtstrahlen. Mr. Gentzke's missionary work will be principally among the Germans, and his addresses are to be mostly delivered in that language. We trust that all who are interested in such work will aid our German missionary in every possible way. He can be addressed in care of the N. S. A. office.

Mr. and Mrs. Kates, who have for two years ably served this association a special missionaries, have decided to abandon that particular line of work for the present, but they may again take it up at a later period. It is quite possible that President Barrett may do much missionary work during the year, under the auspices of the N. S. A. Mr. Geo. H. Brooks, of Illinois, and Mrs. C. E. S. Twing, of New York, have been appointed general missionaries, without compensation from this organization.

Mass-Meetings.

From all that we can gather from different points, there seems to be a demand for mass-meetings in some of the larger cities, and especially where state associations exist; we therefore desire that all societies where there are state associations, that think it feasible to arrange for one mass-meeting or more in the state, during the meeting, to correspond, and co-operate with the managers of the state organizations to the end of holding the meetings mentioned; the N. S. A. will assist in the work, through the state board. In cities where no state association exists, where there seems to be enough enthusiasm and energy to unite in getting up a mass-meeting, the friends are invited to correspond with the N. S. A. secretary at this office, stating their grounds for believing a mass-meeting—or more—could be held in their localities, and pay its expenses, when, and what place, also what talent would be preferred.

Articles on Spiritualism, from the secular and religious publications should be sent to our able editor-at-large, Mr. Hudson Tuttle, of Berlin Heights, O., that he may reply to, or consider the same, if he deems best; our friends everywhere can largely assist Mr. Tuttle in his grand work, by acting upon this suggestion. The work of the editor-at-large last year extended far and wide, and was productive of great good to our cause.

With the opening of a new year of work for the N. S. A., we find much to be accomplished, the officers are united in thought and action, and stand as a unit for effective humanitarian work. Our vice-president, who is widely known for his grand works as president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association—Dr. Geo. B. Warne—is one who can attract and hold the trust of all good Spiritualists, honest men and honest mediums; we need to say no more in his behalf. Our two new trustees, Mr. Grimshaw, of St. Louis, and Mrs. Twing, of New York, are also well-known Spiritualists who honor us by their presence on the board. The work of the new year opens with promises of cheer and success.

Our retiring officers are also entitled to our good words and commendatory thoughts; vice-president, Hon. T. M. Locke, of Philadelphia, ever stood at the post of duty, ready to perform his work, lend his influence and do his part for the betterment of man, and the honor of our cause, we cannot say too much in his praise; Trustees Pruden and Kates also did their work and duty on our board with fidelity and clearness of thought, their judgment sound, and their opinion always expressed in consonance with the principles of integrity.

In the spirit of good will and justice to all, these words are given.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

What Is Religion?

At a recent lecture in Temple Israel, Dr. Emil G. Hirsch gave utterance to some thoughts that make very interesting reading. Among other things he said:

"The inscription, 'At home to Christians from 10 to 12 Sunday mornings, to Jews from 2 to 4 Saturday afternoons,' on a fashionable calling card and signed by the Lord, represents the idea many people have of God.

"So completely have religious ceremonies been placed around the Deity, that many people are afraid to communicate with God except at the appointed hour, for fear the telephone wires might get crossed.

"You might as well ask men to recite odes and idyls extemporaneously as to ask them to pray. Extemporaneous prayer is a gift denied to most men, for it is the highest kind of poetry.

"It is simply insolence to give the Lord information through prayer and then demand the remedy. In many religious centers, when a child is born, or when a girl becomes engaged, or when a boy returns from school on a vacation, they have the minister or priest tell God. This is simply insolence.

"You would not have to walk more than a thousand miles, and you might even enter some Jewish synagogues, and find religion preached as a release from pain, a means of escape from the fear of death. Such people would make religion a kind of opium den where they smoke the pipe and rush the growler. They want to make a kind of soothing sirup. But the dreams pass and the awakening is all the more racking. Pain is not punishment. Were it not for pain the world would still be in the hands of the lowest savages.

"Religion is merely the method to enable man to find himself. It is for all time and all people, in all places."

"LET THERE BE LIGHT."

Mrs. H. P. Russegue brings the light of her inspiration to bear upon this important subject, and illustrates many important points in connection with divine law, vibrations, harmonious thoughts, electrical emanations, science and religion, the Supreme Spirit.

"God said, 'Let there be light,' and there was light."

This we have hosen for our subject to-night.

Who said, let there be light, and how, as the voices rang down the ages, God said let there be light, and there was light, and there is light, and the light is God. Nearly a hundred millions of miles away from the earth lies the center of this great system of planets, from which come to us floating upon ether, obedient to the law that is susceptible of measurement, of recognition, the rays of light that illumine this earth, that point out to us its beauties, its grandeur, its motion, and reveal its revolution. We recognize the fact, that there is a law, that projects from the center of this system a ray of light, that overcomes 93,000,000 miles of space, and can bring to us our knowledge of the relation that exists between this planet and the center of its system, in order that we may know its orbit, its journeys athwart the skies, and we listen to the great rhythm of nature that is singing the harmonies of God's divine laws, and feel that we are close to the great heart of the universe; yet we know, and know well, that these conditions could not exist, were it not that a divine law so tempers us, directs us, adjusts one particle of matter to another, that the vibration that brings to us the knowledge of the distant planet is as true to us as it is to the planet from which emanates the light.

Tesla tells us that a ray of light travels at the rate of 286,000 to 300,000 miles a seond; and yet with all this great rapidity that carries into the objective world, it is true that there is a power more wonderful that transmits thought, the spiritual emanation from the brain of man, over the earth, and he cannot measure how far out into space may be projected. These are forces that can be measured; you can learn the diameter and the circumference of a particle of matter; you can learn how closely these particles are allied to each other; the reason why some are octagonal, others are globular; the reasons why they are so mathematically adjusted one to another, and yet in and through all this knowledge, we are wont to consider these laws Holy, Holy.

Is it not true that any manifestation of power, from whatever source it may emanate, whatever foundation it may rest upon, whatever its beginnings or its ultimates may bring to us, has a force underlying it, that is supreme in its intelligence, creative in its activities, binding in its relationships, loying and tender in its ministrations, and in all these conditions of the outer world, we are able to see the handiwork of a divine law, and that law is spiritual in its attributes, spiritual in its sources, spiritual in its causes, spiritual in its effects, spiritual in its applications to us, spiritual in its associations with everyday common life. These facts science has established as truths that are uncontrovertible. They are truths that time cannot change, that circumstances and evolutions of life can by no means obliterate. They are facts that are born in nature, they are born of a spiritual law, and they are co-existent with Divinity; they are bound within the heart and life and spirit of God, and He commands them, He directs them, and we are the mirrors upon which is reflected the knowledge of His law. This being true, then it becomes our duty that our minds shall be made as clear, as perfect, as unobstructed, that the light shall shine perfectly upon our souls, that we may comprehend the mision of its truths.

Science tells us that in the vibrations of the air, none are of equal length; the vibrations are short and long, they are not of the same dimensions in thickness, they are not of the same dimensions in length, but they are adjusted one to another so perfectly, so accurately, that they bring to us the wonderful message, that when nature, the law and voice of God, is heard sounding through the corridors of nature, and He proclaims let there be light, all nature arises in response to the mandates of His will, and light shines upon us through the natural world. So when truth with all its majestic life falls upon our souls, it has only obeyed that same Divine voice of the Almighty Spirit, that proclaims to our conscience let there be light, and the moment our minds are opened to receive His lessons, His wisdom, His truth, the answer comes from the depths of our natures, and there is light.

So with the influences that go out from the human mind, there is a vibratory law existing between soul and soul. Your influences are going out every moment of your lives. Every heart throb is bearing upon the bosom of the atmosphere about you, its message to your fellow creatures, for good or for evil, for light or for darkness, for shadow or for shine; it is to carry a message for use, for helpfulness and strength, or a message to depress and enslave another life. As the vibrations of the air are changing, changing their position, changing their attitude one to another constantly, under the law in nature, so they are changing under the same law, or use of it revealed.

You cannot think an inharmonious thought, but that you have bred discord in the atmosphere about you, to the full limitation of your spiritual orbit. You cannot think a holy thought, that you are not sending out a helpful giving spirit to the world about you, you are illuminating the atmosphere about your spirit, and you are carrying out to the world an influence for good. How little a man is given to think for a moment, when he is in solitude, he is thinking thoughts that shall help the race, or injure it, that shall give to it help or weakness, that shall be morally helpful or injurious, that shall be physically injurious as well. How little we are given to consider, that all these influences that go out from us are obeying God's mandates.

But you say, you Spiritualists believe in no God, you believe in no Supreme Being, you believe in no divine life, you believe in no lights throned and enthroned in heaven before which we shall bow and worship; and I answer, you know not what you say. You know not what you accuse your fellow creatures of. No man or woman, it matters not how theoretical they may be concerning your faith, no matter how skeptical concerning your spiritual beliefs, if they believe in the Divine law that inheres this universe, that evolves its rays from age to age, and has portrayed the divine majestic spirit through the divine unfoldings of life; any man or woman who recognizes these facts, believes in a divine spirit, believes in a deific law, law in a divine life that must and always will exist for all time to come. Call this what you may, God is simply the term applied to the best you know. To the highest life that you are able to appreciate. To the highest divine condition you are able to measure, to the holiest attributes of goodness, and these things you call God. A Spiritualist, an atheist, the infidel, the religionist, it matters not to what denomination he may attach himself, the moment he realizes and acknowledges the divine, acknowledges a belief in a Supreme Spirit. Thomas Paine, branded as an infidel by theological behest, a man whose life record is one of well doing, a man who stands out in the history of America a bright and shining light, believed in a religion to do. He believed in one God, and that God was all embracing, all loving, all living, all powerful, universal. It is of no account what another man may think of you or of me, providing in that thought we are sending back to him or to her the knowledge of the high appreciation of truth, goodness and love. These are divine attributes, they are emanations of a divine spirit; and if they shine through our lives, so much more for the divinity of our living. Spiritualism brings us to the knowledge of what the light must be, that is best adapted to our needs. If we are spiritually enhungered, we seek the waters of life that flow from the fountain of God. If we are in spiritual darkness, we ask for spiritual enlightenment, and we look outward and upward to find that which shall make more beautiful our lives. Because a Spiritualist, does not make Spiritualism immoral any more than if a Methodist be immoral that Methodism is impure, or because a Calvainist is a criminal, does not incriminate Calvinism. It is only the truth itself, the principle, the spiritual perception, that is measured by the understanding of man, that gives the true status of any truth. The light that we seek most, is the light that shall make life best, that shall reveal to us its best uses, the best purposes to which we can devote our thought, our attention.

The influences that are passing out from every individual are based upon the same law as that which abides in nature. We may call it magnetism. We may call it any thing we please. We may label it electricity. We may label it spiritual force. We may call it by any name we please, it emanates from spirit. It is spiritual influence. It is spiritual truth carrying with it the power for good in every direction. You come in contact with your neighbor. If you are harmoniously related to that neighbor or attracted to him the emanations that pass from you spiritually are measured, and blend with those whom you receive from the friend.

It has been demonstrated by science and the instruments that science has created, that the electrical emanations from human beings are so forcible, so direct, so tangible, that they may be calculated, as you may calculate a mathematical problem, how they will reach you, and how you can impel them, the forces that attract them, and the forces that repel them, and they go on and are blending your influences for any good purpose.

You are all aware in daily experiences that if two, or ten, or one hundred men work harmoniously, your desires are better, your influences are more effective, your work is more conducive of good results, brings forth better ultimates, and you can establish the results of your undertakings with greater protection. If there be one inharmonious mind present, sending out the emanations from that mind to influence the plans you formulate, and you move on in an inharmonious atmosphere, you fail in the accomplishment of your desires, and why? Simply because in the one instance the influences are moving on with a mighty force, and the obstructions are taken away; while in the other instance, you are obstructed, and the emanations of your mind become entangled, one with another, with the discordant conditions to which they are subjected. These conditions are spiritual, they are intellectual, they are magnetic, they are electric, they embrace the law that holds man to man, and governs the relations of the human races. They are forces that every man should acquaint himself with, and the results that have come to scientific inquirers in the last centuries have given them a knowledge that Spiritualism has brought us to a higher plane of living, doors have opened to the mysteries, the human mysteries, that miracles have ceased, and the law has adjusted itself to human beings, until you are learning the reasons why these things exist.

Every family practically demonstrates these truths. You will find in a family of eight or ten members there are always some of the family who do not agree with you. Why? Because temperaments differ, because associations differ, because others have a different comprehension of the same truths, and the consequence is, that there will be a discordant condition that will bring you either to a more careful investigation of causes, or an abandonment of many plans which you have undertaken. On the other hand, if your minds are attracted to the causes of these conditions, and you recognize why discord is discovered in your midst, you will soon find the way to adjust them to a more harmonious atmosphere, and remove the foundations upon which discord rests, and the consequence will be to bring you better conditions. What must be the ultimate of these things?

I will tell you.

The human race is one family. The Father of that family is God. All men, whether of this age or any age who have lived, or whoever will live, are subject to that divine law, are subject to the behest of that divine intellect, that divine spirit that is evolving itself through the human progress of the race, and is becoming grander, mightier, more potent, in all his laws through the human being.

There is in our lives a broader, higher, and deeper knowledge of God than ever dwelt in human consciousness before. God is nearer to the heart of man because he has lost his personality. He is the universal spirit, the breath of life, the foundation and summit of all the universe or universes that exist, and in this knowledge we are coming nearer to the spirit, because its omnipresence is beheld through its great handiwork through all nature, throughout all life. God's spirit is the bridge of light that sheds abroad its rays over the earth, and the children of men are climbing to loftier heights of knowledge, wisdom, peace and love, nearer to the heart of the divine life. God is here, as everywhere, a power that is unfolding itself continually.

The day has come when science and religion no longer wage war with each other. They are at one with each other. One is but the reflector of the other, the administrator of the law. Science is only the hand of God writing upon all life his law, and revealing his purposes through his creating power. We have looked upon God as a created being, upon man as a created individual, because we have measured his life by the limitations of the body. There is no limitation upon the souls of men. There is no limitation upon the intellect of man. There is no condition in heaven or on earth denied to the understanding of man. The moment his mind has so enlarged, has so awakened to the spiritual presence, he is able to comprehend its import. It is important to-day that men think of their spiritual natures in such a manner as shall teach them that all things, whether low or high, whether they are gross or fine, whether they are in ignorance or in wisdom, the germ of the highest is in the lowest; the germ of the divine no man can annihilate, and it is our duty to find that power, and make the best condition possible of its development. The spiritual life of man again goes out in his conduct in such a way that it is felt and seen of men. Why you think not.

In your daily associations you meet a man, and you like or dislike him. How common it is to say, "I have taken the measure of such a man and I want nothing to do with him." How do you do it? The spiritual vibration of that man's life did not accord with yours, and you resisted him, and therefore judged him as an accountable being for the life he was living, accountable to conflict with you, and you resented his approach. On the other hand, you meet a man, and in his case you say you like him, "I trust him, I believe in him." Why? It is not the beauty of the man's speech. It is not because his pulse is in accord with yours. It is not because his features attract your admiration. It is because the spiritual vibration that vibrates from his soul accords with yours, and you judge the better side of him, because your spiritual influences blend with him, and you are spiritually attracted to each other. These are the laws that govern human relations, and they are the laws that you should understand more. Then the laws that so emphatically influence, that are so wisely talked of among men, would be more understood, if they could be applied for helpfulness and strength.

The psychological relations between man and man are so well marked, and so well defined, that the instruments in the hands of scientific men could tell, not by the color of your eyes or hair, but could tell by the emanations that are magnetic, that are from your heart and from your mind and from your spirit. For instance, two men that come together, both opposites, both opposed to each other's ideas, how do they meet? They meet directly opposite to opposite, and reproach each other. On the other hand, if they will meet, to blend their influences, there is a successive union and going forward on the part of both. So in families, so between men and women, children and parents, friend and friend, society, business, religion, commerce, everywhere, if these laws are understood, the world is richer, stronger, better, and there will come to you that light that leads to "peace on earth, good will toward men."

A STUDY IN THEOLOGY.

The Saint Speaks.

Praise to the Lord who saves my sinful soul
Safe while the ages roll!
Not through my deeds, nor any worth of mine,
But lifted high to shine
Through the full ransom of His slaughtered Son
Slain for sins yet undone.
Praise for my safety, Lord. All praise to Thee
Who graciously didst free
My soul from every sin and bade me stand
At thy right hand
And see the throng of sinners hurled below
To endless woe!
Oh, joy, to sing throughout the changeless days
Loud songs of praise
Before the Judge who turns away His wrath
And mercy hath
To save me for His glory; while black hell
Seethes with the pain of sinful souls that fell.

I see, amid the unredeemed throng
Children, span long.
My own, perchance. But I am safe above,
Rescued by love.
For honor or dishonor He made all—
Some doomed to fall
To show the greatness of His mercy given
Those saved for heaven.
Foredoomed to howl in quenchless flame to prove
His wondrous love
For the select few, destined ere the earth
First sprung to birth,
To all the glories of His heavenly place,
Saved by His grace.
The awful throne of wrath I bow before
All trembling to adore
Thee, mighty Ruler, God of torments dire,
The while my sinful kindred shriek in fire.

The Sinner Speaks.

"I can never be happy in heaven," she said.
"I hear through the anthems of praise
A cry from the depths, a sound of despair
From God's forgotten in torment there,
And the hymns that the ransomed raise
Are a broken music to me," she said.

"I take no joy in their heaven," she said,
"For my heart was ever a human thing
And it clung to the woeful ones of earth.
It has not changed in this newer birth.
I hear their grief though the angels sing.
I am sad for the souls in hell," she said.

"I have no place in this heaven," she said.
"I lean to them o'er the bitter bar.
The bliss and glory are all in vain
For my heart is rent with their hopeless pain
Prisoned in hell's black bonds afar,
And I am bound with their bonds," she said.

"I turn from your holy heaven," she said,
"For my soul yearns down to the lost and lone.
I choose to suffer. I cannot pray
While the lost ones call me. I cast away
My crown immortal and waiting throne
Because of the souls in hell," she said.

Base Assaults by Catholics on the Public Schools

THE CONFLICT OPENS.

The Citizen, of Boston, has frequently of late called attention to the increasing boldness of the utterances of Cardinal Gibbons and the bishops and priests of Rome in their attacks upon the American public school. In fact, they have become so bold that even the daily press is beginning to notice it. The Springfield Republican, commenting upon Gibbons' recent attack, says:

"There has been of late a renewed attack—nothing at all formidable, to be sure—upon the American public school system because of its 'godlessness;' or, as its friends would say, the absence of positive religious teaching. The Republican has no sympathy with assaults of this character upon the present state system of education.

"Take the state of Massachusetts, where the public school system has has reached as high a development as in any American commonwealth. What is the condition of Massachusetts today in the matter of crime? Homicides have decreased steadily in the past thirty years, and if this is not a favorable test of civilization, what is? Just over the Massachusetts boundary line there is a Rhode Island manufacturing city, Woonsocket, that on June 21 last had not had a single case of manslaughter in fifteen years. Having an exceptionally large percentage of factory population, that city's record is extraordinary. Of serious offences, too, aside from homicide, it has had remarkably few in the period mentioned. The case of Woonsocket is cited in this connection because in its educational system it is no different from the cities in our own commonwealth. If 'godless' schools are held responsible for crime and barbarism, where they flourish rankly, then the same kind of schools must be given credit for such phenomenal instances of the absence of serious crime as the Rhode Island city represents."

The Republican then goes on to show from official figures, that criminality is much less in Massachusetts than in certain countries where the schools are "church schools."

Commenting upon the above, the Standard, of Cincinnati, remarks:

"Those who are even passably informed on the methods of the papal dictatorship need not be told that the hierarchy never begins a move until it is ready, nor until the public is at least partially won. There could be no better sign that the outposts of Protestantism are believed to be captured, than an open declaration of its purpose by the Roman See. The one safeguard on which Protestants have depended more than on anything else, is free speech and an independent press. That this fortress has been captured, The Standard has been proving by example, showing that our secular press papers are open to all that favors the Catholic hierarchy and closed to all that is in opposition to it.

"Now, the press on which the Protestants of this Protestant country have placed their dependence, having fallen into the hands of the enemy, it takes no ghost come from the grave to tell that this advantage will be followed up, and naturally the first assault is on our public school system, with which the Catholic church has always quarreled, and which it has always declared was usurpation of the sole right of the Catholic church to supervise all education. Such is its contention now, and its first effort is to break down the character of its enemy—to keep alive its infamous slander against 'godless' schools. What the 'godly' schools of Catholicism are doing for God and humanity is seen in the one fact that in nearly every capital offence, punished on the gallows, the criminal is attended in his last hours by a Catholic priest.

"What Catholic education really is may be seen in the hordes of Catholics that come to this country from Italy, Austria, Hungary and other Catholic countries, and do more to degrade the standard of public morals than all native causes put together. What has put American morality so high above all foreign countries but our public schools, and where is there a country in the world, not blessed with a Protestant school system, that is not on an infinitely lower plane of morals and intelligence? The Catholic schools of this country, poor as they are, are infinitely better than in any other part of the world, simply because they can not otherwise face the light of day, alongside of our Protestant system. France herself, a Catholic country, has been forced to protect her children from the schools of the Catholic orders. And it is these so-called 'educators' who propose to supplant in free America the 'godless' schools which have been our bulwark against their superstition and mummeries.

"But the hierarchy has gone further than to assail our godless schools. It now assails the cardinal principles of our American Constitution, and through Archbishop Elder, of Cincinnati, openly proposes to divide the public schools among the various religious bodies, permitting the parents of the children to decide by majority vote in whose hands each school shall be placed. In a long 'interview,' evidently prepared for the purpose of furthering the scheme, Mr. Elder argues at great length this un-American, unpatriotic and reactionary measure.

"It is evident that the time has come for the war to begin on the public schools, and that, preliminary to that war, the secular papers, that ought to be their boldest champions, the so-called 'free' press, has been stricken dumb. While heralding the Catholic prelate's scheme to the word with every token of approval, the Times-Star has not one word to say against it, though it is an attack on a vital principle of our Government. No other secular paper has a word to say against it. Should Protestant writers or Protestant conventions protest against it, no doubt the protest will go to the waste basket.

The outworks have been captured.

BONE OF CONTENTION.

The Existence of a Man Named Jesus has been vehemently affirmed, and equally emphatically denied. Ancient libraries have been searched and high spirits consulted, in the endeavor to settle the vexed question, but it will not "settle," and the world will remain "at sea" in regard to this name which has figured so largely in the world's history.

LIFE OF CHRIST.

EVIDENCE AS TO THE LIFE OF CHRIST HELD INCONCLUSIVE.

Maintains There Is No Trustworthy Writing on Record to Substantiate That Anyone Ever Saw Jesus or Heard Him Speak.

I did make the statement by implication, as T. Darley Allen asserts, that the evidence tending to establish the actual personality of the Jesus of the gospel narratives is, to say the least, very meager and inconclusive.

That there was 1900 years ago a man by the name of Jesus, who went about doing good, it is not my intention to deny. Indeed, Jesephus refers to more than one person of the same name. We are, for the present, specifically concerned only with Mr. Allen's theological creation, "unique in biographical literature"—that stupendous individual's career—Jesus Christ as delineated in the gospels.

"History," says Judge Ladd, "in order to be entitled to credit, must have been written contemporaneously with the events narrated therein, or taken from writings made at that time, and it must or should be known who the writers were, that they were men of credibility."

Test of Reason.

In judging of truth and falsehood, there is but one accepted standard—man's reason, as applied through the various channels of intelligence. Civilized nations are such just so far as they apply this rule to all matters pertaining to life; a lack of it makes the savage. The truth of all history stands or falls by this application and this alone.

Under established rules of evidence, then, is there any fact about the birth, life and death of Christ that shines through the night of the past? What is the truth? Simply this: Not a single word can be found in any trustworthy writing which was written by a person who ever saw Jesus or heard him speak. The history of Christianity for the first century is almost a blank. The only record of his supposed life on earth is found in the gospels, in certain epistles ascribed to Paul, in certain statements by the earliest "fathers," in certain legends contained in the miscellaneous portions of the Talmud, and in a very few allusions by pagan writers. But not one of these sources is contemporary with the career of Jesus.

Is Position Tenable?

The "celebrated passage" in Josephus, which was long considered the chief evidence in the case, Mr. Allen is candid enough to admit, is not a subject for discussion. But, like Paley, whom he quotes, he believes that in the silence of Josephus concerning Jesus he has suppressed something. When we consider that the question of immortality is and ever was one of equal interest to all the human race, their position seems hardly tenable.

Matthew's statement that "many bodies of the saints which slept arose and came out of the graves after His resurrection and went into the Holy City and appeared unto many," should have been hailed with gladness. The enigma of the ages would have been settled beyond dispute. Whatever degree of prejudice might have existed among the enemies of Jesus, there was nothing to hinder the recognition of that company of resuscitated citizens, and the promulgation of the glad tidings of their continued existence. Yet, beyond that daring assertion of Matthew, there is not a word in any record.

As to Miracles.

Perhaps we should hesitate in deeming it strange that historians should omit to record the remarkable event, since "no reference is made to the miracles of Christ by any writer, Christian, heathen or Jewish, until nearly a hundred years after they are said to have been performed."—(Waite's "History.")

Mr. Allen affirms that the pagan writers, Tacitus, (A. D. 100), Pliny (A. D. 110), and Suetonius (A. D. 90) furnished "sufficient proof." Hardly; such an extraordinary event as the trial and crucifixion purports to have been should be proved by an extraordinary amount of evidence. Tactitus does not testify to the crucifixion, nor to anything about the Christians' origin or early history, any more than he does about the deities or heroes of any myth or superstition which he records from the stories which came to him from their adherents.

William Addis, M. A., in his "Christianity and the Roman Empire," speaking of Tacitus and Suetonius, says they show by their brief and contemptuous notices that they knew little about Christianity and cared less.

Light as to Acts.

Pliny's "letter" is interesting from the fact that here true history introduces, for the first time, the Christians to us. But not a word about the crucifixion. All that these writers say, nearly a century after the event, is an echo that cannot touch the question under discussion.

"What better evidence for the truth of the New Testament could be desired (?) than is afforded by the gospels and apostolic acts?" asks Mr. Allen. Indeed! It is stated in the religious encyclopedia of McClintock and Strong that one of the Greek manuscripts of the New Testament, the one called "Codex Bezae," or the Cambridge manuscript, "is chiefly remarkable for its bold and extensive interpolations, amounting to over 600 in the Acts alone."—(Article Cambridge MS.)

When were the acts of the apostles written? Let Rev. Dr. Davidson, the Christian writer, answer: "We cannot go further back than Irenaeus with certainty. * * * There is nothing in the apostolic fathers nor in any work anterior to the 'Letters of the Churches of Vienna and Lyons,' written probably soon after 177 A. D., to prove the existence of the Acts." And that "it has to be noticed that the earliest testimony is more than 100 years later than the events described in the Acts. We have also to take into account that Irenaeus was not critical." Do we not "desire" better evidence? When were the gospels written? It is admitted by many Christian scholars that 69 A. D. is much too early. Have we the testimony of eyewitnesses? Not at all.

Evidence Held Lacking.

"The Kingdom of God," written by Alexander Balman Bruce, D. D., professor of N. T. exegesis at Glasgow, contains this: "It would inspire great confidence in the synoptical records to be assured that they were compiled by certain of the men who had been with Jesus. But there is no sufficient evidence that any one of the first three gospels, in the form in which we have them, proceeded from the hand of an apostle. The most that can be said is that their reports are based on apostolic traditions, preserved either orally or in written form."

Taking into consideration, too, the many errors and contradictions, that they "were cradled in an uncritical age," compiled by incompetent witnesses, and their open confession of "pious frauds," who will claim in the face of this—persons acquainted with the veriest rudiments of evidence—that the gospels were produced under auspices that involved anything like historical accuracy?

BOOK REVIEW.

Koradine. A Prophetic Story. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D., and Lida Hood Talbot.

Wisely planned and well executed is this volume, the product of two brains working together as one, for the accomplishment of a most worthy object. It is especialy designed to be instructive and helpful to the coming motherhood in the matters that pertain to the sacred elements and functions incident to the growing girl. The lessons taught are presented in the form of a story that of itself is very interesting.

The book is highly commendable in its purpose, and is worthy of wide circulation. Price $1.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Defended Against an Evangelist's Aspersions.

Rev. F. A. Strough, Evangelist, Cincinnati, Ohio:—

My Dear Sir:—The telgraphic news of last Sunday's proceedings gives you credit with the statement that the late Robert G. Ingersoll committed suicide; that the death of that distinguished gentleman was not caused by heart-failure, as indicated by report current following his demise. Such statement, coming as it does from a supposed expounder of "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth," is more than a surprise and extremely illogical to any sane mind familiar with the life and teachings of that learned agnostic.

Col. Ingersoll's teachings, no matter whether they were right or wrong, were resultant from his own brain reasoning—a gift-power of God Almighty—and not reproductions of thought from the mythical past. Albeit to his credit, he was honest in whatever method of expression he employed. His life was useful and beneficial to his fellowman from early boyhood until the time of his departure for that (then to him unknown) realm of existence from which he now gives evidence of continuity of life.

While among us, Mr. Ingersoll's home was a bower of bliss, and the ties cemented under its protecting roof were clean, pure and sublime—unexcelled for virtue and refinement by any, and not equaled by many. All the beauties and blessings of life on earth were realized and enjoyed by the Ingersoll family and the extensive chain of friends with whom they fraternized.

The present was all that tender-hearted, sympathetic, loving, kindly Bob Ingersoll knew about. He believed in and practiced the art of making the most and best use of his now! The home, where happiness was complete, was his heaven! and as a ministering angel unto a psychologized and suffering world he dispensed kindness in messages of peace unto the souls of millions, who are yet happy in their liberation from the slavery that once obtained!

Without knowing more than he did concerning his future, and honestly advocating his peculiar belief, why should he have sought his end in an unnatural manner? The thought, much more the expression of it, is ridiculous in the extreme! I am curious to know what reason you may have assigned, reverend sir, as a cause for this unwarranted act? Surely crime was not chargeable to his account! Ill health was not his to complain of! Having lived an exemplary private and public life, the cause of the rash deed was certainly not attributable to the compunctions of conscience? Hence, again the question, Why?

As an evangelistic religionist, you, sir, should be a thoughtfully honest man—aiming to avoid utterance of any statement at first or second-hand, without at least endeavoring to analyze both its meaning and effect. Harm is sure to follow such failure, as is, or should be known by all of your calling especially.

In life, Mr. Ingersoll frequently expressed a wish that his finale might be terminated speedily. His wish, or prayer was answered naturally, the calumnious falsehood which you have uttered to the contrary notwithstanding! Believing you to be in ignorance of the real truth, and attributing to yourself the characteristic of honest manliness, it is with the hope of inducing retraction of this base slander that I thus address you, in the cause of Love, Truth and Justice.

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. O. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all afflictions of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists, and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of 'Actina' is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eyes from an operation."

Mr. F. W. Harwood, Springfield, Mass., says that "Actina" cured him of deafness of nine years' standing.

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old.

Robert Baker, Ocean Park, Cal., writes: "I should have been blind had I Not used "Actina."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T.B., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS. Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Mrs. Alice Gehring is now located at 7891 Winneconna avenue, Chicago.

Dr. J. H. Randall will lecture for the Spiritualists in Watervliet, Mich., Saturday evening, and twice on Sunday, Nov. 21 and 22, to which Spiritualists and all in favor of free-thought along all lines that will help to usher in the higher civilization are invited to attend.

Mr. Cochonour, by reason of sickness the last two Sundays, was not able to fill her engagement with the First Spiritual Church.

Mrs. A. Bassford, an aged Spiritualist, has returned from Quincy, Ill., to her daughter here in Chicago, Miss E. L. Worth, the medium. They are residing at 516 W. Madison street.

Mrs. Bartaw Stewart, aged 86 years, and a pensioner of the war of 1812, is critically ill at Greentown, Ind., and her death is expected before many days. In anticipation of the event she has laid aside her best dress for a burial robe and set aside a sum of money out of her savings, although the law provides $50 for her burial. Mrs. Stewart is a remarkable character. She can recite 500 hymns and quote liberally from the scriptures. But up to the time her children started to school she could neither read nor write. Her memory has returned in a strong degree in age and hymns long forgotten she can repeat now as clearly as if learned yesterday. She is a woman of great spirituality and no trial, however severe, provokes a complaint. For five years her sight has been so bad that she could only faintly perceive the strongest light. Now she can distinguish the figures on the wall paper. During the time she was blind she did not lay aside her labors as a weaver of rugs and mats. Her grand children told her the colors of the pieces and placed them as she directed. Mrs. Stewart attributes her conversion to a dream which left an impression for life. In her dream she thought she saw a door open and God was on his knees reaching for her and saying, "Come now or never."

Mrs. J. W. Getson writes: "October 18, Chesaning (Mich.) Spiritual Society and friends listened to a very interesting lecture delivered by Dr. Knowles of Grand Rapids. The lecture was followed by tests, which could not fail to deeply impress his hearers with the truth of Spiritualism. The society hopes to secure his services again some time in December, as a great many outside of the society are anxious to listen to him."

By the aid of a clairvoyant, Shan Smith, clerk in the Nethercutt grocery, has recovered possession of a watch which he lost several days ago. It was a few days ago that Smith missed his timepiece and, being unable to find it, and of a speculative frame of mind, he called in the clairvoyant one day and asked him to find the watch. The clairvoyant replied he could find it and would. He asked many questions, as to Smith's parents, his habits and peculiarities, then left the store. He announced he would confine himself in a dark room and after so long a time would be able to tell Smith where the watch was. He left the store and Monday returned. He said he had located the hiding place of the timepiece and demanded his money for his services. He was told the money would be forthcoming if the watch was found, and the clairvoyant hurried to the ice chest of the grocery. In the darkness he groped about the place and finally brought to light the watch. It had evidently fallen from Smith's pocket while he was using the ice chest and had laid on the floor for several days. How the clairvoyant came to find the watch is a mystery, but Smith and other employes of the grocery vouch for the story.—Logansport (Ind.) Journal.

Mrs. Davenport writes from Hopedale, Mass.: "I have lived 83 years on this planet. I have made as many mistakes as others, so I do not intend to criticise them. I believe in God, as my heavenly Father, and that he loves his children, and has made them free moral agents. Each ones makes his own heaven or hell."

The Times of Detroit, Mich., has the following dispatch from Muskegon: "Mrs. Ellen Leonard was shot and killed by Charles H. Easton. The murderer gave himself up and is in jail. The tragedy occurred at the home of Easton's aged father, whose housekeeper the dead woman was. The murderer had been turned out of the house a week before by the old man on account of drunkenness, and he asserted that Mrs. Leonard's influence had turned his father against him. He explained after his arrest that he thought she was preparing to turn the old gentleman out of his home also, after securing his property. The father and Mrs. Leonard were in the dining-room when Easton appeared with a revolver. Mrs. Leonard ran into a nearby bedroom when she saw the weapon in Easton's hand, but he followed her and fired two shots into her brain. The murderer is a prominent Spiritualist here, and says that he was told of the coming tragedy some weeks ago. He had all arrangements made to leave, the spirits failing to add that he would be arrested."

Isa Wilson Kayner, the well-known medium, is now located at Grand Junction, Colo. She is succeeding well in her work there, and has started a Children's Progressive Lyceum. She will make engagements for lectures and tests in near-by towns during week-days. Address her at Grand Junction, 145 West White, Col.

The Chicago Chronicle of Nov 3, says: "Springfield, Ill., Nov. 2.—Governor Yates this afternoon honored the requisition for Henry W. Baker, under arrest in Chicago and wanted at Boston on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. The requisition is not operative, however, until Judge Kavanagh passes on the habeas corpus case pending before him. Baker is a clairvoyant and is accused of receiving $500 from a woman in Boston under promise to invest it so as to return 100 per cent interest every thirty days."

C. M. Carter writes: "Allow me to say that I have investigated spirit photography sufficiently to be thoroughly convinced of its reality. While Mr. Weylie, the photo-medium of Los Angeles, Cal., was in Seattle, I went to his studio and had two sittings. On one picture there are two spirit faces, and three on the other. Two of the five I recognize, while the other three have many features of familiarity. In regard to the much discussed subject, The Great Psychological Crime, I will say that, limited as have been my opportunities of investigating Spiritualism, it has been sufficient to give me that grand exalted satisfaction that my hungered soul had so long ached for, and could not find through any other line of research."

An authoritative work on dreams has been published in Vienna, the author being Dr. Sigmund Freud, a distinguished scientist, and one of the best known specialists in Europe on the subject of nervous diseases. Dr. Freud has been studying dreams for years, and he now gives to the public the conclusions at which he has arrived in regard to their origin and significance. He maintains that there are certain psychological rules by means of which dreams can be interpreted, and, furthermore, that each dream, after a proper study, will be found to be connected in some way with the daily life, or, rather, with the thoughts of the dreamer while awake. According to him all the material out of which our dreams are woven was at one time a part of our experience. In other words, in our dreams we only see sights and persons with whom we have been or are in some way acquainted. Our nightly visions have ever been shrouded in mystery, and Dr. Freud admits that it may take us a long time to discover their significance. The events that occur during one's childhood, says Dr. Freud, furnish a vast amount of material for the dreams of later years, and the sway which such dreams exercise over grown persons may be illustrated by many stories. Moreover, we should never lose sight of the fact that dreams very often show the fulfillment of our desires. On this point Dr. Freud repeatedly lays stress, and at the same time he claims that the language of dreams would be better understood if their function in this respect had not been lost sight of.

Mrs. Ella Dare writes: "The Progressive Thinker is certainly accentuating the vitality of its name these days when multitudinous opinions are speaking in its columns. May the awakening be salutary."

Mrs. May Elmo has returned to the city and will be pleased to meet friends at her home, 40 East 31st street. She will hold public seances every Friday evening and Wednesday afternoon. Sunday meetings at Atheneum Building, 26 Van Buren street.

Dr. Beverly writes: "At Lakeside Hall some were turned away last Sunday evening for want of room. They came to hear Dr. Peebles previous to his departure for California. The Doctor was in fine spirits, and his talk for an hour was highly appreciated. Some came as far as fifty miles to hear our veteran echo the truth once more in his fearless way. Mrs. Dr. See had an extra crowd also in the afternoon. Dr. Temple, of Washington, D. C., was present to give tests and all were delighted for he is a fine psychic. During the New Thought Convention we expect President Barrett and others to speak for us."

Mrs. Mary C. Von Kanzler writes from Rochester, N. Y.: "There is much interest manifested, and the members of the First Spiritualist Church are encouraged. A lady (a veteran Spiritualist) has but lately gone into spirit life, and in her will she has left a bequest for four thousand dollars or more for the benefit of our cause in this city. The endowment is a gift to the First Spiritualist Church for this purpose. This season's meetings have been ministered to by Mrs. Messersmith, Mrs. Grenamyer and this present month by your correspondent. I hear much in praise of both the former ladies for their good works while here as speakers and mediums for this society."

Geo. H. Smith sends the following message from the spirit Bishop Dunkin, through Mrs. Gehring: "My Dear Friend George: I am very happy to come, and in this way respond to the many kind thoughts which have been borne to me on the inflow of the magnetic tide. After coming to this side, and my surprise had settled into order, I found my own place in this wonderful world of real living ties. I am satisfied. I would not exchange my home here for the grandest one on earth. My only regret is that I did not give more earnest study and observation to spiritual development while in the body. I now have opportunity to learn under wise and proficient teachers. Surrounded by new and more heavenly scenes, and associations, I find my spirit expanding and my soul elevated. I am stimulated with a holy desire to possess more knowledge of life, and its controlling laws. We are blessed with every opportunity for improvement and unfoldment. I never feel a need that is not supplied, and I never know a want which is beyond our power to obtain. All desires flow harmoniously with the will of wisdow. Now I send my soul's warmest love, and waft you a blessing from the eternal life. I now return to my higher home and its lofty duties. Be brave and patient to work and wait, and we will have many happy talks when you join us on this side."

E. D. Vandergrift writes from Springfield, Mo.: "The Brilliant Star White Cross Society has organized in this city with 34 members, with Mrs. Payton as speaker. We would be pleased to hear from some good trumpet medium."

Mrs. Scott Briggs writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "On the evening of the 5th, in commemoration of the late Mrs. Sarah Cook, C. V. Miller held a benefit seance and $45 was the result. Mr. Miller is always ready to give his services in times of trouble."

Rochester (Ind.) Sentinel: "It will be just as well for the cause of religion if the ministers of the gospel let Jesse McClure, the murderer of his own children, severely alone. He is not insane and the fiend who deliberately shoots the life out of his own innocent little children ought to be given punishment of the severest kind rather than flowers and prayers. This thing of strewing the pathway of cold-blooded murderers with flowers and chanting heavenly melodies to them only adds attraction to the curse of murder and we would have fewer lynchings if such attentions were prohibited." In connection with the above the Rochester Republican says: "The above is good sense. It is the doctrine the Republican has enunciated for the past fifteen years and we still contend that the teaching which says 'while the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return,' is a dangerous proposition. When the clergy discontinue preaching 'forgiveness of sins" and enlighten the minds of men on the natural law of compensation, that 'whatsoever ye sow that shall ye also reap,' that if theft, rape, murder, suicide and other heinous crimes are committed there is no power in heaven or earth that will forgive the perpetrator, that will wash him 'white as wool' and send him onward and upward with a harp and a crown to sing praises with the blest, then will there be fewer simpering, shivering, senseless McClures to inflict the world with cussedness. We have been told by men who knew McClure in his boyhood days, and the fact are, that he is possessed of a vicious temper he has cultivated rather than controlled. The young man who will lie down in anger and wildly curse God, profaning, blackguarding and villifying, as McClure has done, is a fool who is allowing his disposition to lead him in the path toward the gallows or the felon's cell. We quite agree with the Sentinel. McClure has lived his life of wrath, selfishness, brutishness and murder, now let him stand up like a man and face the consequences, asking quarter from neither God nor man, and personally strive to undo his great wrong through the rolling ages that will wrap him in silence, solitude and sorrow."

Mrs. Hooker McEvoy writes from Boulder Creek, California: "More than a year has passed since I sent in my last communication regarding my spiritual work. I hope my silence will not be taken for proof of idleness, for on the contrary I have been in the midst of a great harvest of souls—souls who were floundering like a ship without a rudder. To such Spiritualism was like a beacon light, held in the hands of the angelic host. Owing to illness I left my work unfinished in Sacramento in July and came here to Boulder Creek for a rest in the Santa Cruz mountains—a most perfect place for health. Aug. 9, I again began lecturing, teaching and healing, and found many of the Boulder people who were ready for spiritual Spiritualism, and all of its grand philosophy. I gave many lectures on the street in the evenings, thus getting a a chance to teach the working men who do not attend the churches. I am glad to say that I found many who were liberalists and socialists, hence they were ready for Spiritualism. Socialism and Spiritualism are but little understood by the people, hence are not appreciated and endorsed as thoroughly as they should be. Ignorance is hard to educate and slow to awaken, yet time with her seasons of eternal progressive stages will awaken all and quicken them in action. I shall soon return to Oakland, the paradise city, for a short stay with friends and co-workers, and then back to Sacramento to resume my unfinished work there. The itinerant workers find many inconveniences in their travels, but in the end they derive much satisfaction from the result of their work. Otherwise they could not endure and keep moving on steadfast in the truth of ever progressive eternal life ever standing for the liberty of every soul in the universe."

R. C. Quay writes from Williamsport, Pa.: "The spiritual labor being done here through the inspirational powers of Charles Theo. Schneider surpasses any worker I ever heard. His labor, which is with skeptics, through his clairvoyant and clairaudient powers accomplishes a grand work. His last night's lecture on Soul Culture, was delivered with face transfigured and eyes illuminated. Tests were recognized, mingled with rejoicing and tears."

Aug. Recht writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "It gives me great pleasure to state that Mr. Jacob Rassmussen, the president of the Society of Spiritual Truth, (Crosby Hall, 423 Classon avenue) and Mrs. Carrie Gerlach were married Nov. 4 at the home of Rev. Frank Mason. Our society is in a very flourishing condition and the audiences are intelligent and appreciative. The platform was occupied Nov 8 by Dr. J. Wyman, Mrs. Henderson and Mr. Rasmussen gave a number of tests."

V. Fell, M. D., writes: "In your last issue I notice with interest the brief note of Bro. O. M. Ambler, relative to efforts to increase the circulation of your (or rather, our) Progressive Thinker, for, after taking it from its birth, and having specially endeavored to increase its circulation by handing it to my neighbors, and sending it by mail to my friends as well as sending in lists of names occasionally to the office, I can't get rid of the idea that it partly belongs to me, and I to it. How I wish for the success of our beautiful philosophy, and that every subscriber would do likewise. It will pay you big, my brother and sister Spiritualists, to follow my example in this regard. In a retrospect of the past 84 years of my life, but few recollections give me more pleasure than does the thought of my having aided to extend the circulation of your (I should say our) excellent Progressive Thinker, and no paper or periodical affords me as much interest and comfort as I get in its perusal. I think I voice the sentiment of all Washington Spiritualists in saying that the late N. S. A. convention, in increasing the salary of its excellent secretary, Mrs. M. T. Longley, did well. Her labors have been very heavy, giving her little chance for recreation, but every duty has been faithfully met, although draughts have not unfrequently been made on her time in the way of lectures, to the delight of her Washington friends."

E. B. Hardenburg writes from Grand Junction, Colo.: "Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner still holds two meetings a week, Sunday and Thursday evenings, and great interest is being awakened. Being the first Spiritualist medium who has ever delivered a series of lectures here, she has had many obstacles to overcome, but is doing grand, good work. Her public and private work has proved to so many the return of dear ones that she has many followers now, and will no doubt leave a large membership for a society should one be organized. The people will try to keep Mrs. Kayner all winter at least, for the interest is increasing rapidly."

E. B. Estes, 904½ Tacoma avenue, Tacoma, Wash., writes: "As president of Tacoma Spiritualist Church, I would kindly request you to put any of the good mediums and lecturers headed this way in communication with us, as we are very much in need of a good medium; in fact, this state as a whole I consider a good field for a few more good mediums."

Hatfield Pettibone is at present located at Petersburg, Illinois.

Wm. Broadie writes from New Orleans: "The Temple of Light Spiritual Association has been disbanded and reorganized under the name of the New Orleans Association of Spiritualists (chartered by the state), with Mr. F. V. Muller as president. Mrs. Nellie S. Baade, of Detroit, Mich., is occupying the platform in a very creditable manner, to good audiences, nearly taxing the seating capacity of the hall. Meetings are held every Sunday and Wednesday at 8 p. m., at Typographical Union Hall, 321 Camp street."

Mrs. I. A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society wishes to announce that our friend and brother, Dr. J. M. Green, has promised to speak for us for four consecutive Sundays, beginning Nov 22. His subject for that evening will be 'The Spiritualism of Tennyson's In Memoriam.' Meetings held at Alliance Hall, 328 East 55th street, at 7:45 p. m. Anyone who has ever heard Dr. Green's talks, knows what to expect; one of the most soul-uplifting and spiritual often heard. Don't miss hearing him; it will do you good. He is a Congregational minister, but preaches good Spiritualism. Now don't forget to keep our bazaar in mind also, and wait to buy your Christmas presents of us."

The Lynn (Mass.) Spiritualists Association will entertain visitors from neighboring societies at Cadet Hall, Saturday, Nov. 28! Services will commence at 2 p. m., and continue through the afternoon and evening. Mr. and Mrs. George W. Kates and other good talent. Exercises by children from the lyceum. Concert by Chase's Orchestra. All members of chartered societies will please apply to secretary for free tickets. Public cordially invited. Visitors can remain through the entire services and go home on the regular Saturday night theatre trains.

Dr. E. H. Denslow and family have stored their household goods and have gone to South Bend for a short time, when they expect to travel for a season at least. The doctor and wife are very highly esteemed by their many Sturgis friends, who regret their departure and trust that they will soon decide to return and make this their permanent home.—Michigan Democrat.

G. Hamilton Brooks writes: "Mrs. N. S. Noyes, of Boston, Mass, will speak for the Englewood Spiritual Union at Hopkins' Hall, 528 West Sixty-third street, the last two Sundays in November and the first Sunday in December. Mrs. Noyes is a very brilliant and interesting lecturer. You will feel well paid for coming. She always has a large audience."

E. H. Vandenburg writes: "The third annual convention of the State Spiritualists Association of Iowa, is to be held at Clear Lake, Jan. 21 to 24, inclusive. Great preparations are being made to make this one of the very best conventions ever held in the state. Our talent is among the very best that can be secured. Rev. Moses Hull and Mattie E. Hull, of Whitewater, Wis.; Will J. Erwood, of La Crosse, Wis., and Mrs. Eva McCoy, of Marshalltown, Ia., are among those who have promised to be present. We shall be pleased to see every Spiritualist who can possibly attend be with us through the entire meeting, and we promise them a hearty welcome and a feast of grand truths."

Mrs. E. W. Crumb writes: "I am very glad that I yielded to the impulse as I did to send for a copy of your paper, and have that which reviews the book, The Great Psychological Crime. It must contain thought food at least. I have gained my knowledge through the teaching of a very intelligent spirit (apparently), calling himself Selah. He never has put me under control any more than any person does who talks to you in this life, but he has told me how at times to secure the right conditions so I can hear him, as a person might tell you at the phone to shut a door to keep out other noise, or to put your ear close to the receiver. One of the first requisites he gives as a means to obtain sympathy with higher intelligence, is to use the morning hours, and in full light, even out in the sunshine and fresh air; or to have doors and windows wide open; to fast, if possible, and take good breathing exercises before listening with the psychic ear, for such it is. For years I have lived almost a hermit's life in order to avoid vibrations which would be disadvantageous to my studies. The trouble is, all do not discriminate as to their own relative position. We can command only those below ourselves. The average harmony of a circle determines the possibilities for demonstration, and music and good songs raise such to higher planes, securing better results. I have developed alone, seldom sitting in any circles."

Charlotta Leon Swanson writes: "Sister and brother mediums, we should listen to our spirit friends. They are the ones that know what is best for us. In the next five years there will be many more mediums developed for our spiritual work. We will need them all. If you have a desire to serve our heavenly Father, take the sittings in your own home. There your spirit friends come. The spirit guides will do the developing if you are qualified for it."

"Is the New Thought New?" will be the subject of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's lecture next Sunday, at Masonic Temple, Hall 309.

Mrs. Elise Stumpf writes: "The First German Spiritualist Society has rented a nice cozy hall in New York, where it will hold meetings every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. These meetings will be conducted in the German language, to give the Germans who are not able to understand English sufficiently, a chance to investigate. This society was organized three years ago, and held forth in Brooklyn until now it is branching out and will hold two meetings a week—one in Brooklyn every Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, in the home of the president, Mrs. Elise Stumpf, 127 Putnam avenue, and one every Sunday in New York, 168 W. 23d street, near 7th avenue. Occasionally we will have English speaking. All are welcome."

E. J. Schellhous writes: "The cause of Spiritualism in Kansas City, Mo., is progressing quietly and steadily. There are several mediums here and quite a number of Spiritualists, but as in most other places, they are not over-zealous of distinction as such. W. W. Aber (3422 Tenth street in this city) is holding materializing seances, Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings for visitors; and on Tuesday evenings, of each week the intellectual seances for the production of matter for publication. These are conducted by the same band that gave to the world Rending the Vail, Beyond the Vail, and the Guiding Star (now in press); works of a peculiar character inasmuch as they were given by the spirits in materialized form in plain view and hearing of all present, in speech, writing on tablets and on the typewriting machine, and executing portraits in crayon and oil with exquisite skill and in the time of from one to five minutes. The seances now being held are witnessed by many visitors coming from various parts of the country; from Seattle, Boston, from Maryland, Florida, Tennessee, Iowa, Illinois, and nearby states. Among them are earnest and thorough investigators who invariably require the strictest tests, to which Mr. Aber cheerfully submits. None has ever left without being fully convinced of the genuineness of the manifestations and the medium's fidelity to the cause."

Notes and Reflections for the Good of the Cause.

My "Johnny Rabbit" control has been again in evidence, with the result that I am away out of my regular beat, and trespassing upon the Minnesota territory. When I wrote last week I was in Osceola, Wis., where an unusually large attendance responded to the call for meeting. The last night the hall was not large enough to hold the people who were anxious to see "a real Spiritualist." If I did not fear that I might try the patience of the readers, I would cite some of the amusing incidents of that trip, but they are only what any worker will meet with at almost any point where our philosophy is not known.

At one point, visited recently, a certain gentleman (?) who had never been at any of our meetings, sized the situation up, and then concluded that there was but one thing that would be suited to my peculiar style of beauty, and that was a nice warm coat of tar, with the necessary complement of turkey feathers, and then the whole topped off with the proverbial rail. It is needless to say, I disagreed with him, in his diagnosis, and the interesting event did not come off. Another gentleman (?) who had but recently received the baptism of religions fervor, came up to me and taking my hand lovingly in his, said that he felt moved to speak to me, but I mustn't get mad about what he said. I promised I would not, and he proceeded to inform me that he thought I was a very smart young man, but he know I was on the wrong track, and that I would surely lose my soul, and then he assured me that he expected to meet me over there—I have been try to figure out where he expects to go.

Cupid has been busy since my last writing, and yours truly has been called upon to tie the knot for four progressive and aspiring young people. Mrs. L. M. Woods, a child of that Spiritualist centre, Wonewoc, Wis., was married to Mr. Morris Williams, of Milwaukee, at LaCrosse. The event was a quiet one, only a few friends being present. Milwaukee will claim this couple as citizens.

My visit to Princeton, is in response to a request for the same kind of service, and Monday evening, two of the best known young people of this town were started on life's pathway in double harness. They were Mr. John Grahek and Miss Ida Pearson. Both are well known and liked by all who are favored with their acquaintance. The wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Pearson, and was a pretty affair indeed. Roses, smilax and carnations played a prominent part in the decorations. A splendid repast followed the ceremony, at which the "parson" distinguished himself by sampling everything passed his way. Mr. and Mrs. Grahek were the recipient of many beautiful and costly presents, from loving friends who wish them well.

Spiritualism in this town is respected more than it was when the writer first visited here, which fact is largely due to the ministrations of Brother and Sister Kates, who have been here a number of times, and especially is it due to Mrs. Tryon, of Minneapolis, who labored here continually the whole of last year. Many good words are spoken of these workers who have been with the Princetonites.

The Progressive Thinker of Nov. 14, pleased me greatly, and especially is this true of the two items noted therein, viz., "Reflections on The Great Psychological Crime," on the editorial page, and "An Optimistic View of the Book" by E. W. Baldwin. Both bespeak fairness to my mind. Why should anyone desire to condemn a thing in toto, when perhaps the thing condemned is the one thing needed by many. What if these symposiums do raise a storm? Storms clear the atmosphere and make it possible to breathe. Who has not seen the summer day, when the humidity was so great that one could scarcely breathe freely? Who has not, on such occasions, welcomed the rising of the storm cloud which gave promise of the lightning's flash, and the thunder's roar, to be followed or accompanied with the falling rain, and then the sunshine and pure atmosphere, after all?

When I read "true, high and deep wisdom treats matter on its merit, and not on its source," in Brother Baldwin's article, I said, Amen! or as the fellow once said, "them's my symptoms, too." Truly, none can deny that there have been certain manifestations of mediumship that were criminal to say the least. The mistake has been, too many of us have been inclined to revere the term "mediumship" to the extent that we cared not what it was, so long as it purported to come from some spirit, and through mediumship. When will we begin to understand the religion, or science we are teaching.

Well might the world cry out, "Physician, heal thyself." We preach the purging of the ranks of all that is detrimental. Yet when some one comes along and tries to do their mite in that direction, we raise a remonstrance that is heard to heaven. When we come right down to the matter, I believe every intelligent, instructive control who comes within speaking distance of earth urges individual culture and development, and intimates in no uncertain manner that they desire the medium to reach that plane of development wherein they can work in co-operation with the friends of the "Summerland."

The writer of the "Reflections" before referred to, takes a most estimable position in the matter, when he says it will have an educative effect upon mediums, to have these matters understood. And the point is well taken, as to the wisdom of sometimes withholding the name of writer or "control." Bah, I get positively weary, sometimes, of listening to such as the following: "Did you know that Christ is my main guide? Or. "Henry Clay, Abraham Lincoln, Aristotle, Moses, and Elias and the whole of the twelve disciples are in my band?"

Don't tell me we do not see such things. I know whereof I speak when I say I have met mediums who never had, according to their say, a lesser "guide" than Abraham Lincoln, and the way they ordered them around beat everything I ever saw. Yes, by all means let the light be turned on. Let us learn what there is in mediumship, even though we have to call on outsiders to do the turning.

We have been altogether too cocksure of ourselves, at times, and have seen nothing of fault with "we-uns"; but the other fellow, oh, my! Candidly, I do not believe the great majority of Spiritualists really want their mediums to become the self-controled, cultured exemplars of true Spiritualism as much as they should. I know people who would rather listen to something which comes in a subjective state, than to the same thing coming through conscious inspiration.

But we are growing. Our minds are gathering up "bits of knowledge by the way" and we are weaving it into a fabric which will clothe us in the right material ere long. Sam Walter Foss says, "we are here and all born little, just because we're here to grow." 'Tis a comfor to know there is a chance even for "Spiritualists" to expand mentally and spiritually, till they reach the fullness of manhood. Have we not been too much like others, in that we measure manhood in pounds and ounces avoirdupois, instead of deeds and achievements spiritually and mentally. By all means, Mr. Editor, keep an open page for awhile, that we may have the scintillations from the great brains and minds in our ranks.

The N. S. A. convention for 1903 has become a thing of the past, and the reports of the work done are being spread o'er the land with varying effects. Undoubtedly beautiful and inspiring lectures, convincing tests of spirit presence, were given to the hungry souls who assembled at the night meetings. The legislation of the day meetings was in all probability carried through in as effective a manner as possible, and the delegates on the floor had the privilege of voice and vote in all matters pertaining to the welfare of the cause they loved. But notwithstanding this, the work of the convention is criticised in no small degree. This simply proves that we as Spiritualists have not risen to the heights we claim for ourselves.

Is it not a sad commentary on our growth when we hear impassioned and eloquent pleas for more humanitarian and brotherly love—the words flowing like golden streams from the lips of the orators, and, then, ye Gods! the same lips, perhaps the following day, pour forth a flood of invective—of accusation—of charges and counter charges?

I will not say that everything done at the convention suited me fully, because it would be untrue, but I am not going to spend the time between now and the next convention kicking against the work done, and I hope there will not be so much of it from others.

Conventions are especially designed for the transcation of business—for the discussion of ways and means to advance the cause. It is really too bad that we must indulge in the painful personalities which so often appear in the columns of our papers. I fail to see the Spiritualism in it.

Brother Barrett was elected president. He undoubtedly received the majority of the votes cast, or he could not have gotten the position. It must have been the popular wish of the convention, as were also all other selections of officers. Then let the majority rule, by all means, and let us not spend our time in rebelling at the decision of the majority.

While I did not expect matters to take just the turn they did, by all means let us uphold the man selected by the majority of the Spiritualists assembled at the convention. He is time-tried—has been weighed in the balance and not found wanting. He does not always do everything according to my way of thinking, but that is no reason why I should try to place obstacles in his way, or that of the N. S. A.

I am sorry to read of "star chamber" sessions, political wire-pulling. They don't spell "Spiritualism," Mr. Editor. I have before me the last two numbers of The Progressive Thinker, Nos. 728-9, in which are the letters of Brothers Hull and Warne. Both of these men I esteem highly. I have listened to them when on the platform and my being thrilled with admiration for each. Their soul-stirring sentences have rung in my ears for days at a time, and many a time have I thought, if ever I could be the power these gentlemen were, I should be content, but frankly confess I feel that whenever I read such things as "star chamber" wire pulling, etc., it disappoints me.

Both these gentlemen have greater experience than I. I admit I am "green" but I would rather be "green" with the feeling that sometime the suns of life might ripen my mentality, than feel that I was over-ripe and liable to decay. Both Brother Hull and Brother Warne have been teachers to me in a sense—in the sense that I have watched their work for some time through the press, and personally. I hope they will dispense with these friendly tiffs, and fill up the space in good, wholesome advice to all of us, and with suggestions for the good of the cause which will compel the admiration of the world.

Let us not be too political in our methods, but inculcate spirituality in all things. Become examples of the principles we teach. Make the world know that we are moving ahead, and that the brotherly love, and humanitarianism of which we preach is practiced in our ranks. We must know that it is deeds that count, and not creeds, sectarianism, etc. We are all entitled to our share of sunshine, and in the building of the character which Spiritualism stands for, and which the N. S. A. is seeking to inspire. We need it.

"Somewhere in life the sun doth shine,
For each and every one;
And deeds are marshaled into line,
And works evolved and done.
And things which many count as naught
The richest harvests yield—
No victory e'er too dearly bought,
No truth too small to wield."

In closing let me say that truths are stars which illuminate the night of ignorance, and dispel the clouds of superstition and despair. May the N. S. A. live long to dispel those clouds by spreading truth.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
—OR—
DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means or developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gifts have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages a volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. O. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

ASPHODEL BLOOMS
AND
Other Offerings.
BY
EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 236 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman, "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian, says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered, hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin, Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

I. F. K.: Q. Why do so many Spiritualists disbelieve the Scriptures? Have they not a perfect right to believe their spirit friends told the truth two thousand years ago, as well as our spirit friends tell us the truth to-day?

A. It is misleading to say that Spiritualists disbelieve the Bible. It all turns on what is understood by belief. If it means the acceptance of the Bible as the infallible, inspired word of God, then a majority of Spiritualists might be counted as unbelievers. Yet all accept the book on its merit as they do the sacred books of the world and all books with less high-sounding claims, and test impartially for the truth they contain. The Bible is a record of spirit manifestations, The National Spiritualists Association has published among its other tracts one showing the parallel between the records of the Bible and modern spiritual manifestations.

A better and more complete answer to the position of the medium, "obsession," and how to avoid it, than is given in a postscript to the letter of this correspondent. It is so pre-eminently pertinent, that it should be a lesson to those who would excuse their misdeeds by placing the burden on their "obsessing influences."

"Like begets like. If I am a truthful man, the spirit friends who approach me will be the same. If I am a bad man, the spirits who will come to me are like myself. If I should go into a seance and receive bad results, I would never tell of it, for I should be revealing my inner self to others. Actuated by spirits, they could not go beyond my own desires."

J. M. Mathews: Q. When I attempt to argue against the idea of reincarnation, it is always thrown up to me, "Where is the justice in life, if this is the first and only earth life?" Can you help me?

A. Simply because the doctrine of reincarnation accounts for "justice in life," the object for which it was originated, is not the slightest evidence of its truthfulness. The sense of justice is strictly a human quality. In the broad domain of the world, outside of the mind of man, justice is unknown. Not only justice, but mercy, sympathy, charity, have no being in the trend of the universe. The elements go on in their remorseless courses; blessings may follow the shower and the sunshine, wreck and ruin the tornado. Toiling thousands in centuries rear beautiful cities, and in an hour the proud battlements and god-worshiping spires lie in blacked masses and the teeming populace smothered beneath the ashes. The heaving earth, opens its fateful jaws and cities fall therein. Tidal waves sweep far inland retiring with their spoils. Hurricanes sweep the deep, and woe be to the ship met in their career. There is no justice only blind forces seeking equilibrium. There is no restitution for injury done. The ship that goes down with its human freight, returns not, and the wind and wave make no apology.

Only with human beings who feel that others have rights which should be respected, and if not so respected, there is wrong inflicted, is there what is called a sense of justice. This leads to a belief that for every right action, which is an action for the greatest good of the greatest number, a common good, there must be a reward, and for every bad action, which is an action working detriment to the common weal, there must be punishment. Now as it is clearly apparent that these rewards and punishments are not received in this life, this is relegated to the next or spirit life, and the return or reincarnation of those spirits who suffered in this life, to more enjoyable phases, and of those who had its pleasures from the suffering of others, to a life of degradation, toil and pain. A plausible theory, but why necessary for such retribution? Who and by what arbitrary dictum is the matter determined? We at once become involved in an impenetrable fog.

How much more clear and consistent to think of a spirit, passing out of the earthly body, to go on in a higher and purer state of existence, where the errors of this life even the most heinous, are effaced by moral and intellectual growth.

Let us call attention to this vital consideration: Justice, meaning punishment to an offender, as by compelling his return after death into the state of an outcast or criminal, makes no restitution to those wronged by such culprit. It only degrades the sinner. Whereas every spiritual force in earth or heaven is for elevation of the fallen—for growth in righteousness.

Fail it may, and often fails, but in the end is triumphant. And in this growth of spirit in perfection of character whichleaves all failures behind—as a ship under press of canvas, leaves the lee-shore, treacherous sands and foaming reefs, with flotsam and jetsam of wreckage, for the distant harbor—are the ends of justice vindicated.

Creation Versus Evolution.

J. S. Loveland presents his views in a clear and comprehensive manner, illustrating many points that will be of interest to the readers of The Progressive Thinker.

In reading the article in The Progressive Thinker of August 29, I was forcibly impressed with the statement of Elihu in the book of Job, where he declares that "Great men are not always wise. It is a notorious fact that men who have made great proficiency in certain departments of science are the most credulous, and the most unscientific when discussing topics outside of their special field of study. In nothing is this more marked than in reference to religious dogmas. In the mind of the mature man the teachings of the catechism, impressed in the nursery, shut out the deductions of the reason and leave him the victim of ancestral faith; and his great effort is directed in a vain attempt to reconcile the irreconcilable.

Another thing was recalled to my attention; and that is, that many persons when worsted in argument fly to the refuge of "great men," or the opinions of great men, to help them out of their difficulty, or to silence argument by the mere force of numbers. This course, I am sorry to say, is pursued by too many Spiritists. The names of men like James Hyslop and others are quoted when these men have no fellowship with, but on the contrary, despise and denounce our movement, or like Rev. Savage, keep well aloof in the popular Unitarian church.

In the article referred to, Eld. Myrick returns to his attack on me, and through me on the doctrine of evolution, and in defense of the exploded theory of creation, and the doctrine of design. And he resorts to the shallow sophistical method of quoting distinguished men as authority. And assuming their opinions as of sufficient force to outweigh positive demonstration; and, worse than that, he puts their opinions or inferences forward as scientific! If the term science means anything it is knowledge. Now, do any of these quoted men, does the Elder himself pretend to know anything about the creation of anything or the design or intent in that assumed creation?

Says the Elder: "I myself do not know, and say it freely. But I believe it to be so." Here is your science. It is the science of the savage—of the child—of the superstitious believer in relics—and of ignorant Catholics who think the votes of cardinals have made one of their number the infallible vicegerent of God upon the earth. The Elder puts me in mind of a negro preacher in the south. Speaking of the Bible, he remarked that he could not read it, "but," said he, "I believe it, every word of it." The Elder doesn't know, but he believes the creation story.

But one word more about these great men. They are always the biggest and wisest to the one quoting them, whatever may be their real status in the field of science. One, ignorant of the facts would imagine that all the distinguished men of science endorsed the Elder's faith. The general reader knows better. I will not tire the reader with a long list of names. One is sufficient for my purpose. Not one, mentioned by the Elder, stands higher as a scientist than Haeckel; and probably no one of them has ever spent half the time in studying this question of Creation and Evolution as he has. He has met and refuted all their arguments, while his own positions remain unassailable.

The Elder quotes me as follows, "Logical reasoning brings us face to face with ever-living, ever working nature, but nowhere shows us the faintest trace of a creative or working God." "But," he says, "it is in no sense of the word representative of the view of acknowledged men of science." The Elder is badly mistaken. It is "the acknowledgd view of men of science," who occupy no second place in that field. I stand by my position.

I must go one step farther. I submit that the men appealed to are not scientists at all when making the statements quoted. They have abandoned science entirely, and have turned metaphysicians, and, like all theological reasoners, base their assertions not upon science, what is known, but upon assumed premises which are not known, but as the Elder confesses are simply believed.

The whole superstructure of their position, and the entire strength of all the pretense of creation and design rests upon two unproved and unprovable assumptions. They are, 1, Matter is dead, entirely destitute of life; 2, Life had a beginning, outside of, and independent of matter. Neither of these assumption is known to be true, hence, they are outside the domain of science. They belong to the realm of unscientific metaphysics.

I suppose the reply will be that God is a living being and therefore, as he is eternal, life always was. Very well. As God always existed, and is a spirit and not matter, there are a few questions that must be satisfactorily answered before we resign ourselves to faith.

1. Is the life of God organized or unorganized? It must be one or the other. If not organized, how could it organize anything else? And, if of itself an organizing power how could it spend an eternity in doing nothing? And, how could an immutable being be induced to act after so long a time spent in pure self-contemplation? The thing is impossible in itself.

2. If matter is, in itself, dead, will the Elder, or his distinguished scientists please inform us how a living God could create a dead world? As you assume God—the living God—to be the "Great First Cause," please explain how the stupendous effect—matter—happens to be dead. Is matter eternal? If created, what was it from? Nothing, or God? In either case it can have no properties, or attributes but what came from God; and if death is one of its properties then death is one of the divine attributes; for all that is came from God; either that or it is self-existent and God is not the Creator. Take which horn you please of this dilemma.

3. Is any portion, any particle of matter now alive? If so, how came it so? When, how and by whom was it made alive? As an absolutely dead, or inert substance could not make itself alive, then there must be a perpetual omnipotence at work making dead matter alive. Is this what your God is doing? Is he busy in changing dead matter into flies, gnats, poison plants, reptiles, etc.? Dignified work for a God! Must be delightful!

4. What is the grand design? What is all this made for? You answer, "for his glory." Very true. No other motive could be possible to an intelligent personality. All must end as well as begin in his own conscious purpose. No being but himself was in existence, hence, outside of himself there could be no motive, no impulsion. There could be nothing else on which design could terminate. Whatever he might create must, in the nature of things, be a showing forth of his glory. In other words, it must be a manifestation of some feature of the divine nature. As the creed of the N. S. A. expresses it, "The phenomena of nature, physical and spiritual, are the expressions of infinite intelligence." The entire physical and mental universe is simply a portrait of the creative God. It pictures him as he was and is, and forever will be. He could design nothing unlike or opposed to himself. All the destructive forces of material nature are only so many manifestations of his nature. In the animal kingdom, all the ferocious beasts, birds, reptiles and insects display nothing but the attributes of the eternal. He created them. They bear his image—they are his "expressions!" The rattlesnake, the cobra, the hyena, the carrion buzzard and all the swarms of insect pests are constantly showing forth the glory of the creator, they are the partakers of his nature; and, with the thieves, robbers, murderers, etc., among the humans, constitute a character of infinite perfectness and goodness. But the creative God of "infinite intelligence" must possess all these lovely attributes, as they all issue from him, they are his "expressions." They are wonderful proofs of "design," and as an old Methodist preacher used to preface his sermons, "If there is design there must be a designer." Elder Myrick believes in design, and hence, if the mosquito stings him and communicates the yellow fever, or the rattlesnake bites him, he must piously concede that they are the results of God's design; and with Pope he can sing,

"If earthquakes fill high heaven's design,
Why not a Borgia, or a Cataline?"

No wonder the author of the Pentateuch made this God proclaim himself a "man of war," for his whole creation is one fearful scene of continuous struggle and warfare. And it is war to the death.

But the most astounding phase of the question is that it is God warring with God. It is all included in "the phenomena of nature." At one time he is engaged in prayer, while again, or at the same time, he is cursing in the most profane manner. In fact, this God or "Infinite Intelligence" is perpetually at war with himself. His attributes are exact opposites. Vengeance and love are both manifestations of his nature. He "makes good and creates evil," and yet he is "angry with the wicked" he has created. And yet "the wrath of man shall praise him;" and how he can be "angry" with what praises him is very curious. But, according to the faith of Elder Myrick, all this was "designed"; and if so, then we must concede with Pope, that "all partial evil is universal good," and the California State Spiritualist Association endorses Pope's declaration that

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the soul."

Now, if this world is designed, is the body of God, the evil is only partial and glorifies him, as it is intrinsically good. Hence, if the rattlesnake should bite Brother Myrick, causing his death, though it would seem an evil, as his church would lose an efficient pastor, his family a kind head, and the press an able contributor, yet after all it would be a "universal good," and God would be glorified thereby because it was part of his design. And his fellow preachers would say that it had pleased divine providence to take him away.

But some of my readers will say "this is all bosh." Very true. But it is the very kind of bosh you will find in the nursery where the child girl is dressing, rocking and fondling a bunch of rags called a baby, or bitterly crying if it has a porcelain head and gets broken. Or the boy has driven some tacks into some wooden blocks and is marshalling an ox team. Or, perhaps has purchased some toy cars and is running a railroad on his own hook. This is childish, you say. But the New Testament Jesus says, you must become as a little child, or you will fail of the kingdom of heaven. Do you insist that you will not tend rag babies, nor drive wooden oxen into the future, remember, that, according to "Divine Inspiration," OF SUCH IS THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN. You must "become a fool for Christ's sake." Hence, as it is sometimes amusing to see children with their toys, or riding a broomstick for a horse, so also is it to see children of a larger growth, following, not Paul's example of "putting away childish things," but the more reprehensible one of becoming "a fool for Christ's sake."

A Wonderful Boy Medium.

To the Editor:—Inclosed please find fac simile of map of the Arctic continent, drawn by spirit of U. S. Grant (as surveyed by him) through the hand of Milton Berry, an eleven-year-old medium of Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 24, 1903. Judging from the squares drawn in said map, I have no doubt of its being as nearly correct as the size of the map will admit.

This medium was developed in family circles, and is clairvoyant, clairaudient, trance speaking, writing, painting, musical and psychometric.

When playing the piano, writing, painting and map-drawing, his right arm is paralyzed, and he says he can feel the spirits using his arms and hands; both arms being affected while playing on the piano.

His guides tell him there are seventeen Indians and fifty white spirits in his band.

He is quite rapid in his painting—using water colors. The time occupied in each spirit portrait being from three to five minutes. He has painted nearly all of his spirit guides with their names attached, among which are a number of the presidents, celebrated musicians, (French and Russian) painters, poets, inventors, reformers, historians, orators, etc.

Columbus, one of his band, has painted through his hand what he claims to be the only perfect picture of him that has ever been produced; and this is vouched for by Lincoln, Washington, Grant and others, who are all anxious that it should be photo-engraved for the benefit of humanity.

Shakspeare also claims to have painted his picture, which he says is more like him than any heretofore produced.

Notwithstanding the multiplicity of his wonderful mediumistic gifts and numerous controls, he shows no symptoms of any of the horrible effects of mediumship named in that wonderful book, "The Great Psychological Crime."

OBSESSION.

In my last article I mentioned the desire of my wife for a boy baby of her own. We will let this matter rest for a while, but we will not drop it entirely. You shall know what occurred a few months later, but we must observe what happens in the meantime.

The band of grand spirits of which she spoke, soon arrived. More of the opposition came also. I could hear the commands of the grand ones. They said they must wall me in. I could hear some that was said about the wall, and knew that there was much work being done, but I could not see the product of their work. About this time one of the evil ones got control of my tongue, and much to my surprise, the first thing he did was to upbraid me for chewing tobacco, and advised me to quit. I thought this pretty good advice if it did come from a devil, and concluded to question him. He told me a rambling story, and finished by saying I was a very good medium. He was not alone in his demands for me to quit using tobacco, for those whom I considered grand advised me likewise. I said to them that I had used tobacco for more than thirty years, and that I had made several efforts to quit, and had failed but was willing to make another effort, and if they could aid me any in my effort I would be pleased to have them do so. To this all consented and the fight against tobacco commenced.

I had the habit of smoking as well as chewing tobacco.

I now agreed to give the obsessing spirits a chance to tell why they insisted on being present, provided they would be careful not to interfere with the rights of my wife and those who were assisting her. This had the desired effect for a time. My wife got control, and was much concerned when I would be trying to cook for myself, which I now did. So I said, "We might as well set up housekeeping again."

When I would be eating she would come into my body and seem to be eating with me. This I supposed to be all right, thinking that she might thereby get energy enough to materialize.

My wife was not as tall as I am, and when she would be in my body while eating, her feet would seem to be sticking out at my ankles, and if in while standing or walking, her feet would be in my own, and her face would be out at my neck, and this would cause a choking sensation which gradually disappeared. When I would be in bed she would be in my body, and seemed to sleep with as much composure as when she was alive and well. These feelings were not slight or shadowy; they were strong and real to me, and when she controlled my tongue and talked, I would speak in a feminine voice like her own, and quite as loud as she did when alive.

Mr. Stephens, the trumpet medium, whom I have mentioned, continued to give seances at my rooms, and at one of them I asked Billy Jacobs, who is one of Mr. Stephens' controls, something concerning my development. "Harmony, harmony," was his reply.

Someone in the circle then asked a question concerning me. His only reply was, "Mr. Dailey is true to the cause." Of course this had a tendency to make those in the circle feel that all was not well with me concerning my development. Fearing I might be ostracised by my friends, I now asked my guides if we had not better make an effort to convince them that we were all right? I was advised to ask my friends to come in, and was promised trumpet work or materializing. Accordingly I invited those I desired to form a circle, and made an effort to get something to appease them, but my efforts were futile. When I made inquiry of my guides concerning the failure, I was advised to keep right on and make another effort. This I did on several occasions, and at one time a man in the circle said he saw a small form build up upon the table around which the circle was seated, yet I was unable to get anything afterward in my rooms, although I made several efforts. The form that appeared on the table I believed to be that of my brother Albert, whom I have already mentioned as being dead. He was the younger, and although he died before I was four years old, yet I can remember him quite well, and can trace him readily.

There now arose another trouble. One of those whom I had regarded as an obsessing spirit objected to my brother coming to me, saying, "If Albert comes, I go away." I said I wanted to do what was right, and so long as my brother was good I could not drive him away, and while this was not satisfactory to him in the least, yet I said it would have to be so unless I was convinced that my brother was in the wrong. So the matter remained until I discovered there was trouble between my brother and my wife, which continued for some time and then my brother was compelled to retire, and those whom he had driven away returned and all went on as before.

Mr. Stephens now made his last visit to my place.

At the end of the seance he gave, I said to Billy Jacobs, "Will you please say who it is that is trying to impersonate my wife?"

His reply was, "Mr. Dailey, don't you be surprised at any thing." However, I prevailed on my friends to make one more effort and see what I could get.

The Spiritualists of Jonesboro had an organization at this time, and had a suite of rooms in which they met. Mr. Stephens gave a seance in one of those rooms soon after I was declared obsessed, and I attended. The seance had not been in progress long when Billy Jacobs said, in words as near as I could understand him, "Mr. Dailey, if you can't manage your controls, I will have to ask you to leave the room." I did not retire, and the seance was soon over; so you see I was opposed by those concerned in Spiritualism on both sides of life.

My next experience was with a healer from a neighboring town. He attended our meeting on Sunday, and when I asked those assembled to give me aid and see what I could get, he assumed authority, and stated he would look after me. I said to my guide, "Look out, for I believe he is going to lay hands on me." He soon approached me from the rear and gave me a reading. I could not see what passes he made, nor do I remember whether he touched me or not, but all he did was contrary to my wishes and at his own risk.

My next encounter was with an old-time Spiritualist, the oldest in our society. On stepping into a blacksmith shop I found him and others inside. He approached me and said: "There is no doubt about this man being controlled by spirits of some kind," and I could see that he was angry. I next met him on the street, and he said that he and others were talking of coming to my rooms to dispel the evil spirits. I said to him that no one would be permitted to come to my rooms on such a mission without my advice and consent. He then got very angry and went away. The next one to interfere was a healer who was a member of our organization. He made a lengthy speech at one of our meetings on the subject of obsession, and while he did not mention my name, I well understood that it was for me. To all of this I turned a deaf ear, for I believed that there was something at work in my development that neither the living nor the dead understood, outside of my band.

WHAT IS PROPHECY?

Its Moral and Spiritual Uses Considered.

Prophecy is the art or science of reading causes and thereby judging effects to follow.

In human affairs it is based on the same principle. But in this case the reader must be sensitive to the causal vibrations governing the individual.

Much, however, is erroneously delineated because of conflict with his own vibrations—it being often difficult to separate the two, unless the reader or prophet has a thorough knowledge of self and is enabled to discern the difference.

But such can also prophesy for self, a possibility open to all who are curious to "lift the veil," and which constitutes the best safeguard against the errors of others or against the false hopes often given, when the subject is beyond reach of the causal delineator.

The latter obtains when the governing principles or forces of the subject have a more active vibration than those of the reader or professor in the art—individuals only being able to understand causes within their own scope or reach. And as human nature can only be understood comparative to a knowledge of self, the first requisite in prophesying is introspection, followed by tests of self-prophecy. As our causal vibrations are a synonym with the "cause upon us" or destiny—the life's plan upon which we are erected and must follow out to reach individual perfection—they must have their specific influences and affect sensitives accordingly. Now, when rightly interpreted, and their meaning is understood, prophecy becomes an accurate science. But we should be better able to judge what we feel ourselves, or are inclined to do than an outsider—and feeling and inclination are the tell-tales of their underlying forces.

The boy who feels like becoming a merchant feels what is best for him. But when a parent's vanity insists upon educating him for some titled profession, failure must follow in the majority of cases.

Of course, a boy and even a man may feel like doing something wrong. But reason is there to right it—reason based on justice or that which is in harmony with justice—conscience and intuition.

Now, the man without conscience is not intuitive, and consequently can never become a prophet—unless a pretended one—for in comparison to a feeling of ill-will or prejudice against another, or selfishness governing, intuition is darkened, and the wrong course in life is pursued—however gratifying it may be for the individual operator. But there are many things in life, pleasing during their indulgence, which end in misery. And a whole life's plan thus destroyed is almost irreparable—at least, on this mundane sphere.

Self-knowledge should be an accompaniment of education—beginning in childhood with object lessons that point a moral; and as is largely done, but omitted at the very period of life where their efforts are the most powerful—namely, from youth to manhood. What is then neglected is seldom invited till middle age or when the soul hungers for spiritual food. Worldly habits, false teachings and egotism have by that time taken such root, that they are difficult to be subdued or thrown aside. But better late than never—only that it often takes as many years to change the acquired individuality of the forces as it took to create them. It is then when the reformer's feelings do not comport with his higher sense of reasoning—his intuitive promptings, and as originally founded—for the soul's combat for superiority begins as soon as the man of matter has surrendered to the new state of things—the intention of obeying the cause upon him.

Life is frequently begun anew under these circumstances, and the man of matter at 40 may be a man of spirit at 50—a genuine medium or a prophet, according to the bent of his energies for a higher ideal as a mortal.

There is hope for all in self-knowledge—hope for renewed health, strength and a brighter future. Not only that he is enabled to see his way clearer as a mortal, but also as a spirit, and that immortality is a fact—such being the most gratifying results of prophecy.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600,000 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them or particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

RENDING THE VAIL

A Most Remarkable Book Concerning the Existence of Man, and All Things, and All Being

It Was Written by Materialized Forms at the House of J. H. Pratt, Spring Hill, Kansas, William W. Aber Being the Medium.

"Rending the Vail" is pronounced by Col. R. T. Van Horn, of Kansas City, Mo., as a most remarkable work. That Col. Van Horn is fully competent to judge, we will say that he has been a member of congress for four sessions, an editor of a leading daily, and a profound thinker along scientific lines. He says:

"The principal contributors to the book are four in number: Dr. W. H. Reed, who is called the chemical control of the medium; William Denton, Thomas Paine and Michael Faraday. There are numerous others giving a few incidental and mostly personal messages or dissertations on scientific, philosophic, religious, theologic and occult topics—from world-building, the origin of life, or religions, of scientific discovery, and the laws of cosmos or nature—in fact the entire field of human thought. The limitation seemed to be only that of the spectators to ask questions.

"In addition to this mass of messages, there are in the book about sixty illustrations—44 of them portraits. These were drawn by a form standing out in the room at a desk, the form or personality to be sketched at the doorway of the cabinet and the finished picture handed to one of the circle and filed away by the secretary.

"What will attract the attention of even the non-Spiritualist reader is that the topics treated by Prof. Denton, Thomas Paine and Prof. Faraday, are in kind, in thought and style with those to which their active lives in this world were devoted—in literary character as different here as in their works extant on our book-shelves.

"The Spiritualist press and its contributors are just now discussing a number of questions as to the nature of spirit, of spirit return; the want of agreement between those returning as to conditions in their present world; the limitations—that the organism of the medium imposes upon communication, and various kindred questions. All these are treated, some of them very fully, but all rationally understandable. Also phenomena, inspiration and such, to many, knotty subjects, are freely and fully discussed.

"The work is not written by the medium nor by any one connected with the society or circle. All was delivered by personalities distinct from either, written down by the secretary as spoken, or if in writing, filed away. At the next meeting the minutes in full were read, corrected, or criticised by those present and by the authors, and when approved by both laid away for the book.

"The work is unique in the history of spirit communication. Swedenborg, Andrew Jackson Davis, and Maria King wrote under inspiration. Newbrough wrote Oahspe automatically by typewriter. "Rending the Vail" was written and spoken by full-form personalities and is printed as given. One remarkable thing about the writing may not be amiss here. As high as 1,200 words a minute were written by actual timing by the watch.

"It is but just to the secretary to say that his work has been admirably done—not only faithfully and efficiently, but with excellent taste. There are no dogmatic parentheses, no interpolations or ipse dixits of the scribe. He simply states that "a form purporting to be" So-and-So, "appeared and delivered the following"—stating whether it was oral or in writing.

"In reading the book, and I have read it all, this modest, self-retiring, literal rendering of these extraordinary happenings by the secretary has been a source of constant admiration. It adds character to the book and inspires constant confidence in the integrity that from the first page to the last enhances the respect and interest of the reader."

This remarkable book, "Rending the Vail," is for sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker. Price $1.75.

History of the

CHRISTIAN RELIGION

to the Year 200,

BY CHARLES V. WAITE, A. M.

Fifth Edition—Revised, with Much Additional Matter in Appendix

A standard and reliable history of the earlier period of the church, giving facts that are not found in the so-called histories written by churchmen. This latest edition has been carefully and thoroughly revised, and it is a reliable magazine of facts, such as the honest inquirer wants. It opens up to the investigator and student a wide field of historical research in matters of fact wholly ignored by the regular church historians, and throws a bright glare light on points heretofore carefully shrouded in darkness.

"THE UNKNOWN"

-BY-

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities. Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

MAN'S IMMORTALITY.

Man Is a Condition of Life, Not Life Itself.

My brother J. T., of Duluth, Minn., as well as many others, use as an argument against immortality that if man had a beginning then he surely must have an end. This argument is logical and sound; man had a beginning and will have an end, but man is a condition of life and not life itself. Life has always existed and will never have an end. The universe is full of life, the time never was when it was not. All life does not possess the same degree of development.

Unconscious life is the lower condition of life, while the conscious life, or that which is conscious of self-existence, belongs to a more developed class. All life does not possess the same degree of development. Life like everything else in the universe, is subject to the law of progression, and progression signifies change; there could be no progression without a change. In that great sea of homogeneous conscious life which exists in the universe before the condition of man is reached, (although this sea of life is composed of innumerable separate and distinct lives) all have one common will. This immortal conscious life while in this condition knows not good from evil, it knows no sin; it feels no sorrow and has no pain; it transgresses no law, therefore suffers none of the penalties attached to law. It is not subject to the law of suggestion, but acts wholly upon its own volition which is common to all. This conscious life principle constitutes the negative force in nature. When this negative force meets the positive force in the physical organism of the mother it at once becomes subject to the law of suggestion and when a new physical organism is suggested by the parents it commences to build one for itself. While this immortal life principle occupies the unfinished physical form of the child in the embryo condition, it is subject to the suggestions received by the mother, and the unborn child will always be marked both physically and mentally by the suggestions received by the mother during this period. After birth, as the brain of its own organism begins to act it gradually comes under the influence of the suggestions emanating from its own brain.

Man has a dual nature; he has two separate and distinct mind powers, the first is evolved by that immortal conscious life principle that voluntarily took upon itself the responsibilities of a human existence, thereby placing itself under the power of suggestion.

By assuming these responsibilities it placed itself in a position where it was made possible for it to obtain unlimited expansion in knowledge and power. Through the human condition the spirit becomes individualized. After the spirit, which is but another name for that immortal conscious life principle, has once taken upon itself the condition of man, it will ever afterwards have an individuality peculiarly its own and unlike any other individual in the universe. The mind emanating from this immortal life principle we shall designate as the creative mind; it operates the involuntary muscles of the body, it pumps the blood through the arteries over the entire system and forces it back through the veins. It expands the lungs, taking in the air, then contracting them and thereby throwing it out when no longer of use in the purifying of the blood. It throws off the dead tissues of the body and replaces them with new. As before stated it operates all the involuntary muscles of the body. It never sleeps but performs its work day and night, whether the created mind, that which emanates from the brain be awake or asleep, active or inactive. It never had a beginning and will never have an end.

This is our immortal mind, the I AM of our being.

The other mind of man is the created mind—that which emanates from the brain. It controls the voluntary muscles of the body, it operates the organs of speech, the movement of the limbs and all muscles controlled by will power. This mind grows and developes with the growth and development of the brain, it lives while the brain lives and dies when the brain dies; this is our created mind and therefore our mortal mind.

That creative mind, the I AM of our being, will continue to exist through all the endless ages of eternity, and while it will undergo continuous change during all this time it will never lose its identity or individuality. A thing does not necessarily lose its identity by a change; the boy does not lose his identity in matured manhood, neither will man lose his identity though he should become a creative power among the gods, which he is destined to do if eternal progression is the law of the universe which it seems to me all thinking people must admit.

A thing cannot lose its identity through progression, it can only be lost by retrogression, and retrogression is not the natural course of nature, but progression is the universal law. That intelligent being now called man has undergone many changes in the past without losing his identity, and it appears just as evident that while it will undergo many radical changes in the future it will never lose its identity. It is reasonable to believe that our memory will eventually run back to the time when intelligence first dawned upon our mortal vision, which we believe was long before the condition of man was reached.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

My beloved daughter, Mrs. Inez Settles, passed to spirit life at her home in Clinton, Mo., Nov 1. Deceased was an ardent Spiritualist and reader of your paper. She was a medium of no small ability and has held communications through the planchette with departed friends. For many years she was capable of writing with a pencil beautiful discourses from the unseen world. She was 32 years old and leaves a husband and little girl, her parents and two sisters. MRS. W. H. BLEDSOE.

Passed to spirit life from Thornburg, Iowa, October 3, 1903, G. R. Biddleman, aged 85 years. He was a staunch Spiritualist. With him belief and faith had passed into knowledge of the continuity of life. He sensed the presence, and often spoke of the departed loved ones being by his bedside. He was ripe for the harvest and ready to go.

MRS. A. C. BIDDLEMAN.

Asa B. Roff, a pioneer Spiritualist, of Watseka, Ill., passed to the higher life, October1. He was highly rspected and a faithful worker in the cause. The funeral services were conducted by Margaret E. Skeels, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. H. H. Alter; at the grave by the Masonic fraternity.

Mrs. Emily Webb passed to the higher life, Nov. 4, 1903, aged 85 years. From the earliest years of Modern Spiritualism Mrs. Webb and her husband were staunch supporters of the cause; both were mediums and their home was always a center for the unfoldment of this great truth which is one of the richest legacies they leave to their children and friends. Funeral services by the writer. MARY WEBB-BAKER.

Spartansburg, Pa.

Suddenly, Nov. 7, Geo. Weatherwax passed to the higher life, from White Pigeon township, Mich., aged 75 years. Mr. Weatherwax was one of the pioneers of White Pigeon and was highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. His wife and four children survive him. He was an avowed Spiritualist, and the funeral services were conducted by the writer in accordance with the expressed wish of the deceased. The interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery, Sturgis, Mich. DR. E. H. DENSLOW.

Mrs. Sarah A. Vankirk, passed to the higher life from the residence of her son, Chas B. Vankirk, 4754 Greenwood avenue, Chicago, Oct. 17, at the age of 82. Funeral services took place at the residence, Oct. 20; from there to Milwaukee, Wis., where cremation took place, and the ashes were interred there in Forest Home Cemetery, according to her wishes.

STOMACH TROUBLES CURED

We Can Positively Cure Any Case of Stomach Trouble Not Caused by Cancer. Do Not Take Our Word. TEST IT YOURSELF.

FREE TEST TREATMENT

Do you suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or stomach trouble in any form? If you do why not let me cure you? We do not mean HELP you by giving you a Soda Compound Tablet or some of the other patent "Dyspepsia Cures." We will positively and permanently cure you. We will go to the very foun. dation of your trouble; will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the stomach, and make you strong and healthy as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousands of those we have cured of stomach trouble in all its forms and stages; but they would not be facts or proof to you—only words of thanks and praise. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself. And believing that a practical test would be more convincing to sufferers than all the testimonials we could print and absolutely prove its great merits, we will send anyone desiring it a full two weeks' trial treatment absolutely free.

If you have stomach trouble and have failed to get relief, write us at once and learn by practical test what we can do for you. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, Ltd., 23 Main Street, Battle Creek, Mich.

A Cincinnati Man's Discovery.

It has remained for a prominent business man of Cincinnati to discover that in the application of Thermal Air to the skin and its resultant perspiration lies the secret of good health, vigor, beauty and freedom from disease. He proved beyond a question of a doubt that the Romans and Greeks had

No Physicians for 500 Years

But Thermal and Vapor Baths, and that they owed their splendid health, fine physique, strength and beauty to vaporized air or "sweat baths," and so he set to work to invent a method by which the American people could secure all the marvelous benefits of these baths without expensive apparatus, bathrooms, and at smallest expense.

The now "famous" Quaker Bath Cabinet was the result of his efforts.

An Enormous Business.

Invented and patented eight years ago, the demand has been so great that over 300,000 Cabinets are sold annually, and hundreds of men and women are growing rich selling them, as the makers offer splendid inducements.

It is an air-tight enclosure, a rubber-walled room in which one rests comfortably on a chair, and with only the head outside, enjoys at home for 3 cents each, all the marvelous cleansing, curative and invigorating effects of the famous Turkish, Russian, Hot Vapor Baths, medicated or perfumed, if desired, with no possibility of taking cold afterwards, or in any way weakening the system.

Clouds of Hot Air and Vapor surround the entire body, stimulating the secretions, opening the five million sweat pores, causing profuse perspiration, drawing out of the blood and system all the impure acids, salts and effete matter, which if retained, cause sickness, debility and affliction.

Astonishing is the Improvement

In your health, feelings and complexion. It is the most remarkable invention of the twentieth century, for it makes the sick well; the weak strong, and it has done that which physicians and medicines have failed to do.

Every one knows that disease is due to the presence in the blood or vital organs of poisonous matter. The Quaker Bath eradicates that poison, and it is impossible for those poisons to remain in the system of a man, woman or child who properly uses the Cabinet.

It removes all obstructions, thus allowing nature to do its best work. The blood is made pure, rich and healthy. Gives it a free course through the human system, thus giving the tissues new and fresh nourishment, and after a short treatment of this method old men and women grow young and vigorous; weak men and women gain their normal strength, emaciated individuals recover their lost flesh; aches, pains and congestion disappear and a new human being develops from, in many cases, total wrecks.

Understand, we don't ask you to take our word for it, although we enjoy the highest reputation in the financial world, are responsible. Send for it and try it for thirty days, and you'll be surprised and delighted. Thousands of remarkable letters have been written the makers from users, referring to the cure of various diseases after doctors and medicines have failed, a few of which we print here which will be interesting to those who suffer.

Famous Physicians

Believe in and recommend it. Alice B. Stockham, M. D., Chicago, says of those famous Thermal Baths.

1. "It cleanses and promotes the healthy action of the skin as no other bath can do, thus relieving the other excretory organs.

2. "It equalizes the circulation of the blood, removes all local congestion of any part, which is one of the most important things to be accomplished in the treatment of disease.

3. "It is the quickest, easiest and most effectual means of purifying the blood known to man. It washes the body inwardly and outwardly of its impurities.

4. "It soothes and equalizes the nervous system, sweeps the cobwebs of care from the brain, leaving it clear and refreshed, and equalizes the flow of the nervous fluid throughout the body.

"For the above reasons these baths are especially useful in the treatment of all diseases arising from impurity of the blood, inactivity of the skin, local congestions or inflammations, or unbalanced nervous action.

"It is invaluable in drug poisoning, scrofula, consumption, diseases of the skin, dropsy, remittent and intermittent fevers, coughs, colds, catarrh, croup, gout, rheumatism, neuralgia, malaria, diseases of the liver and kidneys bronchitis, etc.

"Many eruptive diseases are healed by it. A lady told me she had salt rheum all over her body—a ten-cent piece could not be laid on a spot free from eruption. She took these wonderful baths daily for three months without any drugs and cured herself. She gained in strength, flesh and appetite, and besides, found herself free from many minor ailments."

It is important to know that the Makers Guarantee Results.

They assert positively, and their statements are backed by thousands of letters from persons of influence, that this Cabinet will cure nervous troubles, debility, purify the blood, beautify the skin and cure rheumatism, (they offer $50 reward for a case that cannot be relieved.) Cures most obstinate cases of women's ailments, la grippe, sleeplessness, neuralgia, malaria, headaches, gout, sciatica, eczema, scrofula, piles, dropsy, blood and skin diseases, liver and kidney troubles. Reduces obesity. Splendid for children.

It Will Cure a Hard Cold

Often with one bath, and for breaking up symptoms of la grippe, fevers, pneumonia, congestion, etc., it is invaluable—really a household necessity. Gives the most

Cleansing and Refreshing Bath Known

And even those enjoying the best of health should use it at least once or twice a week, for its great value lies in the marvelous power to draw out of the system impurities that cause disease, and it is truly proving a godsend to humanity.

One of Kansas' Most Prominent Physicians Sold Over $400 Worth of These Cabinets and Says:

Gentlemen:—I have been selling the Quaker Vapor and Hot Air Cabinets for home use for several months. I have used one myself right along, and will say that if every family had one and would use it according to directions, there would be very little, if any use, for doctors and drugs. The Quaker cleanses the whole system of its impurities, equalizes the circulation of the blood, thereby builds up the weak tissues and muscles, restoring health, beauty and strength to the body, and saves its cost in curing one severe case of cold or La Grippe. Your new Quaker is so easily cleaned and so perfect in construction that I can say it is the only Cabinet on the market which I would be willing to recommend.

I hope that people will all try them and be convinced. Yours truly, DR. E. L. EATON.

A Complete Wreck, No Tongue Can Tell How I Suffered, Cures Locomotor Ataxia After Doctors Failed.

John H. Shauch, Marlboro, N. J., writes: "I doctored and doctored with no benefit. Four years ago the examining physician at the Long Branch Hospital told me I had that incurable disease, locomotor-ataxia, and would never be well again. I read of the wonderful cures of the Quaker Cabinet and decided to try it. Used it several weeks and am to-day well and strong, and better than for years. No pains, no aches. Take no medicine. It is certainly a godsend to me. Am fifty-four years old."

Rescued From the Tomb, Cured Dropsy, Kidney Troubles, and Many Other Ailments.

Mary L. Willis, Cloverdale, Ala., writes: "Life was a burden to me. I almost despaired of existence before I saw the Quaker Cabinet advertised. Tried it and am alive and well and happy. Feel ten years younger. It cured me of dropsy, kidney troubles, congestion and many other ailments."

Terribly Afflicted with Kidney Troubles For 30 Years. Tried Many Remedies—No Relief. Unable To Work. Life was a Torture.

Mr. L. J. Morrison, Pellville, Ky., writes: "Have been afflicted with kidney troubles for 30 years. Have tried many remedies but received no relief. Was unable to perform any labor for 12 months. My kidney trouble had also caused muscular rheumatism, nervousness and general debility. Life was a tortue. I ordered the Quacker Cabinet and immediately began its use. After taking a few baths I was able to walk a few miles, and today I am enjoying life and health better than for many years."

His Mother Sick For 10 Years With Heart and Kidney Troubles. Wonderful Improvement In Two Treatments.

J. D. Archambean, Perry, Mo., writes: "My mother had been sick for 10 years with heart and kidney troubles. She was in bed when the Quaker Cabinet arrived. She took two baths and it was wonderful to see the improvement. She says she feels like a new person and is today enjoying better health than ever before."

Afflicted For 30 Years With Eczema. Suffered Intensely. Tried Different Physicians—No Benefit.

Mr. James Fleming, Sac City, Iowa, writes: "For 30 years I was afflicted with eczema. Suffered severely. I tried different physicians but little effect. Finally my attention was called to the wonderful cures by the Quacker Cabinet. I tried it and it has done far more for me than all other remedies. It also cured my husband of Sciatic Rheumatism. When tired and worn out a Hot Air Bath refreshes and makes you sleep like a baby."

Doctors Told Me Two Years Ago I Had Bright's Disease—Could Not Live A month. To-day Am Well and Strong—Do My Own Housework. The Quaker Treatment Saved My Life.

Elizabeth Coleman, Bokoshe, I. T., writes: "Two years ago Dr. Burgoin told me I could not live a month, that I had Bright's and Kidney disease. He recommended your Bath Cabinet and sent for one for me. It saved my life. I do all my housework. Have 9 in family. I can recommend them as the grandest thing on earth."

A Minister's Son Cured of Dropsy After the Doctors Gave Him Up. Terribly Bloated—Could Not Walk. Cured in Two Weeks by This Marvelous Treatment.

Rev. J. G. W. Henderson, Westron, La., writes, Nov. 18, 1902: "My Little boy had dropsy so bad he was past walking—so badly bloated the doctors gave him up. They said they could not cure him, but if he did not die, it would take them at least 3 years to cure him, but Thank God the marvelous Quaker Cabinet Treatment cured him in two weeks. Worth $1,000.00 to us."

Here and Hereafter.

So accustomed has Mr. Dawbarn become to advancing into the higher realms of thought that he has been properly designated as the California Philosopher, and he will bear that title as long as he lives on this earth plane. This series of articles from his pen will be read with deep interest.

PREFACE.

A very talented author, in a work just published, condenses all that Science knows and guesses up to date. He assures us that neither mentally, morally, nor physically has the human race varied, to any great extent, in the last ten or fifteen thousand years. The change in that time, he tells us, has not been more than from that of a Bushman in Africa to his Zulu neighbor.

Such progress as the world has gained has depended altogether upon invention and the use of mechanical appliances. Any such advance was impossible in the past, for there was a cultivated contempt for what are called practical things. Even Plato denounced them as debasing geometry. So Physical mechanics was counted as merely a branch of the military art, and despised by philosophers.

The real obstacle to progress was the very limited senses of man. His five senses give him a very inaccurate and unreliable notion of the world in which he lives, so that until he had invented new and better senses progress was impossible. These invented senses are really all we have to-day in which we surpass the past. Man's machinery for seeing, hearing and even feeling is far better than anything with which he was endowed by his mother Nature. For instance, some four thousand stars were about all the ancient man was able to see and count. The man of to-day could do no better were it not that the eye of the camera he has invented shows him hundreds of millions. And he has even invented new senses, and it is the knowledge gained through these new senses which largely constitutes the Science of to-day. A few such items will be alluded to as showing both the author's claims, and also his effort to destroy all belief in immortality, which destruction seems to be the real object of his book.

He is specially eloquent in describing what he calls "the world beyond our senses," and elaborates the divisions of space by the scientist into micro-microns, which bear, he tells us, the same relation to an inch that an inch bears to fifteen miles. This is not merely to show how far the man of science has traveled but to explain that by such careful and accurate weights, measures and analyses he has discovered that all things are merely electrical. Every affinity is merely a question of positive and negative electricity. This he declares accounts for attractions and repulsions, but it seems rather hard on the lad and lassie who fancy that love is all in all. They are evidently mistaken, and should be taught that love is merely an expression of electricity. Perhaps meters may be presently invented that will measure the quantity of electricity in a lover's kiss.

Still our learned author is apparently disgusted at the limits to his scientific investigation of natural phenomena. For instance he runs against "critical points!" which block his progress. Nature occasionally and in the most arbitrary manner changes her method of advance, whereupon the poor scientist proclaims it a "critical point," and makes a hop, skip and a jump across the intervening space. For instance, we can mentally halve anything, but half a molecule of water is no longer water but gas. There is the same result if you try to halve the molecule of say, suger, cotton or salt. When you break up their molecules you have merely oxygen, hydrogen, carbon, sodium, etc. So the molecule is itself evidently one of Nature's critical points, a fact of which we shall presently see the import.

Science has discovered, so our author tells us, that life is nothing but a series of fermentations, a different kind of yeast plant for each organ in the body. He repeats the old claim that without phosphorus there can be no thought. He defines nervous substance as "matter which thinks." He acknowledges that there is no longer a dividing line between plant, animal, vegetable—animate and inanimate objects, because, as he declares, "all matter lives."

The remarkable truths gathered and presented in this book, as well as its astounding omissions and conclusions will be the subject of the following chapters by the present writer, for the author makes a fierce attack upon "spirit return." He declares that if spirits really exist they could certainly and easily make use of the newly invented sensitive instruments, and thus give positive proof of their existence.

CHAPTER I.—INTELLIGENCE.

The stars of Cosmos appear to be a compilation of th same sort of "world stuff" as our own little planet, such, at least, is the lesson taught by the spectroscope, and astronomy confirms the tale. Some of such lessons are founded on solid fact; others are mere theories with which the facts seem to agree. But all these investigations and conclusions rest upon the knowledge we gather through our limited five senses, supplemented by artificial ones invented and manufactured by Homo, whereby he sees, hears and feels at distances impossible to normal man.

Neither the natural nor the invented sense reach out into the Hereafter, although man is immersed in that Hereafter as in the ocean of eternity. Normal man is deaf and dumb and pulseless to the invisible, but from what certain abnormal men and women have told him he fancies he can map out his own future. The trouble is that although spirit return may be accepted as true, yet it is always, and always must be a meeting between an abnormal mordent must be perpetually on his guard, for in every spirit communication he is listening to echoes from the hereafter that are unprovable by his every-day experience.

The writer proposes to take our normal life and experiences in this little world, and start our investigations from this end of the line. In other words, we will see what the Here has to say about the Hereafter, instead of listening to what the Hereafter has to say about the Here. All religion and all spirit return have consisted of inspiration and phenomena produced by the Hereafter.

Suppose for a little while we open our door and shut theirs. In other words we will keep to the strictly normal until we reach the dividing line. For a brief hour or two it is understood the physical, mental and spiritual man, as he is in this life, is to have the floor and make his little speech.

Everything in the Here, including the planet itself, may be said to be mortal, that is to say, it is always a blending of units into molecules which come and go, and some day drop apart. But as long as the molecular grouping remains we have the physical form. There come changes at certain points when we are surprised by a sudden change of form, as arbitrary and as great as that from ice to water. The changes within these points are called "evolution." Those outside are spoken of as having passed a "critical point," when without apparent rhyme or reason, form itself is lost in the change. So when we commence our study of the Here we find the incomprehensible unit is only known to theory until it has blended with its fellows into a molecule, when the scientist proceeds to subject it to his cross-examination. He declares it has poles which repel and attract, as with magnets of larger size. This is his foundation rock, for he asserts that it is electricity which is manifestng itself by polar attraction and repulsion, back of which he cannot go. If you assert there is something more manifested than mere attracton and repulsion, he hurls his dictionary at you, and retires into his den to write another volume on the potency of matter.

The careful student perceives that attraction and repulsion are weapons wielded by a SOMETHING, whereby it selects friend from foe. This something he recognizes as INTELLIGENCE, which stands back of attraction and repulsion, and yet is present and associated with substance and energy in every incomprehensible unit of Cosmos. That is to say, the student at his starting point goes back of the attraction and repulsion of the materialist, which for him are but forces wielded by the eternal unit.

A little further on in his quest the scientist is compelled to recognize intelligence as a factor in evolution. He cannot tell at just what station it got aboard the train, so he assumes it was manufactured in the baggage car while the train was running. By whom or how he does not pretend to guess, further than that certain molecules put their heads together and invented or evolved it. All this vivid mind play, which he calls "scientific imagination," is totally unnecessary and useless, for the intelligence at which he marvels was aboard the train when it started from its headquarters in eternity, and was associated in every unit with substance and energy. So our starting point is just a stage back of that of the materialist, who spends much of his time prospecting in Cosmos for "mind stuff," though so far without discovering a trace of it.

Let us start with a definition, so that our position cannot be misunderstood. Mind is intelligence in activity, after it has passed a certain critical point. Where there is no mental activity there is no mind. But intelligence is and has always been present long before the evolution of mind, but with only so much of output as the conditions will permit. But we do not call it mental activity until intelligence has given evidence that she has achieved the evolution of mind, which is itself a step in her wondrous uplift of evolution.

So our starting point in our study of HERE is the unit as an eternal and apparently indestructible trinity, and the scientist shall himself be our guide as we advance. That the planet was once "world stuff" in space 300 degrees below zero seems to be an astronomical verity. And geology tells us that it got hot by compression of its units into the little round ball called earth. And we all know for a fact that it is still hot inside, at least in spots. But the unit neither freezes nor roasts. If it be very hot or cold he and his companions keep apart as far as possible. But as soon as there is a chance, two or a dozen get together and start a molecule, whereupon Cosmos gets a new citizen. He would not be much to look at, even with a microscope warranted to stand temperature, but he grows, and evolution is born. The more molecules in one Cosmic spot the more substance, energy and intelligence to outwork evolution.

Some day that "world stuff" cools down. The process is going on now—out yonder—and the spectroscope confirms geology, and tells us of the birth of a new world. The scientist preaches of law and order which, he assures us superintend a planet childbirth in Chaos; but, if you will watch the process you will find he means "intelligence" every time. So Science has a foundation of scorched corpuscles for her igneous rocks, seething and bubbling in an atmosphere of rather wet units posing as steam, but full of the possibilities of all that can be and shall be in that planet's history, for Intelligence never lets go of its partners in the work.

What Intelligence, Energy and Substance are, no planet man knows, any more than he can think bounds to space or analyze electricity. But the time comes for that planet when the firm can evolute beyond the attraction of cohesion which is its very first manifestation. The firm has opened up a new department, and we find visible life on its bargain counter. It is a step up for Intelligence, with, perhaps, a trifle more of energy and less of substance.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

Again it was autumn and the nearer hills glowed in the mellow sunlight like great bouquets, and the distant hills slept wrapped in a purple veil. Martha, now a tall, slender girl, sweet and pure in her dawning womanhood, stood upon the steps of the old weatherbeaten farm house, watching the gambols of her little brother and a pet lamb, with eyes bright with pleasure. She was startled when a voice just outside the gate called her name. Looking up she saw Elder Drake. He had not made an appearance for some time before, but now he bethought him of his flock among the hills, partly because the evenings were growing long and there would be plenty of time to work up a revival, and partly because at this time of the year the farmers sold off their surplus crops and stock, and sometimes had a little more money than was needed for immediate use.

The Elder came in and made himself very much at home. Martha noticed with a sense of uneasiness that he watched her keenly as she brought him his tea and pie and all the best food the house afforded.

After he had finished his meal and the table had been cleared, he said to Martha, "Come and sit down beside me; I want to talk to you."

Martha glanced appealingly at her mother, but seeing no sign of disapproval she reluctantly obeyed. The elder took the slender hand in his own—not over clean one. "You are getting to be a great girl," he said. "You are old enough to serve the Lord. Do you love your savior?"

Martha remained silent.

"Answer when you are spoken to," said her mother sharply."

"Sister Weston," said the Elder officiously, "will you allow me to wrestle with this poor lost lamb in my own way?"

Mrs. Weston, with a sullen look upon her face withdrew, and the Elder continued: "The Lord is coming in all his power and glory, Martay, and I can't bear the thought of your being lost in that dreadful day; but if you do not repent of your sins you will be one of that number that shall call upon the rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of the Lamb and of him who sitteth on the throne. Are you ready to meet that dreadful day, child?"

"No," said Martha decidedly, "and I don't know of any one who is. You and my father were afraid last winter when the northern lights turned the snow so red."

The Elder hitched his chair uneasily, then said in a severe tone: "My child, you should not talk about things of which you know nothing. The question now is, are you ready to meet that dreadful day? I see plainly that you are not. My duty calls me to wrestle with you in prayer. You must kneel beside me. Come," he said authoritatively, as Martha hesitated. With burning cheeks and throbbing pulses Martha obeyed, not knowing what else she could do. The Elder then proceeded in an ever-increasing volume of voice to rehearse before his Deity many of said Deity's good points. He then told him all, or nearly all, of his proceedings in days past and also the course of conduct that he, the Elder, expected him to pursue in the future. These trifles disposed of, he proceeded to arraign the young culprit by his side in terms sufficiently plain for the Lord's comprehension. Instead of a young and innocent girl who scarcely knew the meaning of the word sin, one would have supposed from the Elder's language that he had brought the Lord a hardened villain caught in a criminal act. After some half-hour of oratory before the throne of grace, he paused and in a voice hoarse from over-exertion said: "Pray for yourself now. Call upon the Lord mightily and he will hear and forgive your sins."

"Oh, I can't" said Martha in a voice trembling with terror. "Let me go! oh, please let me go!" and breaking from the restraining hand, she sprang to her feet and fled from the house.

Some time later she crept cautiously back to the house to see if the Elder had gone away. As she neared the door she saw him standing with her father the other side of a lilac shrub. Her father was strapping up his pocket book before replacing it in his pocket. Without a thought of eavesdropping Martha paused to listen, and heard her father say: "That money is some I saved to buy Mardie a new dress, but as it is all I have, I have let you have it."

The Elder rolled his eyes piously: "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn, saith the Word. The girl is better off without her dress."

"I don't know about that," said Mr. Weston. "The girl has not had anything better than calico for years, and it is natural for a young girl to want to dress like other girls."

"I tell you, Brother Weston, it is all vanity," said the Elder decidedly. "Does not the Bible say, 'Come out from among them and be ye separate?' Does it not say a 'peculiar people?' I am surprised at you. Dress like other girls—indeed! You better read again what the apostle Paul says about women and their vanities."

And so the Elder had taken the money that was to have bought her a new dress—the dress she had wanted so long. All the sneers and taunts which her thoughtless comrades in school had hurled at her regarding her parents' unpopular religion; all the poverty of home and its furnishings rose up before her and her heart was filled with bitter resentment. Shaking her fist at the Elder, she exclaimed passionately: "I hate you! I hate you!"

Then once again she fled from the house but this time she took the path leading to Neighbor Brown's. At first Martha had looked upon Mrs. Brown with curiosity not unmixed with fear, but as Mrs. Brown had spoken to her kindly and always tried in little ways to amuse and interest her, Martha's heart went out to her, and the two were soon fast friends. Martha was not slow in perceiving—young though she was—that so far as education and refinement went Mrs. Brown was greatly superior to the other women in the neighborhood. To be sure she had received advantages that the others had not, but Martha only saw the woman and looked up to her and admired her. Mrs. Brown was always pleasant and agreeable, and in her room Martha found books, pictures and papers. The little girl was fond of reading, but at home she rarely had anything to read but the Bible, the hymn book, and their one weekly paper, "The Coming Conflagration."

Martha's mother looked upon stories of all classes as wicked," and if Martha showed any yearning for them she was sternly informed that whoever loves and makes a lie shall have his part in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone.

In Mrs. Brown's own home Martha spent some of the happiest hours of her life in good, wholesome reading, from which she gathered many noble ideas which greatly influenced her after life.

Mrs. Weston possessed a very sharp tongue which she did not fail to use upon all occasions, and it must be said that Martha was much more comfortable with Mrs. Brown than with her mother.

To-day Martha found her friend sitting upon a lounge with her lap full of old letters. She looked up as Martha entered the open door and motioned her to a seat beside herself. "What is the matter, dear?" she asked kindly. Martha burst into tears and sobbed out the story of her wrongs. Mrs. Brown listened attentively, and after Martha had finished, offered what comfort she could.

"Is Elder Drake a good man," asked Martha.

Mrs. Brown smiled and said quietly, "We will hope so. He seems very much in earnest; but you know, Martha, his religion and mine are widely different. It is quite likely he would think me very wicked."

A sudden idea struck Martha. Turning to her friend, sh said, "Will you please tell me, Mrs. Brown, what makes you a Spiritualist?"

Mrs. Brown hesitated and then said, slowly: "Yes, I will tell you. You are old enough to understand and I surely have a right to tell you if I wish to. A good many years ago I buried my first husband. He was one of the kindest of men, honest, pure and noble, but he was not a Christian. He would never have anything to do with religion." If anyone said anything to him upon the subject he would always laugh and say he could not see as the Christians behaved any better than he did. After he died the minister just the same as told me that my husband was in hell. For a time I was just about wild with grief, and then I began to study the Bible for myself. Your parents would be very angry with me if I should tell you the conclusions I arrived at, but they did not comfort me much, for I feared that I should never see my husband again. One night I was lying wide awake, thinking of these things, and I heard a voice say, 'Nellie, Nellie!' 'Frank!' I cried, and half sprang up in bed. The moon was shining in through the window and it was so light I could see every object in the room distinctly. I looked in amazement, for after I had spoken I remembered that my husband was dead. At the sound of his familiar voice I forgot for a moment, but there he stood right beside my bed. I could see him plainly in the bright moonlight. He put out a hand as if to touch me. 'Nellie,' he said, 'I am all right,' and the next instant he was gone—vanished instantly before my eyes, and the room was empty!"

Martha's eyes were big and bright as she turned to her friend and asked eagerly, "Did he ever come again?"

"Yes, once afterward he came, and a woman came with him. They both stood beside my bed and he spoke the words, 'My mother,' and that was all. I saw him distinctly, but the female figure was shadowy and I did not see her features. Do you know what a medium is?" asked Mrs. Brown abruptly.

Martha confessed her ignorance, and Mrs. Brown tried to explain; then she went on: "Some time after that occurrence I went to see a medium of whom I had heard. She, while in an unconscious condition produced this. Read it!"

Martha took the paper from her friend. It contained some dozen lines written in a peculiar hand. It began: "Dearest Nellie," and ended with "your loving husband, Frank."

"Now," said Mrs. Brown, "look at this," and she held out a letter yellow with age.

Martha looked at the letter and then at the other paper. "Why, the writing looks just alike," she exclaimed.

"Yes," said Mrs. Brown, very quietly, "the writing is the same. I cannot explain it, but I know that in some way my husband through that medium wrote that message to me."

As Martha walked slowly home in the gloden glow of a brilliant October sunset she pondered over what Mrs. Brown had told her. At last she paused and looked around her. The forests were ablaze with color. The sky was an intense blue and delicate golden clouds floated across the west. Down in the pasture where the lambs were bounding among the rocks, the brook with merry song and chatter ran chasing along, dark as night where the hemlocks dipped their robes in its waters, and white and shining where the sunlight streaming between the hills kissed it good night.

Martha drew a deep breath. "It is very beautiful," she said, "and I do not see what the Lord wants to burn it up for. Mrs. Brown don't believe he will, and Mother don't, either. If she did she would not scrimp all the time to get land and cattle just to be burned up. Mother just the same as said that God would destroy Mrs. Brown, but I can't see why she is not just as good as anybody, if she is a Spiritualist; at any rate she does not scold all the time."

Martha went on slowly.

"Mother says the devil does all the things, such as Mrs. Brown told me about. If he does and God lets him when he might stop it, then I don't see why God is not as wicked as the devil. Oh, dear," said Martha, twitching her shoulders impatiently, "I wish I did know what to believe. Elder Drake says one thing, and he knows it is so for God said so; and Elder Rudwin says it is not so; he knows, for God never said any such thing, and Elder Homes says that both the others are wrong. Oh, dear!" and with a sigh of despair Martha hastened homeward.

A few days later Martha went up to her father as they were alone together in the living-room and said: "Was there a moon last night, Father?"

"Moon! No, it was dark as a pocket, it was so cloudy. Why?"

"Because I saw a bright light upon the slanting wall opposite my bed."

"Pshaw!"

"I did, father," persisted Martha. "It was about the size of our looking-glass, and it was real bright. I got up and looked out of the window, but I could not see a light anywhere. What do you suppose made the light?"

"Wall, I dunno. A good many things happen that I can't explain, but I s'pose I could if I knew enough," with which sage reflection he left his daughter to her reflections.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

An Absolute Obstacle to Progress.

Truth is eternally golden. Error has an end.

"Do unto others as you would have others do unto you." Were this principle lived up to, strictly, the world would soon become wreck and ruin. After two thousand years of preaching it; no man has ever lived it. This is a pretty fair length of time for a trial.

A drunkard forces drink on others because he would have others force drink on him. The ruin has commenced. A rich man gives all his money to others because he would have others give all theirs to him. "Easy come, easy go." They make foolish use of it, and their energies are paralyzed. The ruin increases. Roosevelt hands the White House chair over to the world because he would have the world give him further untried honors. He himself is injured, and the world is thrown back a hundred years. Suppose two of the most honest, intelligent and cultivated persons meet. One proposes to the other, in the nobility of his soul, to do thus and so unto him. It might be the last thing he would desire. The meat for one is poison for the other. The "Golden Rule" was born of priestcraft. It is next to impossible, where one has a personal interest, for him to have a sound judgment.

You see the Golden Rule is, by its nature, utterly and hopelessly impracticable. Every day and every hour the world is wishing for things done unto it, which, if granted, would quickly make the whole structure totter.

The most sensible prayer the Christian makes to his Deity is, "thy will, not mine be done." This is the direct opposite of the "Golden Rule." It is an acknowledge that man is not yet all-wise; that he is so largely incompetent to be his "brother's keeper," that, were all his desires unto others obtained, it would be his own worst enemy. The world's desires are so very largely affected by bias, that, unchecked, disaster and destruction would engulf it.

Science never stoops so low as to use the term "Golden Rule." It sees deeper and acts wiser. That makes a good commencement for a new cycle of evolution.

The free thought element had gotten above the Golden Rule dogma previous to the reappearance of science. The Catholics, Protestants, and pseudo reformers are now the only supporters of this dogma.

Golden Rule is attractive by reason of its golden name. Gold is glittering, and universally desired; any sentiment built on its name is seized with ravenous avidity. Is it any wonder the people have gone wild over it?

The "Golden Rule" is the shibboleth of the Christian theology. No other bait is more tempting. It promises fullness and gives emptiness. It is life to the opulent, and death to the dependent. The "Golden Rule," stripped of its glitter, is a Pewter Rule.

Many otherwise cultured spirits, having not yet outgrown some of their old ways, return with the same old refrain of the Golden Rule. Some spirit teaching still needs reforming.

The Golden Rule, like all other rules, has its exceptions. Some of these are very beautiful. However, in analyzing principles, exceptions are not included. Else no principle could be questioned.

"Let the past dead bury its dead," and let the Golden Rule ignis fatuus become, as rapidly as possible, part of the burial.

TWO LIGHTS.

It flashed out from the dark,
It blazed and shone
As an electric spark,
It came—was gone.
For one sweet moment, one,
To please it came,
From Sorrow it had flown—
Wild Passion's flame.

It dawned as Christians die,
Pure and serene;
Gently it swept the sky,
A holy sheen.
It warmed and cheered at noon,
Radiant above;
Glorious at sunset shone—
Eternal love.

Thinking the World Better.

There are said to be a few advocates of the new cult, sect or organization which has been formed in California, in Waco, Texas, and it is said that the methods prescribed for getting and retaining health and greater longevity are followed out. The matter seems to be metaphysical and psychological in character, as one of the plans of the membership is to have each and every member concentrate their minds daily, at exactly 12 o'clock (watches being arranged so as to take into account the difference in time), all over the country, and think of pleasant things, of things which they wish to do, and hope to accomplish, thereby getting a keener desire to live and having more of an object in life.

By thinking at the same time for 15 minutes it is argued that the minds and wishes of the members are brought in touch by subtle electric or magnetic currents, to the betterment of all; the eyes must be closed and the mind completely withdrawn from other thoughts during the 15 minutes mentioned. There are other things which members do, but most all of them are along magnetic or psychological lines.

It is said that there are two or three thousand members in the United States already, and the desire is to belt the earth with members as soon as possible in order to establish the thought currents around the world.

That life is long which answers life's great end—Young.

Why I Believe in Woman Suffrage.

I believe in woman suffrage because I am an individual, responsible for achieving the best possible results for myself physically, morally and spiritually. To do this I must be free to think my own thoughts, to mold my own opinions, to order my own actions, to direct my own course of conduct in accordance with the high standard laid down by the Great Teacher, unhampered, unhindered, untrammeled by unwise jurisprudence, unwise legislation, unjust laws, unprincipled policies heaped upon me without my consent, and which I am powerless to remedy without the right of suffrage which is my inherent right.

Individuals, known as men and women, make up the world's millions of human beings, who were placed upon this earth to work out all of the various life problems together—from the least to the greatest—irrespective of sex. Only when they have thus worked have we seen real progress, real success.

It takes many hundreds of years to correct the mistakes made in the feudal ages, when might made right. Back there, man got his ideas that an all-wise Providence had made him alone His divine agent for carrying forward the work of the world, first by brute force and later by his opinions expressed through the ballot. Since the ballot is nothing more nor less than the expression of an individual's opinion, it seems extremely ridiculous that any time or effort should have to be expended in proving that individuals known by class distinction as females have opinions and therefore they must give expression to them, just the same as those individuals known by class distinction as males.

Nothing more unreasonable, more unphilosophical, could be harbored in the brains of men than this old superstition of their natural supremacy. We shall yet see the educated heart, hand and brain—blessed trinity of the new generations of men and women—achieving together that for which they were created, when might no longer makes right, but right makes might.

SPIRITUALISM.

J. C. F. Grumbine Offers Some Impressive Thoughts Thereon.

It has been some years since I have had the pleasure of writing for The Progressive Thinker, but during that time Spiritualism as the only science of life as I perceive it, has moved steadily on to triumph. It is true that changes and developments have come both to the platform and its speakers, to the cult and its media, but they have washed and purified rather than shivered or destroyed the rock upon which as a foundation the science or revelation of Spiritualism stands. Mediums with their variety of psychical phenomena and experiences have come and gone, yet recruits have taken their places to deepen the convictions and enlarge the range of facts upon which the demonstration of a future immortal life rests. It is true that Robert Dale Owen, the author of "Footfalls on the Boundary of Another World," has long since been dead, but other pioneer writers and workers are still with us, Andrew Jackson Davis, Dr. Peebles, Cora L. V. Richmond, Hudson Tuttle, and a host of others.

The spiritual movement as the key to spiritism is stronger, more formidable and impregnable than ever, for it is the life of Spiritualism, without which the demonstrations of spirits would mean nothing.

If as one reviews or retrospects the past there is a feature of the movement more emphasized than another it is spirit and not spirits, for the new scientist or Spiritualist is learning to establish the rationale of Spiritualism upon spirit as well as spirits, realizing that spirits could have no existence per se without spirit. Hence we hear in these recent years more of the spiritual life, spirituality, the spiritual world, in fine, of spirit, as the beginning and end of all that is involved in or evolved from the life that now is. This of course has never been denied nor yet has it been brought vigorously forward by the middle men of our cause, but the old workers felt and understood it and perceived in the spiritistic phenomena of media ground for the spiritual hypothesis. Hence, if at the present hour eyes are turned toward the reality and realization of the spirit within man, it is not because the demonstrations of spirits are denied or eschewed but logically enforced, for the conclusion is hidden away in the premise, and the meaning of life is discovered in the nature or essence of life itself.

The divinity of man leads at once to a consciousness of the reality and divinity of spirit, the content, essence, life of spirits. So that one naturally feels the immanence of spirit in matter and that matter itself is permeated with and could not manifest save for spirit.

The result of this has been the awakening of the soul to the realization of the distinction in the very nature of things between the personal and the universal, the material and the spiritual, the human and the divine—not in the sense that the universe is not governed from centre to circumference by law, nor that it is not as Pope so aptly expresses it in that famous couplet—

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is and God the soul,"

but rather than man is divine, eternal, infinite, omniscient, omnipotent in essence now and here, and he can therefore, if he choose, penetrate the thralldom of the senses and declare as well as express his divinity.

Man, as a compound of matter, is human, weak, impotent, ignorant, imperfect, subject to circumstance and condition, a creature of fate; but as divine, that is as potentially and essentially immaterial or divine he can, like water, rise to his highest level. And he becomes therefore master of his fate, a giant rather than a dwarf, a god rather than a mere bauble. His health, success and opulence are assured and secured on this and no other ground, for that is the reason why some men and women succeed more than others, some are healthy and others diseased and some are rich while others are poor. The law holds good under all circumstances and in all exigencies. But it is the consciousness of one's own power, applied or implied in a selfish or unselfish way, which leads to material and spiritual possession.

If the spiritual movement has done this and is doing this and will continue to do this, if as Theodore Parker said, Spiritualism will prove "Man's divinity lay in his pure humanity," the world will be the better and finer, and stronger for the revelation. This, I take it, Spiritualism has done for mankind and is doing, and freedom from political and industrial bondage and tyranny will follow. In fact all good things ought to follow. They cannot come too soon. We are ready for them—that is, some of us are, ready for this supreme socialism in which man is free to live his life, not as government dictates but as conscience orders.

Personally, so far as spirit demonstrations are concerned, I have been favored above most men and I have, so far as I know never been deceived. I know that spirits can and do manifest, and knowing this I have followed the trail and guidon back, far back perhaps, to immortality and divinity.

THOUGHT.

Thought is force moving in immensity,
It exceeds in power the glowing sun,
Impelling man upward as cycles run
Enduring as the will of Deity.
It vibrates on man's brain unceasingly,
It is the author of all music sung.
It finds expression on man's willing tongue
Forever advancing resistlessly.
Thought is the lever that uplifts mankind
It forms the ideal to which men aspire,
The brotherhood of man upon the earth.
Thought develops activity of mind—
Before its light blind ignorance retires,
Because its weakness invites foolish mirth.

HENRY M. EDMISTON.

Important Facts, Illustrating in an Impressive Manner the Necessity of Watching Carefully the Movements of the Catholic Church Throughout the Whole World.

Col. Edwin A. Sherman, of Oakland, Cal., (the custodian of the key to Lincoln's tomb) and a bright light in the Masonic order, writes words of caution in the "Tyler," quoted by the Masonic Observer, of Minneapolis:

"I have a word or two of some timely caution to send you for our traveling brethren, either tourists or commercial travelers.

"It seems that a general decree has gone out from the papal hierarchy throughout Spanish America, and is especially enforced in the Central American states, for the people not to sell or give food, lodging or other accommodation, no matter how urgent and pressing the need, to anyone wearing a society emblem or jewel of any kind, and more especially a Masonic one.

"A member of Oakland Commandery, No. 11, of Knights Templar, has recently returned from Central America, and he relates the difficulties which he encountered when traveling through that country. He had been riding on horseback all day over a rugged road without meeting any accommodation anywhere on the way; and at evening rode up to a small hamlet to remain over night. He went to a house to see if he could obtain information, as there was no public place for entertainment. A woman came to the door, and he asked for some food, which he was willing to pay for, and she replied that while she had food, she could not sell or give it to him, as she was forbidden to do so by the priest. He thought it strange, as he had never seen the priest and knew nothing about him; while he wondered how the priest could know anything about him, he being a total stranger in the country. He urged his famished condition, and that he must have food in some shape or he would starve. But she was inexorable, and said that she was ordered not to give food to a heretic, and more especially to one who was a Mason, as she supposed him to be from the jewel he was wearing, which was the ordinary Knights Templar cross. She was deaf to all his imprecations for food, offering to pay her any price for it. At last, after a very long parleying, she told him to put that jewel out of sight and go over to the hut of an Indian, which she pointed out at a distance, and perhaps he might get something there. So he rode to the Indian's hut and obtained a meagre supply for his immediate necessities, and then rode on; but during the remainder of his sojourn in that country he was careful to keep his Masonic emblems out of sight, otherwise he was not only in danger of starving to death, but of being put out of the way in some other manner.

"The papacy is putting on the screws wherever it can do so, and is tightening up things all around, even to preventing commercial relations between countries where it can do so by denying the right of nature and hospitality to travelers who are suspected of belonging to any secret society, and more especially of Masons. Therefore, for their own comfort and securities when starting to travel in such countries where the rule of priest, either openly or secretly prevails, let our brethren keep their jewels and emblems out of sight.

"EDWIN A. SHERMAN.

"Oakland, Cal."

In another letter Col. Sherman writes:

"I will give a statement of fact as related by a brother and Sir Knight, one of the most promient merchants of San Francisco and of the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce, of which he was an eye witness but powerless to act, which he related at a banquet of the Knights Templar recently in that city.

"A few years since he was in one of the republics of Central America. While there, in one of the towns, a native, supposed to be a Mason, when on his death-bed, would not send for the priest, nor pay for absolution, nor masses to be said for his soul, died; and his wife had him buried outside of consecrated grounds. She, in turn, was taken sick, and would not send for the priest, and died also. The priest himself then went with a yoke of oxen to the house and hitched onto the body by the neck and dragged it through the streets of the town, followed by the little children, the daughters of the dead mother, who were crying piteously, and he dragged the body to the outskirts of the town and left it to be devoured by swine and the dogs. This our brother witnessed himself, and the expression of horror that went around that banquet table cannot be described."

There, Americans! There you have the delightful picture of Catholicism when it has the power! Behind all the sweet words and cajolery of priests, archbishops, cardinals and popes, about their love of American freedom, at the basis it is all love of the freedom which allows them to enslave mankind. Think of the blatant, thick-necked priest dragging the dead body of the mother by a chain around her neck, through the streets, with her weeping children following, and a procession of the blind dupes shouting and deriding. Out they go into the vacant country and there leave the mangled corpse for the hogs and dogs, fighting over the horrible repast!

HUDSON TUTTLE.

THE NECESSITY OF WATCHING ROME CAREFULLY.

Careful observers of political matters have noted for years the subtle and persistent efforts of the papal authorities at Rome to obtain official recognition by our government at Washington.

Since the close of the war with Spain these efforts have been especially marked, and it must be admitted that they have been far too successful. There was the mission of Gov. Taft to the late pope, Leo XIII., which was clearly of a semi-diplomatic character, although the authorities at Washington insisted that it was only a business scheme to settle the difficulty in the Philippines arising from the lands claimed by the friars. Doubtless with a view to allay suspicion the negotiations were transferred from Rome to Manilla.

Now comes a dispatch from Rome saying the papal representative has been recalled from Manilla by the new pope, and that the negotiations must be continued at Washington, if at all, and that the representative of Rome must be accorded some sort of diplomatic standing by the government of the United States, the pope hoping to further this end by making a special exhibit of Vatican curios at the St. Louis exposition.

Rome never wearies, and politicians never cease to fear Rome until they are forced to fear something more potential than Rome. In the determination of the American government no church shall dominate. It is quite time a very wholesome fear were brought to bear. These efforts to establish diplomatic relations at Washington are not directed to the winning of a mere hollow ceremonial. They are designed to affect the question of the temporal power of the pope, and to give Romanism a predominant influence and standing in this country. This means to complicate our relations with Italy, a friendly power, as well as to give the Roman See a hold on this nation which no church should be permitted to exercise for one hour.

It has been but a few weeks since Senator Morgan, of Alabama, through the columns of the Southern Methodist Review, exposed the devices of Rome as they were embedded in the Columbian treaty for the construction of the Panama canal. That great interest, and others of far greater importance to Romanism, are involved in this persistent effort to establish diplomatic relations with our government. It is time to put the priests and the politicians on notice that the American people will have nothing of this sort. We want none of this dickering with a foreign power which claims both spiritual and temporal functions.

The long and the short of the matter is, that the time has come in the history of the world when the Romish church must decide whether it will be a political or an ecclesiastical organization. If it chooses the latter it should be accorded the same rights and privileges (and no more) that are accorded to other churches. If it proposes to be a temporal power and claim political authority its emissaries should be caused to understand that the American people will not tolerate for a moment any meddling by foreigners in the affairs of this government, and that our government has relations with the king of Italy and that it distinctly declines to recognize the temporal claims of the pope. The Italian people have put the king on the throne, and it has never been the policy of this government to take sides against the people of any country who seek to choose their own rulers as against the pretensions of despots.

The efforts of Rome to play the double role of both a church and a state is unendurable. For this cause France is now expelling some of the Romish orders. For the same reason Bismarck made issue with Romanism in Germany, and Gladstone sounded his note of warning in his notable work entitled "The Vatican Decrees." For this cause the American people will do well to watch Rome with the utmost vigilance just now.

Heretofore the United States has had less to fear from this quarter than have the European powers; but the day of our partial security from this peril has passed. The results of the war with Spain have brought on conditions that have never before existed, and we are now, more than all other governments, exposed to the machinations of Rome; and the danger is all the greater because the fears of our people are at rest by reason of our inexperience in dealing with the Jesuitism of Romish diplomacy and devilment. We will do well to take alarm in time, and learn from the experience of other lands what Vaticanism in politics means.

We hope our readers will draw the attention of their senators and representatives in congress to this matter, that being forewarned they may be forearmed. And we say to all our public men whose eyes may fall upon these lines that here is an issue upon these lines about which the people will not be trifled with. The days of the old "American Party," with more than quadrupled power, will return, and party lines be disarranged as they have not been since the revolution of 1860, if this dickering with Rome does not speedily cease.

The priestly lobby at Washington may seem strong with Cardinal Gibbons conveniently near, at Baltimore, to direct its movements. But the spirit of a genuine Americanism, which abhors a political church, is stronger, and it may be aroused on occasion.—The Advocate, Atlanta, Ga.

A distinguished clergyman last week, preaching to a large congregation, dealt with certain aspects of present social conditions.

His emphasis of the importance of morality throughout life was admirable and truthful.

His denunciation of the divorce evil was powerful and in the interest of the home and of the future.

But his attack on the American public school, one of a regular series of such attacks daily becoming more numerous, we feel bound to resent and oppose.

The public school of America does not need any defender. It underlies the country's progress, it is the ONE hope of the country's future. Only knowledge EXACT knowledge, brings progress.

But any clergyman or any religion that attacks the public school does need a defender, for such a clergyman or such a religion, if it speak with authority, confesses fear of knowledge, which means fear of truth.

In the attack on the public school it is stated that the public school, in which education in FACTS is separated from the inculcation of religious BELIEF, accounts for the lack of morality in the people. Crimes of one kind or another are pointed out as the results of the public school, in which spelling, arithmetic, geometry and other departments of fact are kept distinct from the religious training, which includes miracles and belief.

We shall show how unjust and foolish is the attempt to connect individual crime with the splendid, beneficent, national public school system.

The newspaper which contained the attack mentioned on the public school told also of a young army officer, named Murtaugh. This young man had disgraced himself through fraud and had been accused of conduct unbecoming an officer, and also of being a common thief.

It happens that this young man got his education in a religious school, a school in which religion is taught with geography, etc.

Would it not be stupidly unjust to hold that RELIGIOUS school responsible for this unfortunate young man's predicament?

That same newspaper contained an account of a young woman confined in the city prison, accused of forgery and other crimes. That young woman's education was received in a RELIGIOUS institution. Would it not be unjust to hold the good, earnest women who taught her responsible for her moral shortcomings?

Czolgosz, who murdered President McKinley, was educated in a religious school; he never attended an American public school. Would it not be a stupid crime to hold the RELIGIOUS school responsible for the murder?

The public school, in which all the children of the nation may meet on equal terms, is the nation's glory and greatest hope.

There are religious schools of all kinds, Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic and others, in which children are well educated, and in which, in accordance with their parents' desire, religious teaching is added to the other branches of instruction.

These schools are well managed, they do great good, they should be treated with respect. They should be paid for by those who want them.

But the public schools also should be treated with respect, and especially by ministers of religion.

The Constitution of the United States forbids the recognition of any religion by the Government, which means that all religions should be treated alike, justly and impartially.

Common sense and common justice demand that when all the people are taxed for the education of childhood religion should be left out of the school course that no faith may be offended.

Wherever Protestantism, however indirectly, is made a feature of the public school justice and right are violated.

The Protestant, the Catholic, the Jew, the atheist—all forms of religions; all forms of belief, and of unbelief—should find in the public schools the most intelligent inculcation of the established FACTS.

Those who wish their children to receive an education in which facts and religion are mingled have the right to do as they please, but they should do it at their own expense.

The man who attacks the American public school, be he clergyman or layman attacks the welfare of this country, although he may not realize it, and he attacks also the standing of his own religion in the estimation of the great majority of American citizens.

MRS. CATLIN REPLIES TO MOSES HULL.

To the Editor:—With no doubt a great many others of your readers, I confess to having felt a good deal of surprise to say the least, at some of the utterances of Brother Moses Hull in a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker, relative to the election of president and vice-president at the late convention of the N. S. A., and was more than delighted with the manly and fearless reply of our vice-president to this uncalled for and cruel attack.

As one of the delegates to that convention, and as one of the sympathizers with, and one of the signers of that "star chamber" petition, I think I am in a position to know something of the causes which led up to this, and while I offer no apology for any action which was then taken by the delegates, I feel it is due them that their constituents should understand the why and the wherefore of their actions, and in doing this I feel sure I shall voice the sentiments of the Illinois delegation, since one and all went to that convention with the feeling uppermost in their minds, that notwithstanding their love and reverence for the noble man who had been its president for so many years, the time had come, when for the good of all concerned, it would be well that a change be made, but while we went with a pretty well defined determination to vote for Dr. Warne, the man the West had chosen, because they knew him to be a faithful, loyal worker, an honorable man, and representative that we might well be proud of, still we went without instruction, perfectly free and untrammelled to vote as our conscience dictated, and never once did Dr. Warne even suggest that our vote be cast for him.

Above all personality, however, there loomed up the one great principle, the safety and success of our N. S. A., and it took but a few hours upon the floor of the convention hall, to realize that we were surrounded by an atmosphere of political intrigue which certainly was not creditable to a "spiritual body." Experience is a good teacher, and one of the lessons learned by that visit to Washington was never to make up the mind upon any vital question until face to face with it in public discussion. To my certain knowledge, on the one hand methods were resorted, too as scurrilous as they were unjust, to prejudice the minds of the delegates, and a system of bribery, if so it may be called, was in vogue, such for example as the buying up of proxies, on condition that they vote for so and so. These methods may be permissible in a political gathering, but I think every right-minded Spiritualist should resent with indignation any such work in a body where the uplifting of humanity is claimed as a fundamental reason for its existence.

The result of this kind of work was an undercurrent, or rather an outspoken declaration by a large body of representatives, that if the office of president could be purchased by such unprincipled means, they would secede and form a federation of their own. IN THE FACE OF THIS GREAT DANGER, pacific measures were sought by those who had the welfare of the N. S. A. most at heart, and the advisability of again urging Mr. Barrett to reconsider his decision was quietly discussed with as many as possible to reach in the short time at our disposal, before the time for nominations; and I am proud to stand before the world as one of the "star chamber" actors in bringing about so glorious a result.

Never for one moment did the personality or nomination of Dr. Warne influence us in the matter; the safety of the N. S. A. was at stake, and before this all else sank into insignificance, and it shows the noble character of the man now our vice-president. Not one feeling of resentment was shown when our votes were turned against him.

Dr. Warne turned traitor to the West?

Nay, my friends, it was rather the West turned traitor to Dr. Warne, but only that greater good might come to the N. S. A. at large.

So far as the Wisconsin vote is concerned, I feel it right to say, that a personal inquiry as to the wishes of the Wisconsin delegation by one of the Western delegates brought out the reply from Mrs. Stewart, "We must first find out where Dr. Warne stands with regard to the M. P. I," and the much-to-be-regretted animosity shown by "our Moses" looks a little as though he had been somewhat upset in some cherished plan. We are glad, however, that he himself has declared that the Wisconsin vote was included in the twenty-five which were turned against the peace and unity of our national body, since after the fraternal spirit shown by Dr. Warne towards the M. P. I., when offering a resolution that money be appropriated for its support, certainly but few would have suspected such a result. That the pacific measure which prevailed was the right one, was fully demonstrated by the overwhelming vote which again placed for the eleventh time our revered president in the chair, and our only prayer is that ere another convention shall be called, as Spiritualists we may have outgrown all personal feelings, eschew political intrigue as unworthy the cause we represent and putting aside all personalities, stand courageously and loyally by the guns we have helped to plant, and rest assured when the time for retrospection of the work shall arrive, "Our Moses" will be found manning the great Gatling against the enemies of our cause, fighting for the noble principles of peace and harmony for which we ought to stand.

CAROLINE CATLIN.

TO-MORROW AND TO-MORROW.

"To-morrow," I said, "I will certainly live,"
But I spoke with a drunken mind;
"To-morrow," I cried, "to the poor I'll give,"
As I scattered my wealth to the wind.

But to-morrow came, and, her smiles were sweet,
And the wine was sparkling and red;
And my riches were rolled in a winding-sheet,
And the poor had to beg for his bread.

"To-morrow," I cried, "I will go to Christ,
For Tophet's too hot to-day;"
But to-morrow came, and the Styx was iced,
And the devil there was to pay.

And all my good is in after-now,
And the present is always here;
And I know how the voice of my present vow
Will sound in to-morrow's ear.

For to-morrow will ever a prospect be,
Unborn, in the future's womb,
Till I see it stand in God's chancery,
My judge at the crack of doom.

The Various Religions of Christendom.

Are They Becoming More Materialistic?

The answer given to that question will depend largely upon the views of those questioned, being decided by what they consider religion. Judging from the plaintive wail that arises from the believers in dogmatic theology, and accepting their view of the matter as the correct one; it would seem that the religious emotions are waning, and that the materialistic idea of life is becoming more dominant.

It is always proper to view both sides of a question and especially one that affects the strongest emotions of the human soul; namely, that desire to do reverence, to worship some being, power or force, or whatever it may be termed, that is superior to the worshiper. That desire is one that is deeply implanted in human life, and the question for which a correct answer would be desirable is, are we, that is the professed believers in the Christian religion, becoming more materialistic in our mode of thought and action.

Viewed from the plane of development on which we are located, we deny the statement absolutely. The tendency of the scientific researches of the age is to reject every statement that cannot be proven, at least leaving it open to further investigation. To assert that dogmatic theology, founded largely upon myths and fables, cannot be a positive force in the uplifting, the resurrection of human life from the degrading influences of the mere animal emotions is not materialism, it is a manifestation of a higher spiritual power than could possibly come to the individual soul when dominated by any theories that have not been proven as established upon the truth. We do not deny the fact that, considering the phase of mental and spiritual development of Christendom as a whole, when those views regarding life's duties were formulated and accepted, they had a moralizing and restraining influence for good over the barbarous and semi-barbarous races to which they were presented as the law and gospel.

Those incipient civilizations were incapable of comprehending anything higher. It would have been the height of foolishness to try to have them assimilate that which a higher civilization would have comprehended. It would have been "casting pearls before swine." In the unfoldment of life to higher planes there has always been forerunners, advanced missionaries of those higher systems whose duty it was to present all of the truth that they could possibly receive. True there was also necessary a preparatory work in the life of the masses before those agents representing the higher could begin operations.

In that storehouse of infinite possibilities there are treasured gifts that will be given to individuals, nations or races when they are ready to accept them, and consequently to make a wise use of them; and until they are they will be withheld.

Modern believers in the Christian religion have arrived to a plane of spiritual development where the old forms of religious belief pertaining to human obligations here, and what is to be expected hereafter, fail to give satisfaction; they do not supply the imperative wants of the progressive soul, and consequently the law of reaction has set in, and to the superficial observer the appearances seem to indicate an entire rejection of all views pertaining to the spiritual obligations of human life. What formerly furnished food for the development of the spiritual life has become worse than husks to supply that which is required for further growth.

The eighteenth and nineteenth centuries were periods of great religious upheavals, revivals in which many new sects were founded. To assert that those religious commotions had not accomplished anything in the work of human upliftment would be false on the very face of it. They had their mission to perform. They were part of the great evolutionary program by which society was educated up to a plane where it could understand and accept a more perfect manifestation of the truth. That the work for which they were intended has been well performed is evident, and the apparent decadence of the religious principle in life is only the ebb of the infinite tide that with each successive flow, is bearing onward humanity to a higher and more perfect conception of what are its duties and obligations.

The vale of darkness is rent asunder and light is beaming on the pathway which human life is traveling, with that power never before experienced. It is not the question of professing religion which is of paramount importance, but that of practicing the right kind; of accepting as the truth the statement that pure religion is to visit those who are in affliction and to keep unspotted and free from the obsessing influences that are holding down to the lower levels, the agonizing struggling humanity, who not knowing the way to freedom are still held in spiritual bondage.

Whoever makes an effort for the betterment of human conditions on either the physical or spiritual planes of life employs a mighty power that is uplifting to the individual who makes the effort. It may not be known to the world who the doer of those good deeds are, history may not record their acts, emblazoning their names as the world's great benefactors; that will not be necessary, the records on which they are engraven are immortal.

We affirm that all of the great religions of the world and their special mission to perform, and life would not have advanced with that vigor that they have, if it had not been for the help which they gave. To complain that they fell into the hands of the ignorant, those who could not comprehend the high principles for which they stood, does not impeach them in the least. All of them reached down into the barbarism which existed at the time of their advent and tried to bring life's standard up to a higher level. That they at least partially succeeded will be admitted by all rational minds.

When we consider the standard of the civilization of the races which nominally accepted Christianity, it is no cause of wonderment that the high standard which it presented was not accepted, and that many of the beliefs of those dawning civilizations were mixed with it. That was an inevitable consequence, and exists in political or religious revolutions. America, when the revolution was consummated that largely separated it politically from the old world monarchies, still retained certain features of those systems. It was all right. The growth of all institutions that possess permanency is slow. The evolution from the lowest type of the prehistoric human, up to the highest type of the present has been consummated only through unknown ages of time; but the trend was upward and temporary obstructions could only retard it for a time; so while the high ethical standard that Christianity presented to the world has been overshadowed by cruder systems, they will in time be eliminated. Names count but very little in the long run, they are only external signs to help designate one individual object from another; and whether the coming civilizations will use the name Christian or adopt some other is of little consequence. They certainly will accept all of the truth that is in that system, and the errors will be eliminated.

Materialism is a negation, an absence of something positive. It is a condition resulting from a disease of the religious principle, and when that is healthy it is a force that manifests itself in the life of the individual or race possessing it; benefiting its possessor and also those who come under its influence. One of the prominent causes of the appearance of the present strength of religious skepticism is, it is composed of a class of minds who have become weary of being fed on the husks of dead theological systems under the name of religion, and are hungering and thirsting for the bread and waters of life. Not knowing of the method to adopt by which they can receive that blessing, in the intensity of their reaction everything that has the mark of religion is rejected; with such minds time will bring about a remedy; they will see as the higher perceptions of the truth dawn upon them that there is as much difference between dogmatic theology and religion as there is between the polar and tropical regions of the globe.

We assert that the religious systems of Christianity are not becoming more materialistic, but they are feeling more directly than ever the influence of that power which is eliminating the false and giving more perfect freedom for the manifestation of the truth. It is materialism to which they have been under bondage in the past, and with the increasing light that is dawning upon them they are realizing that idolatry, whether it is of the physical type or false mental conceptions, is not true worship.

That all of the conflicting sects that compose the religious system of Christendom will be recast into one mold is not possible nor desirable. Variations of thought can exist in regard to the working of any system without any antagonism existing between the different opinions entertained. The work of separating from that religous system the false theories that have been incorporated in the body is a slow and laborious one, but it will be accomplished, and the future will witness a growth among the nations that profess that belief of a spirituality that will be resplendent with the brightness that will come from a more perfect knowledge of life's religious obligations.

The obliteration of the arbitrary boundary lines that have separated the different sects, and their ability to recognize the fact that while no one of them possesses all of the truth, all of them have in possession some, is very strong evidence proving that they are becoming more spiritual in their belief.

This decadence of extreme sectarianism is one of the most encouraging signs that the spiritual sight of the race is becoming more intensified, its vision is clearer, it can more correctly discriminate between the rubbish that has encumbered religious thought and its actual needs. Sects and parties will rise and perform the work intended for them and then pass away as far as their external organization is concerned; the mistakes that they made will also pass with them, but whatever work they accomplished for the betterment of life will remain as a permanent inheritance, evidencing the fact that life is moving to a higher plane of religious belief.

ECHOES OF THE SYMPOSIUM

LYMAN C. HOWE. MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

The Great Psychological Crime

A Comparison of Views and the Reasons Therefor.

Lyman C. Howe, the veteran Spiritualist Lecturer and Medium, a man well and favorably known as one of the foremost thinkers and writers in our ranks, will Champion the Cause of Truth as reflected in Spiritualism, while Mrs Florence Huntley, the well-known Author and Journalist, will defend all the statements in The Great Psychological Crime, which Mr. Howe will dare to assail, making a series of articles instructive, suggestive and inspiring, and which every Spiritualist should most carefully read

Mr. Lyman C. Howe: My Dear Sir:—Your valued communication of Nov. 28 has been read with pleasure and profit, and I agree with so much of it that I regret the more if we shall fail to coincide in all.

Your letter contains the first essential to any discussion, of any subject by any two individuals; whether that exchange be by letter or print or verbal speech. It displays that evenness of temper and graciousness of manner without which such discussion is neither attractive, educational nor helpful. This easy, even-tempered, smoothly flowing, initial letter reveals the solid basis of your influence and popularity among Spiritualists.

I shall have to confess that I am more apprehensive concerning your good nature than I am as to the result of your criticisms; for I am more easily vanquished by courtesy than by arguments. Nevertheless I am glad to feel that our discussion is to lie above the plane of personalities and disputations. I am also convinced that in the last analysis it will be found that if we differ at all it will be as to method alone, and not as to the eternal verities, the basic principles of Equity, Justice and Right.

You say, however, that this letter of yours is but a preliminary and as it does not contain specific criticisms nor specific questions, I will not attempt to anticipate you. I perceive that your mind has been trained to subtle comparisons, fine shadings and still finer analyses concerning the relations of mind and matter and of mind and mind. With your rare facility for combining accepted principles with your original interpretations, I fear that we are likely to be carried away from the theme under consideration, which, as I understand it, is the credibility and consistency and verity of The Great Psychological Crime.

Taking up your letter in the order of such questions as seem to me to be implied in it, I would like to say:

First—My own interest in this Harmonic Philosophy of the school of Natural Science, dates back nearly seventeen years. During this time I have known the author of The Great Psychological Crime personally and well. For all these years I have studied this unidentified author, as only the natural skeptic and determined truth seeker can study another individual who claims to possess an unusual knowledge and who assumes to teach other men a higher ethical standard.

This man who has boldly said of spiritual things, "I know," and of individual development, "There is a higher standard," has demonstrated (to my own entire satisfaction) a high order of intelligence, great moral courage and patient perseverance during this entire period.

From the viewpoint of the student who measures a "Master" by the life he lives, as well as by the learning he displays, I desire to voice my respect for and confidence in the author of this book. Not only do I bear witness of his intelligence, courage and integrity, but with both reason and conscience I have accepted him as my instructor, and have committed my own life to an extension of the noble philosophy he comes to present.

Second—These years of instruction in spiritual laws, principles, activities and forces have been also years of personal experiences and certain demonstrations on my own part. I also have acquired a sufficient amount of a particular kind of knowledge to justify my endorsement of the book and to raise my testimony concerning this work above the altitude of a mere belief, opinion or prejudice.

If this were not so I would not have assumed the role of editor, to protect the author in the seclusion necessary to the accomplishment of certain difficult tasks. Those who have known me best and longest will, I think, be the last to believe that my election to follow this exacting philosophy and life is due to an unreasoning credulity, blind prejudice or hypnotic command. I feel quite safe in saying that those who know me best will give me the strongest certificate for intellectual independence.

It is therefore by and in accordance with what I deem to be my sanity and my individual powers of reason and observation, that I vouch for the author of The Great Psychological Crime, endorse the motive of the book and commend its utterances to all lovers of mankind.

I do not specially take issue with you in that part of your letter wherein you say: "Observation has taught me that very few people are capable of rendering a just judgment in any case that bears against their strongest mental habits or infringes upon their most pronounced predilections. I am also persuaded that few people love the naked truth more than their favorite beliefs—whether such beliefs are of a religious nature or certain dogmas of philosophy, or long-accepted conclusions endorsed by authorities in science. In fact, there are many illustrations of scientific (?) dogmatism, quite as absurd as anything recorded in the history of religion. Prejudice is prejudice, whether it rules in eccelesiasticism, science or social life; whether it favors or condemns a school of thought, religious creed or spiritual hypothesis.

The point at issue—if there indeed be such—is not to be, as I understand it, a presentation of our own theories and individual opinions concerning, let us say, the widespread prevalence of prejudice in the human mind, nor the judicial incapacity of the average intelligence. I had been looking rather to certain direct questions and definite charges concerning the position and contents of the book to be discussed.

While I do not substantially disagree with your clever analysis of the subject of human prejudice and mental incapacity, you will see that I do not want to take anything for granted, nor make applications of your general statements, thus anticipating you, or possibly discrediting you.

I might say, however, in passing, that we must be careful not to include too many things under the word "prejudice," nor extend its meaning beyond its limitations as a "prejudgment." There might be danger of confusing many or all of our rational and logical deductions as mere prejudices. We needs must be careful lest we classify our vivid spiritual intuitions, or our patriotic zeal, or our religious faith as mere prejudices. A man may rest his faith upon certain facts, may entertain certain convictions, and may hold to certain conclusions, and yet keep his mind and heart open to new facts, other convictions and different conclusions.

Seventeen years ago I approached this field of peculiar knowledge a confessed skeptic, but with a mind open to receive whatever appealed to my reason, what did not interfere with the independent use of my own senses, what did not violate my own conscience.

If I have wandered from my own conception of an unprejudiced and independent investigator, I have no doubt that my error will soon become apparent to our audience.

If it be possible, let us also at the outset, prevent our discussion from lapsing into the purely metaphysical or the purely speculative. It appears to me that there are very simple guide lines for both a criticism and defense of the work under consideration, and that there is nothing in the book, as I see it, that would necessarily involve comparisons of your and my own individual opinions, nor an elaborate treatment of the doctrine of "Free Will," or a universal moral irresponsibility.

It is possible that I may not have caught your meaning when you say: "No mind, I think, can be accused of acting independently. Antecedents, circumstances, and a vast realm of occult causes may be and probably are modifying our thoughts, moulding our desires and directing our conduct while we fancy we are free moral agents."

This statement, however, is valuable to this discussion in that it makes an opportunity to refer you to the full treatment of this subject of independent choice and individual moral responsibility, as you will find it in Chapter V of Part III of the book.

The limitations of space and the point at issue will not justify extended quotations, but I invite our audience to a careful rereading of this particular chapter, in which the fundamental tenet of the Harmonic Philosophy is carefully and fully treated, which tenet is "Individual Responsibility."

I will say, however, that if by this above quotation you mean to imply that each one of us at any given time, represents his own past education, experiences and environment, we do not differ. That is to say, you at this moment represent the sum of your past life with its peculiar training and environment, with its individual activities, experiences, acquirements, ideas, impressions, beliefs and prejudices. This, however, is quite another thing from saying or holding that your daily life, with its immediate mental activities and moral standards, is not under the direction of your own will, reason and conscience.

To say that our mental and moral status is attained through many counter influences, does not mean that our rational and moral decisions may not therefore be free and independent. It does not matter what facts or opinions have influenced our character building, these influences in no wise prevent the free and independent decisions of a sane or normal intelligence.

I believe that my friend from Fredonia will agree with me when I say that all that which we know and designate as morality is absolutely dependent upon that character of "Independence" referred to and carefully analyzed in The Great Psychological Crime.

If our readers were to follow (what appear to be) your preliminary suggestions to their legitimate conclusions it would seem, to my mind at least, that your purpose is to excuse mankind in toto from the moral results of their own acts.

Do I understand this to be your position?

All the laws of men would seem to refute such an implication. For is it not a fact that the basis of civil, criminal and moral laws is individual responsibility?

If I am right in this, is it not also true that individual responsibility is dependent upon the ability of the individual to voluntarily exercise all those faculties, capacities and powers which establish his sanity and normality in the minds of men?

If I have correctly followed you, it would appear to me that you have confused the two universal but directly opposite principles that color all the higher activities of mankind, namely, the principle of "Influence" and that of "Coercion" as they obtain among intelligent human beings.

Whatever influence the book may have had on your mind by way of "Suggestions" is indeed the result of "Independent Suggestion," as the author has carefully differentiated this from "Hypnotic Suggestion." Why? Because the process involved does not in the least deprive you of your power to exercise any or all of your normal faculties, capacities and powers, IF YOU WANT TO. Indeed, it constantly invites you to so exercise them. Your letter assures me that the individual who is responsible for its charming and elegant diction was in full possession of his intelligent faculties and powers during its formulation. Am I mistaken in assuming that he would quickly and heartily resent the charge, if made, that he was not mentally or morally responsible for his splendid production?

However this may be, the thought will help us to understand the differentiation the author makes between the two kinds of so-called "Suggestion."

Independent suggestion appeals to and stimulates reason. Hypnotic suggestion SUPPRESSES reason and COMPELS obedience.

The one impels; the other compels. The one stimulates mental activity; the other paralyzes it. The one aids intellectual processes; the other suppresses them. The one invites mentality to normal action; the other makes such action impossible. The one conserves mental health and development; the other destroys it. The one represents the principle of INDEPENDENCE; the other that of COERCION.

It is true that the result of independent suggestion may be to revolutionize all our ideas and convictions upon any given subject. I have no doubt this may also be accomplished by hypnotic suggestion. But the point the author makes is that, even so, the PROCESSES employed are wholly different; and that the one is CONSTRUCTIVE and the other DESTRUCTIVE.

You say, "But is there really any difference, except in degree?" The author's answer would certainly be that it is not a question of "Degree" that he has raised in the book, but one of "PROCESS."

One expression you employ which enables me to present this same thought more directly, and perhaps also more clearly. You say, "I believe I am willing to accept and acknowledge any truth, when it is made clear to my reason," etc. I have not the least doubt of the truth of that statement. I believe you are open to the truth from whatever source it may come, so long as it is addressed to your "REASON."

But would you be willing to extend the same hospitality to even the same truth, if it were THRUST upon you by a PROCESS which PARALYZES your reason?

And this brings me to your closing reference to the author's definition of the term "Hypnotism." It is true that he limits it to that which has come to be known as the "Subjective Process," and he holds that this process involves a control of the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism of the subject to the extent of its operation at any given time. It is also true that these limitations exclude much that heretofore has passed current as hypnotism, and draws a sharp line of differentiation.

If this definition involves anything that is not true, this fact would be an important element in determining the accuracy of any conclusions he may have based upon such fallacy. I infer that this is one of the errors to which you refer. If so, I shall be glad to have you furnish me such facts or logic as you may depend upon to overthrow the author's position and demonstrate his error.

But just here let me correct what appears to me to be a misapprehension on your part concerning the author's position as to the ultimate destiny of the soul under the destructive principle and processes of nature.

You say, "By various expressions I infer that this means annihilation of the conscious individual."

By reference to Part III of the book, and more especially to the supplementary chapter on "Theories," the author makes it as clear as it is possible to express it in words, that the ultimate destiny of the individual is yet an open question with even the wisest of the Masters who have tried to solve the great problem. At page 393, under the subhead of "FIRST HYPOTHESIS," and at page 395, under the head of "SECOND HYPOTHESIS," you will find perhaps the fullest and most definite statement of the different positions of those who have endeavored to solve the problem of the final destiny of the soul.

In conclusion, you tell me that you have found what appears to you as radical errors in the book, and I infer from your letter that you will enter upon the specific subject of these errors in your next letter, which I shall await with increased interest.

In closing this first letter let me assure you that I fully reciprocate the spirit and purpose which impel you to this correspondence, and trust that our mutual efforts shall result in both pleasure and profit to our readers.

Most cordially and sincerely yours in search of Truth,

FLORENCE HUNTLEY,
Editor The Great Psychological Crime.

She Saw the End.

Mrs. Booth-Tucker, consul of the Salvation Army, had a premonition of death the Sunday before she met it in the Santa Fe wreck at Dean Lake. Lieutenant Colonel Addie described her showing the feeling to the large audience that gathered in the Salvation Army Citadel last night for the special services dedicated to her memory.

He had been down in Texas, but when he received a wire telling him that Mrs. Booth-Tucker was to pass through Kansas City, he hurried back there to his command to greet her. As she was to be in Kansas City only an hour, stopping over on her way to Chicago, he met her at Topeka and rode from there to Kansas City with her.

She inquired what song his division of the Army was using with most force just at that time, and he told her that it was her old favorite, "You Never, Never Can Tell," with new words he had adapted to the music.

She asked him to sing it to her, and as the words rolled from his lips, a far-away look stole into her eyes and, he said, she seemed to see from afar the fate that was awaiting her. When he came to the last verse she asked him to repeat it and joined in the words:

Time and place will cease to know you,
Men and things will pass away.
You'll be moving on to-morrow,
You are only here to-day.

Chorus:—

You can never tell when your death bell's tolling,
You can never tell when your end will be.
Cast your poor soul in the sin-cleansed fountain,
Come and get saved and happy be.

When next he saw her she was cold in death.—Kansas City Journal.

AROUSED THINKERS.

All Along the Pathway of Mediumship.

The Great Psychological Crime, with its scarecrow headlines has aroused thinkers all along the pathway of mediumship to an astonishing degree! From the various opinions, favorable and unfavorable to medial powers and the exercise thereof, one is forced to the conclusion that the subject is not scientifically understood by all, IF FULLY BY ANY; and, of course the great masses know nothing about it, and their opinions are worthless on the subject! All Spiritualists agree, however, that spirits do manifest through certain attuned individuals; but the utility, genuineness of the manifestations and effects on the instruments used are debatable questions, and it is not wonderful that we meet with different opinions on the subject, indicating that the science of mediumship is but little understood; hence some call mediumship a GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME, while others call it a CROWNING VIRTUE.

While we admit that many persons have been injured by tampering with mediumship, as people have been injured by tampering with other things they do not understand, and that it is a DANGEROUS THING TO MEDDLE WITH unless one knows what he is doing; yet that mediumship, as such, is a psychological crime is not to be conceded. The crime consists in not knowing how to handle the powers, and not in the powers themselves.

The great trouble with investigators is, they do not seem to realize that there is a difference between the physical and spiritual laws of life, and that you cannot measure the one by the other. Mediumship is but the spiritual nature of the medium intensified, and as soon as mediums learn the laws of development, or, in other words, how to subordinate spirit induction or inflow to the will of the medium, there will be less complaint of super-sensitive natures and overstrained nerves.

The psychological crime of which some complain, lies nearer to the door of those who visit and manage mediums than in mediumship itself. The great majority of people go to seances as though they are going to a Punch and Judy show, to see what they can see and criticise the manifestations. They go in search of frand instead of the truth, and when they witness a manifestation, however genuine, they dub it a fraud, not knowing the false from the true, and generally they condemn the true. Many go to a seance demanding that they be convinced and at the same time set their minds against the manifestations, little knowing that will force is the moving, combining power of the universe, and that thoughts affect the medium and retard or assist the manifestations according to their desire and intensity.

Many set their minds and draw themselves up into their sun-dried souls and say, in their minds, "Here I am, now convince me," formulating conditions to govern the manifestations, never dreaming that every spiritual manifestation is produced through spiritual chemistry. While they would not think of prescribing rules, bounds and conditions to govern a physical chemist who must have his laboratory and conditions to produce a chemical compound, but a medium must produce spiritual compounds and spiritual chemical results without a laboratory (cabinet) or conditions, or he is a fraud. After the fraud hunter demands conditions and fails to see his grandfather, or some other kin, with a cross eye or freckle on his nose, or some other like foolishness, it is all pronounced a fake and the medium a criminal who has obtained his pinched "fo' bits" by false pretenses and he rushes off to some blockhead to have the medium arrested. Such are some of the things mediums have to contend with, and these are what make the practices of mediumship hard on the mediums and produce a physiological crime.

Instead of going to mediums with kindness, willing to receive whatever may come with thankfulness and good will, they go there to doubt and criticise, and the medium comes out of the cabinet in a weakened condition, feeling his life flowing away because of the outside pressure imposed upon him.

Give the mediums kind and loving thoughts. Throw in their pathway the flowers of tender words. Sustain their physical as they sustain our spiritual and we will have less cause to doubt of their powers and the so-called psychological crime will be appreciated only as a figment of the brain.

The world is fighting all kinds of spirituality and spiritual manifestations, and especially those missionaries of heaven who come with outstretched hands and loving hearts that man may know that life is an eternal factor of nature and that individuality extends beyond the grave.

The laws of mediumship are the laws of our spiritual natures, brought to the comprehension of man, and if rightly understood they will harm no one, but greatly benefit all.

Mediums are a sensitive people, and should be treated kindly. They cannot be classed with dirt-delvers, stone-heavers or wood-choppers, no more than can poets, orators and authors be classed with the Micks and Paddies of the railroad.

Do away with mediumship and you will do away with Spiritualism. Had it not been for mediumship, Spiritualism never would have been born, and to abolish it, we abolish our religion.

The fact of spirit return is the only polar star we have to pull to. We never would have known anything about spirit return or a future life had it not been for mediumship. Mediumship brings the truth and beauties of heaven to every man's door and blesses every heart with the knowledge of eternal life. It teaches us how to live and how to die. How to close our eyes on the scenes of this world and open them on a fairer and better one; without it we would be groping in darkness and despair, with no hope beyond the grave and with no mission on earth but to eat, drink, revel and die, to furnish food for worms and mocking specimens of God's beneficence.

Mediumship is the foundation of our civilization, the basic rock of every church in the world; the salvation of man and the guiding star that points to the halcyon joys of the by and by. Wipe out mediumship and you resolve the world back to the days of the cave dwellers when man contended with his kindred beasts for mastery.

If we only would learn how to appreciate and handle mediumship, rather than how to criticise and condemn it, the world would be wiser and better from our efforts.

AN AFTERTHOUGHT.

Christianity, Materialism and Spiritualism.

The remarks on Ecclesia-phobia strike a chord that awakens reminiscences along lines of progress, and we believe it would be unwise as well as unfair not to acknowledge truth wherever found.

We who stop to think can well remember the rapid progress of orthodoxy fifty years ago, and the coincident wave of materialism, when Presbyterians would not deal with Methodists and vice versa. We can think of the time when the exchange of pulpits was not a matter of courtesy, and the unusual curiosity that possessed us when the Baptist minister came to our church of a different creed to preach for us.

We were almost struck dumb when we saw the pastor stop to shake hands with the young folks he happened to meet while on some errands, but it was (as we see it now) a step in the right direction and an indication of a broadening-out process that has resulted in better things.

Christianity passed through its fiery trials and bloodshed, and murder and crime were done in its name. One fact was patent to all who observed. The incentive to good living, pure thought and higher ideas was not lacking. Had it been, it would have been stamped out completely, but the good lives and the steadfastness of its believers who suffered martyrdom in many ways compelled the admiration of the world.

The reaction brought sympathy and strength, not only individually but collectively, and the cause finally prospered. Its work has been great. The backbone of all nations is religion of of some sort.

Now the scene shifts, and the canvas shows a picture that seems entirely out of proportion with its future history. Two children tipping the table, getting intelligent replies to earnest questions—it has heralded another wave of comment, persecution and scorn, but we have only to roll the canvas back a few years and find another expression of the same unseen powers that caused BURNING AT THE STAKE at Salem, Mass. Now we find the Christian world startled, aggrieved and angry that the fact is again evident that they do not know all concerning the next life. "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad," seems applicable to the case in point.

The Christian world had suffered, borne all kind of sorrow, persecution and misery, and had recovered and prospered, was now a strong giant in force, but even at that could not pull not "whip into shape" men's thoughts. They would think in spite of priest or pastor, and the result was sectarianism until we had a new sect for every day of the year, and more coming. They traveled again the old lines of argument, which we are not at all interested in at present, and no matter what the "theory" evolved, it was not wholly satisfactory, yet all were living creatures, had our own daily duties, were usually in sympathy with other people, even though we did differ in ideas about our mode of worship.

The Christians now were in a position that required tact to handle. The churches were developing thinkers, and like many who "builded better than they knew," they were raising recruits for some advance they knew not of. They had commenced to broaden, to exchange ideas and a better place to start from could not have been found than the pulpit. Its power had been proven. A minister's words went further than a layman's because of the precedents established for years past, and it is just that it should be so. They have worked and suffered to make it revered and honored; the reward is theirs.

By these exchanges of ideas they hoped to overcome the intense wave of materialism that had been rampant among the people for twenty years past, and was rendering the work of the pulpit to some extent nil. The men were thinking for themselves. They would help support the churches, believed they were a good thing, would go sometimes with wife and family to "set a good example," but there it ended; they were thinking for themselves, and like bright men usually they quietly insisted upon that right.

I wish you to note the opinion of the orthodox church that I have held for years and still hold. It is a very necessary institution, and will be for many years to come. Not all people are leaders nor pioneers, and not all are able to stand ON THEIR OWN FEET religiously, especially not in any "new idea" as they term it; but as each day advances you will see a larger number of inquirers who begin by asking a vague question. Finally interest grows; the rest is easy. Never expect to be free from orthodoxy; it is impossible. I will speak of orthodoxy in Spiritualism later.

The more advanced in spiritual development among the orthodox and the more powerful thinkers of the day, were earnest in their prayers and desires for something to awaken mankind to a sense of their responsibility as free moral bengs.

I believe those who have the world's evolution in hand heard those prayers and answered through those children and their table in Hydesville. We are taught that always coincident with one's desire is the reaction that brings the fulfillment.

Little was it understood, as usual as we are all pleased to have results come in our own special channel of endeavor; as we all to a more or less extent have a plan to run the "universe," the little tips or knocks were misunderstood in the main.

Some were ready. That's always the case. Some people are always in advance, looking, hoping and digging for truth, no matter how it presents itself. They are constituted so they can appreciate it at once and without question.

These few, like the wise ones of all ages, grasped the news with avidity, and are still developing the line of thought that the intelligence made manifest by the table; whether in this form of life or in the next, it matters not.

The same old story has to be told about the subsequent history of the initial raps that Christianity tells only much to be regretted—the main and most powerful opposition has come from the so-called Christians and their churches. Only in the last few years have they allowed their attention to be drawn to the special phenomena, and that has to be discussed in the most unfriendly and caustic spirit.

If the ministers had to suffer at the hands of the public as a medium has to to suffer, the fact would be heralded by papers far and wide, and perhaps the law might intervene in his behalf.

Still the medium is occupying relatively the same place as the minister of some hundred years ago, and it is right.

One thinks sometimes about the charity they preach so much about. If one will keep in mind the events which brought orthodoxy to the front and to the attention of the whole known world, savored of persecution, you will find it comparative of Spiritualism. Many are the incidents of cruelty and dishonesty, the movement has been compelled to endure.

Yet, friends, all light comes through suffering. Nothing comes except by the law of sacrifice, or in other words you must pay the price first. It is well to remember this, as those who are to be the backbone of the philosophy will be compelled to stand firm as those of orthodoxy have in the past.

No wonder they object to leaving the church, when it has been one object of intense devotion for many, many years, and hereditary traits find the ground well fertilized for future attainment.

Who that was reared in orthodox churches does not remember the magnificent days of young manhood and young womanhood, and the sense of sanctity surrounding each move toward the betterment of the church; the hearty co-operation; then compare the bickerings of higher thought advocates who stoop to criticise another in print. Don't the "despised orthodox" see this and hesitate?

Phenomena are necessary sometimes. It was phenomena that called our attention to spirit return, but the catering to abnormal desire for special phenomena at all times seems out of place. Scarce a meeting or lecture given but what phenomena are advertised, and unfortunately it is not OUTSIDERS or SKEPTICS that get the "tests" as a rule, and the special work of special phenomena is hindered in its scope.

Those who are familiar with the usual public demonstrations should ADVANCE A STEP and study spiritual philosophy; make an effort to attain, and an honest endeavor thereby to raise themselves one step in the ultimate progression.

AS LONG AS ONE STICKS TO THE SAME IDEAS AND MAKES NO ACCEPTABLE IMPROVEMENT, HE IS SOON SPIRITUALLY ORTHODOX.

When Spiritualists show by their manner of living that their belief in the future life helps them to be better to their fellow men, they will attract attention. In this 20th century we will not be measured by physical miseries placed upon us by our fellows who do not believe as we do; but we will be compelled to live in a manner that SHOWS WE ARE IMPROVED, that our idea of attainment is not one of ability to criticise others' methods, but that we are charitable to others' opinions, and are strong enough to stand as an example of our belief that the stronger evidence of sympathy and encouragement from the spirit side of life is made manifest in our daily living.

To be successful, Spiritualists, you have no warrant for ridiculing another's manner of living, expression or desires. The words they use may be a heritage of speech—theirs honestly—and if you object to their mode of expression, "first cast out your own mote."

BOOK REVIEW.

The Temple of the Rosy Cross. The Soul, Its Powers, Migrations and Transmigrations. By F. B. Dowd. Eulian Publishing Co., Salem, Mass.

This volume is interesting as an exposition of the principles and teachings of Rosicrucianism, by one who is recognized as an exponent of the Rosicrucian fraternity. It treats of the spiritual relations of the body, mind and soul, and the perfecting of each.

New Thought Primer. By Henry Harrison Brown. San Francisco, Cal. Price 25 cents.

An instructive exposition of the origin, history and principles of the New Thought movement.

Return to Nature. The True Natural Method of Healing and Living, and the True Salvation of the Soul. By Adolf Just.

The care of the body—water, human curative power, light, air, earth, food, fruit culture.

An exposition of the Naturopath system of cure and maintenance of health. Translated and published by B. Lust, 135 East 58th street, New York. Price, cloth, $2; paper, $1.50.

The New Thought Simplified. How to Gain Harmony and Health. By Henry Wood, Author of "Ideal Suggestion," etc.

Aims to be a plain and practical presentation of the New Thought principles, by a veteran writer in this line. Its style is graceful and adapted to the popular mind.

It is published by Lee & Shepard, Boston. Price by mail, 88 cents.

Soul Return. By Fred Max. Published by E. H. Bacon & Co., Boston, $1.25.

Claims to be a primer of soul science, not a manual. Interspersed with thoughts that are acceptable, there is much that appears purely fanciful to the ordinary Spiritualist mind.

LIFE.

A flood from force, that like unto
The little pool made by the rain,
Which sudden fell to overflow
Its dish, then ran out on the plain,

And found the stream of life—so pure
Conjoined they ran—as one, till wide
And deeper, stronger to endure
The constant gaining on each side.

And dangers grew along the way.
Could one look back and measure all
The pilot's ignorance, when gay,
And blind to sense of wisdom's call.

The pilots change when sailing in God's Ocean Life will find its whole
Through freedom which this race doth win,
The home for hearts—life's crowning goal.

A Memorial to the Mediumship of Our Host.

We, the invited guests bidden to celebrate the anniversary of the birthday of William W. Aber, cheerfully and gratefully appreciate his mediumship.

While there are many phases of mediumship, that of Mr. Aber as manifested in his materializing seances, is different from any other, as far as we knew, in as much as by means of it, spirits advanced in science and philosophy, can give to mortals such knowledge of a high and noble character as is not anywhere else obtained; as is evidenced by the production of the works, "Rending the Vail," "Beyond the Vail," "The Guiding Star," and a work now in progress; the contents of all of which were given by materialized spirits in full form, view and hearing, in manuscript, type-writing and oral speech—messages of such character as are, and ever will be of infinite benefit to earth's inhabitants when they have learned the lessons contained therein.

Through the mediumship of Mr. Aber, the vail that hides mortals from the spirit side of life is rent asunder, and they are enabled to enter beyond the vail and behold the conditions of life there, made by the faithful performance of life's duties in mortal existence; or, by the failure in the performance of such duties through ignorance or otherwise.

Through the same mediumship, we are able to obtain some knowledge of the higher spheres, in messages given by the more exalted and advanced spirits; of the grandeur and glory—the beauty and never-ending happiness of the dwellers in those spheres, and the exquisite drawings in crayon and painting in oil of the portraits of spirits who inhabit those beautiful realms, as given to mortals for their benefit and encouragement in the Guiding Star, that they may learn beautiful lessons from the higher spirit side of life; that when learned, will be of infinite value to them.

With a full appreciation of these productions, we take great pleasure in expressing our sincere thanks to our host, the medium, and congratulate him on his invariable success in his more than twenty years of successful mediumistic labor in the field of spiritual work; and acknowledge with grateful thanks the vast benefit his life work has done, and is being done, in the world.

We wish him a long life of continued success; and may he have health and strength to accomplish his work with comfort and satisfaction.

To the above expressed sentiment we cheerfully and gratefully subscribe.

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage in this book of 248 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Influence of the Zodiac Upon Human Life,

With Character Readings of Persons Born Upon the Cusp.

The principles found in this volume are both a science and a religion, for a better and a far happier humanity. It points to the planets as an index to the human character and liability to diseases; also gives the gems and colors suited to temperaments evolved under certain planets. The Burning Bush and the Father of Lies.

Some kind friend sent me a copy of the "Burning Bush," a paper devoted to evangelization. Chicago has many queer publications, but nothing that approaches this in farce and broad comedy. Religious? Pious? These words have no meaning when used to describe it. Its title page represents the arched crust of hell broken through so you can see the devil on his throne, spear in hand, and lost souls dancing around him in the flames. On top of this arch is a block on which a "revivalist" whose wide open mouth indicates that he is shouting for converts. On a scroll in his extended hand is written, "Can we lose our sanctification and still retain our justification? We certainly can."

To an ordinary mind this would be a conundrum it would have to give up, but the revivalist solves it off-hand. It may be important to the said revivalist whether he can be justified without being sanctified or not, but the sun will rise to-morrow just the same, however this knotty question is decided.

There is an article on Spiritualism, illustrated by a fine picture of the devil, the one ever-present cause of all spiritual manifestatons.

The author says: "There are only two spirits that ever communicate with the people of this world. One is the Holy Spirit, and the other is the spirit of the devil." When a writer comes to this conclusion it is a waste of time to attempt his enlightenment. Yet he demands attention for, imbecile as he is, he catalogues the usual offenses which make the stock-in-trade of his ilk, charges repeatedly disproven, which he knows are false and seeks to prejudice his readers by this lying—yes, LYING—for it is described by no other word. As published in the "Bush" it purports to have been delivered by W. E. Shepard, its publishing agent, before the Illinois State Spiritual Association or a portion of its members who remained because he "promised to pray for them." If this be true, why did not some delegate denounce the arrogant slanderer and his falsehoods then and there? If a large portion of the convention remained to listen to the "message" of this impudent evangelist, as stated in the "Bush," is it believable that the delegates quietly received his castigation? According to his story, Shepard had things his own way, and his hearers were beaten into lamb-like silence.

Another article had a blue pencil mark, and though not relating to Spiritualism, is so characteristic of religion-getters, that it will bear repeating.

It is written by this same Shepard to show how the convert may get the good things of the world by scaring the devil away. A monkey strayed to a neighboring house and saw a bowl of jam on the table. He would help himself, but the lady of the house was right there to prevent him. So he tipped the bowl over, and when the jam ran out he rolled in it and fled to a nearby tree where he spent the rest of the day scraping off the jam and feasting on it. As a moral Shepard remarks: "There is more than one way to get ahead of the devil. He would scare off everybody who wants to taste the good things of the kingdom. If we will only be watchful and quick, we can get in and help ourselves, in spite of the devil's scare. Get in the grace of salvation all over; get besmeared with it from head to heels before the devil can run you off; then climb into the tree of life and eat and feast and enjoy the blessing with all your might."

It does not seem possible that there can be a newspaper in the United States in this enlightened age that would publish such rot, and have a wide circle of readers, receiving and calling it evangelization! It sounds like the gibbering of some mould-encrusted mummy dug up from the charnel-house of centuries past.

Brother Shepard of the Burning Bush, you know suspiciously too much of the devil. Your advice to young converts, to not wait and deserve the bowl of salvation jam, but to seize a moment when the devil is off his guard, tip the bowl over and "besmear" themselves with it, shows plainly that the old master has a willing imitator in yourself. Do not worry yourself about the Spiritualists, and their public, individual or domestic relations, or the destruction of conjugal love by Spiritualism. Look at home—in your own evangelical circle. For every derelict Spiritualist we agree to find twenty preachers, with equal or greater offenses. You cannot in all the spiritual papers or books in the world find such depravity of advice as you give your converts. You have a double morality, you believe it right to cheat the devil, therefore it is right to cheat those whom he has deluded—sinners.

To the converted there are aliens without the gate. Hence comes the infamous doctrine that an unbeliever, an infidel, has no rights a Christian believer is bound to respect. Hence springs the slanderous stream of falsehoods which you call a "message" against Spiritualism. If it really is a "message," by whi&ch you mean it was "message," by which you mean it was inspired, do you think for a moment it known by fruit, or rather the fruit indicate the tree from which it came, does not this fruit, poisoned with misrepresentation, and pretentious, self-inflating piety, prove it to be from the father of lies, with whom you are on such familiar terms? The Arcana of Spiritualism.

We desire to call the special attention of our readers to the notice pertaining to Mr. Hudson Tuttle's book of the above title.

In all the wide range of spiritual literature there is not, perhaps, a more instructive volume, or one that is more helpful to a seeker after the truth pertaining to the science and philosophy of Spiritualism, the basic foundation on which it rests, and the logical and ethical superstructure reared thereon. Every Spiritualist should have the work—and every inquirer would find it a rich mine of helpful knowledge concerning the most important subject that can engage the human mind.

A Dire Disease.

According to the daily papers, President Patton of the Presbyterian Princeton Seminary, foretells a great defection in all churches in the near future. He characterizes Christianity as it exists to-day as "a dire disease," in an address at the centennial services of the New York avenue Presbyterian church. He ridiculed those who reduced Christianity to a mere set of morals and lost sight of the individual soul in their efforts to reform society as a whole.

"What I contend," he said, "is that Christianity must be more than ethical to be truly ethical. It has moralized the world not only by preaching precepts, but by speaking as one having authority, detailing dogma, and doctrine. And when you give up this dogma and doctrine you let go the guards against man's selfishness and evil."

One of the symptoms of the disease, he said, is a marked indifference in spiritual matters and a marked attention to the social side of religion. The regeneration of the soul is being superseded by the regeneration of society.

The world has been dosed and fed on orthodox "dogma and doctrine" from the days of Paul to the present, and the fact is prominent that instead of being a "guard against man's selfishness," there are no portions of the world where "selfishness" and colossal greed are more in evidence than in those parts where Christian "dogma and doctrine" have been most taught and preached.

"Salvation" itself has been practically made a selfish individual affair, and the "business," and the industrial system of Christendom, have been organized and conducted on the plan of selfishness and greed. Dogma and doctrine, as preached by the orthodox churches have bred the intensest form of greed and selfishness the world has ever known.

Yes—as its results show—it is "a dire disease"—a disease that stultifies freedom of thought and breeds selfishness.

And among the most potent, psychological causes of the "dire disease" must be recokoned the horrible, heartless dogmas and doctrines of Calvinism, subscribed to and taught by the president and professors of Princeton Seminary. It is only natural that the dogmas of a heartless and cruel God, a heartless and cruel election and predestination of a vast multitude of human beings to suffer eternally in hell, should beget heartless selfishness in those who receive and believe such doctrines. And so it comes, that the most heartlessly selfish, cruel, warlike peoples of the world are—Christians.

Truly President Patton is right when he says Christianity as it exists to-day is a "dire disease."

A late London religious paper contained the following advertisement:

"A clergyman of experience and moderate views, who distinguished himself during his university course in divinity and English composition, will furnish original sermons in strict accordance with the Church of England, in good print, at five shillings each. Only one copy will be given in any diocese. A specimen will be sent if wished. Sermons made to order on any required subject. Terms reasonable."

With manufactured sermons, aided by the prayer book, the labor of an English clergyman ought not to consume much brain force. We have been assured that there are sermon factories in active operation in the United States. If easily accessible, and sold at a moderate price, such prepared sermons ought to prevent plagiarism, an offense the New York press represents very prevalent in that city at this time.

Letter From Secretary Longley

Certainly no subject is of Greater Importance to every Spiritualist than this: "The Decline of Spiritual Societies." While the adherents to Spiritualism are increasing, its meetings are not as a rule as well attended as in former days. The fact is, Spiritualism is diffusive in its aspect and tendencies, invading the churches, often taking possession of the Minister and manifesting itself in quarters where least expected. Mrs. Longley's article will be read with interest.

THE CAUSE

Of the Decline of Spiritual Societies.

To the Editor:—I have been requested to express my opinion on the decline of spiritual societies and the cause of such decline. It is a subject that requires a vast and far-reaching knowledge of the conditions of spiritual growth and of the various circumstances attending the cause of Spiritualism and its advocates in the different localities where societies exist, or have been. I feel that the conditions and causes for the decay of organized work may be very different in one section or community than in another, and that a special study needs to be given to this subject in its broadest sense.

Still, as one who comes in touch, through correspondence and otherwise with Spiritualists all over the country, because of filling the office of N. S. A. secretary, it may be deemed fitting for me to express my opinion on this most important matter, and I will briefly do so from my observations and experience.

To my mind, the chief cause of the decline of local work is lack of unity on the part of many who take hold of it, or who for a time only, show much interest in the cause at large.

Sometimes those who organize a society start in with too much enthusiasm, expecting the whole community to fall in with their plans and ideas, and being disappointed in this, and finding but a few who willingly take hold of the work, and that the expense is heavy and the glory slight, they grow weary in well doing and finally abandon the work, and we cannot blame them, for nothing is more discouraging than to have one's willing work only half appreciated and encouraged.

In many societies there are two extreme wings, a few who want to do all the work, and to always be the leaders, and a few more who want to do no work, but who would be very glad to share the glory, if not to claim it all; between these two wings there is always an undercurrent of inharmony, and this breaks out on every possible occasion. In addition to these there is usually a class that will help a little, and who want to gain no publicity or to share no responsibility from the work.

I feel that the lack of training, by the reading of good spiritual papers and other liberal literature, by meditation and thought on the part of those who have become Spiritualists through some evidence they have received from the other life, has something to do with the decline of societies, for they cannot always comprehend or appreciate a good lecture, and they feel dull and uninterested while the same is being delivered. I do not decry the presentation of phenomena on the platform if it is what it claims to be in verity, and is also of a character to dignify the meeting, as spiritual messages can easily be. It seems to me that the philosophy and phenomena go hand in hand with pleasure and instruction derived from each if they are properly presented and understood.

Frequently, the cause of the decline of a local society is the lack of good local mediumship and lecture talent, and the inability or unwillingness of the Spiritualists of the town to go to the expense of bringing such workers from other places; and just here comes in the lack of unified purpose and action, which leaves the care and expense upon a few zealous souls who go on with this as long as they can, and then drop the work from pure exhaustion or dismay.

Were it not for the fact that our zealous missionaries can organize societies and set them running with good prospects, as evidenced by the work of our special missionaries this year, I should feel that the tendency is to disintegrate rather than to unify in society work by Spiritualists at large, but we have the facts that hungry souls in every community are ready for organization, and that the tendency should be, and probably would be, towards cohesion, if they were properly educated how to take hold of Spiritualism and of society work, and keep at in a way that shall attract rather than to repel the community.

Spiritualism as a factor in the progress of the age should be studied by all who advocate its claims. They should feel it a privilege to come together in their communities and discuss the needs of humanity, the important issues of the day, and the work of Spiritualism in relation to them; to occasionally, if not regularly, engage a Spiritualistic speaker or medium to come to them with the word of truth and the instructive lesson, and to co-operate in all ways that will be for mutual good and for that of their fellow-men.

It is a fact, that very few active Spiritualist societies exist in this country, there are many struggling ones, but few active and well established societies, nor are those that do not charter with the N. S. A. any better off in point of membership, influence, work, and finances than our own chartered societies. I do not mean by this that Spiritualism is in the least retrograding, but I mean that society work seems to be on the decline, with but little good reason except that of lack of affiliation and interest on the part of Spiritualists at large.

From my standpoint the remedy for such decline, is a more active labor and affiliation among the Spiritualists of each community, more courage to stand up and be counted in the ranks, and a little more generosity in the matter of financial contribution; a little less desire on the part of some to control and manage everything, or to wear the "rule or ruin" air, and a little less of apathy and indifference on the part of others; in short a unifying of forces, and an increase of earnestness to forward the work of the angel world.

As to Spiritualism itself I have no fear of its decline. It will live if there is never a society to advocate its principles. Its apostles will continue to wander over the earth and proclaim its teachings. Its mediums will be constantly brought forth or developed in every town and village, and the home circle and the private audience will be held with the spirit world here, there and everywhere, despite all efforts to crush it out.

Spiritualism is an ever-living tree that is bound to grow, and to cast shelter all around, but this is no excuse for Spiritualists to grow indifferent to its work and to neglect their duty to it and to humanity, nor is it any reason why they should sit back and by their apathy make the work harder for the spirit world and its instruments.

MARY T. LONGLEY.

Washington, D. C.

"Spiritualism Outlawed."

Such is the startling headline to an article in the Troy, New York, Times. The writer, as usual, shows an ignorance which is pitiable, of the subject, yet there is one point which is of interest to all Spiritualists.

A bequest of $12,000 made in favor of Spiritualists by one of that class has just been declared void by the court before which it was tried, and this decision, being the first of its kind, will be an important precedent. Spiritualism came to this city from the rural districts, where the Fox family became noted for what were called the "Rochester knockings," but it received its greatest impulse from Andrew Jackson Davis, who published several books and had a large number of disciples. Some strange things were reported, and curiosity led many to investigate the claims of this new movement. It gradually, however, lost its importance, and although still holding an existence in some localities it has no legal recognition.

The case is not the first that has been tested. The National Spiritualist Association has vindicated the right of a Spiritualist to will his estate as he pleases, and the legality of such will. But such wills are always contested, and where sustained, the expense has nearly eaten up the bequests. It is far better for those who wish to help a cause or dispose of their wealth in any certain way, to arrange therefor before their departure. One of the best lawyers said that a will could not be made that could not be broken. Add the prejudice of a jury to the bigotry of a judge, the hopelessness of justice is apparent.

The work you propose to do, the cause you wish to help, do not wait, leaving to others not interested, to do it for you, but do it yourself; do it now, making a beginning to-day, and enjoying the effort and being made happy by the results.

If you doubt, look at the Seybert Bequest to found a chair in the University of Pennsylvania devoted to the study of psychical phenomena and especially Spiritualism. To secure the money, a committee was appointed and went through a farce it called an investigation, and though that was several years ago, there is no chair of psychical science and not a word taught relating to Spiritualism. The earnest desire of the noble philanthropist is as though never expressed. His fifty thousand dollars went to defame, libel, and bring disgrace to the cause he loved.

Catholicism on its Native Heath.

An American artist temporarily residing at Etaples, on the English Channel, in the north of France, recently wrote a friend, from whose letter we extract:

"I must tell you a characteristic incident in connection with our late tragedy in Etaples. In the frightful storm, the worst known on this coast, of September 8, among our fishers some thirteen lost their lives, and of course many families were left destitute. The foreigners and artists immediately got up subscription, and all gave according to their means. It was proposed to put the money in the hands of the village priest—of course a Catholic—to be used for these families, thinking he would have particular knowledge as to its wise distribution. Some of the people, however, asked it be done otherwise. We learned that in the Sunday sermon it was mentioned that money was being raised for relief of the destitute, and that one-half of it would be used to pay for masses for the dead!

"I assure you, so far as the artists are concerned, the dead were left to bury their own dead. Which leads me to remark, we can be thankful that in America the church and state question has been settled, I trust forever."

And yet religionists of all denominations, unless it is the Baptists and Adventists, with the unorthodox sects, Universalists, Unitarians and Quakers, have been laboring for years to get God, Jesus Christ and the Bible in the national Constitution, to the end that church and state may be again united.

The annual dumping of millions of European Catholics on American soil, is with the view of changing the present order of affairs. There is real danger of their ultimate success.

Not Gifted With Common Sense.

The Rev. Albert Froehlke, pastor of the German Lutheran Church of Neenah, Wis., has shown himself a laggard far in the rear of the march of human events. Comrade Ferdinand Sauer, a member of the church, and a highly respected citizen of the town, recently died, but before his death expressed a desire to be buried by his Post, and selected the pallbearers from his comrades. Mr. Froehlke refused to allow the Post to attend the church in a body, or admit the casket, draped in an American flag, or the body to be clothed in a G. A. R. uniform. Before he would proceed with the funeral services, the buttons had to be cut from the uniform and the badges removed and placed in the pockets. We do not know where Mr. Froehlke is from or where he received his education, but he is out of place on this side of the Atlantic Ocean.

Moorish Hate, and Reasons Therefor.

A recent traveler in Morocco, as related in the London Express, represents that "In spite of their proximity to Europe, the Moors are the most fanatical of all the Mohammedan countries. Christians," he says, "are hated by the natives throughout the entire country."

Why should they not be hated? The population of Morocco in the cities consists of Moors and Jews. They are mostly descendants of those who were expelled from Spain in 1492, by Ferdinand and Isabella. The fairest, best portions of the peninsula were theirs. They inherited the country from their old Phenician ancestors, who colonized it from Carthage more than 500 years before our era. When all Europe was sunk in barbarism they were collecting and preserving the literature of the earlier ages, while Christians were destroying it.

Jenkins, in his "Heroines of History," in his chapter on Isabella, of Castile, says of these Moors:

"They had become prosperous, amassed great wealth, beautified their possessions with every known luxury, and cultivated the arts and sciences to a surprising degree. Ingenious and inventive, they originated much that has been universally adopted by mankind. To them we owe the first manufacture of paper, and from them came the equally-appropriated invention of gunpowder. Astronomy, philosophy, and mathematics, made rapid strides under their direction * * Literature and poetry were successfully cultivated, but overburdened with legends and fairy tales that have since been inwoven in the poetry of all nations."

After the government was wrested from these people, their property was generally confiscated, their palaces were taken possession of, many of the wealthy classes, and even the royal family reduced to slavery, and their literature was burned on the public square of Grenada at the instance of Torquemada, and later by Ximenes; the Inquisitors represented the impossibility of their conversion to the Christian faith, then Ferdinand and Isabella issued an edict of banishment, declaring this was the only method of purging the land of such heinous offenders. The historian tells us:

"While Isabella was hesitating to sign the edict which would expel the wealthiest, most industrious and enterprising of the population from her conquered provinces, including the most skillful of her artisans, Torquemada, the Inquisitor-General, rushed into her apartment holding up a crucifix, exclaiming: 'Judas Iscariot sold his master for thirty pieces of silver. Your majesty would sell him anew. Here he is; take him; barter him away.' Then throwing the crucifix down before the astonished sovereign, he fled from her presence."

Says the historian:

"Without further hesitation, Isabella affixed her name to the decree, thus silencing the promptings of her own better judgment, and in the name of a religion whose teachers had possessed themselves of her conscience, inflicted a scourge upon the subjects who adored her, and whose cries of suffering, if they reached her ears, could not swerve her from what she deemed her stern sense of duty. She might have wept when she saw them streaming forth in little bands, after selling their property at immense sacrifice, not knowing where to turn from persecution, since all the world spurned them; she might have been touched with compassion for the sick and helpless, dragging themselves over the painful route; or pitied the young maidens, educated in luxurious abodes, and sent forth homeless; or, when the exiles reached the frontier, fainting with hunger and fatigue, or scattered through Portugal, Italy, Africa and even Turkey, their numbers dwindled away in consequence of murders, exhaustion or the plague, which strewed their pathway with the dead and dying—if she could have witnessed all this torture, tears might have welled up abundantly from the depths of her sensitive heart, but they would have flowed without a revocation of the fiat, any more than the lamentations of the Moors would have stayed her determination to make theirs a Christian land. 'Spain must be cleansed from heresy!' was Torquemada's warning admonition in Isabella's girlhood; 'Spain must and shall be cleansed from heresy!' he boldly demanded, when she ascended the throne. When we know with what unquestioning confidence the Catholics, to this day, commit their consciences to the keeping of confessors, we need not wonder at the religious errors that darkened the Queen's character, or why she should have yielded to the advice of grim and cruel monks, instead of regarding the dictates of her own truer soul."

Neither can they who are familiar with the terrible wrongs and outrages practiced on these pioneers of western civilization and learning, blame their descendants, though eighteen generations have intervened, for absolutely HATING all who bear the Christian name.

These outrages of Catholicism, in the name of Christianity, against humanity, occurred just four hundred years ago. Has that tyrannical and cruel organization changed its character or purpose since then? Given power, such as she then possessed, would not these same excesses and brutalities be committed over again? The Jesuit has changed his tactics, not his principles. He is the same selfish, overbearing oppressor as when first organized to prevent the extension of Protestantism. The whole machinery of the church is now in motion to colonize the United States, and subordinate the government and people to its rule, while Protestants seem careless and indifferent to its machinations and advances. Left alone until her end is attained, then the instrumentalities to banish Moors and Jews from Spain will be repeated in America against adverse sects and every shade of opposition to the rule of the pope will be compelled to go into exile, else adopt the oppressor's faith.

Spontaneous Phenomena.

They are often very startling and convincing, as they usually come with extraordinary force. There are many haunted houses where spirits exhibit their power and influence, sometimes very terrifying in its nature.

AN ILLINOIS GHOST.

As set forth in the Chicago Inter Ocean, down in Cumberland county, three and one-half miles north of Montrose, Ill., is an old log house about twenty-two feet square, containing one big room with shed kitchen attached to the rear. It is a weather-beaten, unsightly structure, but to-day it attracts vastly more attention than the most stately mansion that graces that section of country. It is haunted.

No native of Cumberland county passes it, night or day, without a shiver of dread, and to the stranger and casual visitor it is pointed out as the rendezvous of the spirit of a dead man whose soul finds no rest in its present state of existence. When alive he vowed that his spirit should visit the earth and trouble his son after death. He is now keeping his vow.

This house was formerly the home of Thomas Elliott, a widower and typical woodsman, a man of medium size, with white hair and beard. He had a son, a cripple, who lived with him. One of the son's legs is almost useless, and he is compelled to walk with the aid of crutches. The father and son often quarreled. One day the father told the son he would never forgive him for the imagined wrong he had done him, and many times before he died he repeated this vow: "My son, you have wronged me. If it is possible for the spirit to return to the earth after death, my spirit will come to haunt you and to torment you." The old man is apparently making good his promise, for, if the stories of brave and honest men who have spent several nights in the home are to be believed, the spirit has returned, and there have been weird and uncanny doing in the old house which have puzzled and frightened them and baffled all attempts of reasonable explanation.

The son is no more able to explain the antics of the ghost than are his neighbors. Neither can he escape its visits. Once he moved to Mattoon, hoping to avoid the unpleasant visits, but soon the supposed ghost followed him. He moved again, but his change of location was no bar to his uncanny visitor. Finally he gave it up and went back to the old home place on the farm, where he is now living.

If he is in any way concerned with the ghostly apparitions or by some clever manipulation is able to trick the spectators, his magic is so artful and cunning that no one has ever been able to detect it. Parties of men have frequently spent the night there, but none has ever been able to account for what he has seen. It is said that there is now deposited in the bank at Toledo a draft payable to anyone who will lay the ghost. But the ghost refuses to be laid. One night last summer a party of thirty-five men who are residents of that section went to spend the night in the house, but before morning all had been frightened away.

The whole story is authenticated by Orville Stevens, who lives near there. With two other men Mr. Stevens spent a night in the haunted house, and relates many startling stories of his experience. They all believed the story about the house a fake, but to gratify their curiosity they secured Mr. Elliott's consent to spend a night there.

Stevens avers that he was awakened by a noise like footsteps on frozen ground. Sitting up in bed, he listened intently. Sure enough, the noise grew more distinct, coming nearer and nearer, and apparently some one entered the house. Trembling with fear, he aroused his companions, who, hastily rubbing the sleep from their eyes, prepared to witness the seance.

First, two crutches belonging to young Elliott, which were lying on the floor, raised up, bumped together a couple of times, and then slid across the floor under Stevens' bed. One end of the crutches rested on the floor, while the other ends commenced to pound upon the underside of the bed. Next the stool on which the lamp was resting turned over, then right side up again, the light remaining in its position, apparently bidding defiance to all laws of gravitation. Then a chair out in the middle of the room commenced to do a clog dance. Jumping out of bed, one of the men took hold of the chair, but it slipped from his grasp and continued the dance. The man on the floor turned to Stevens and asked:

"What would you do if the chair should fly at you?"

"I'd slam the d—n thing back again, mighty quick!" was the rather profane reply.

The remark was no sooner given utterance than the chair, lifting itself, flew through the air and struck over Stevens bed, and he quickly ducked under the bed-clothing in hopes of avoiding his would-be assailant, who seemed to be unwilling to observe the rules governing a friendly combat. Then the bed clothing commenced to slip from the bed, going down between the footboard and straw tick. The men held on to the clothes, but they slipped from their grasp. Stevens jumped from bed and looked under it, hoping to catch a glimpse of the mysterious visitor, but nothing but the bed clothing was in sight. After this the ghost rested for a while.

After awhile they retired again, and for an hour or more perfect quiet reigned supreme. Suddenly one of the men gave a yell, and jumping from bed declared that something had him by the foot. The others protested, but he insisted. He returned to bed only to have the performance repeated. This time he decided to sit up the rest of the night, but there were no further manifestations of the spirit visitor.

Stevens says that these are things which he actually saw, and no argument can convince him that the age of spooks and hobgobblins has passed. He is firmly convinced that the ghost of the old man was in the room, and doesn't care to spend another night there.

One tale is told of a couple of large black dogs that frequently appear at midnight. They are apparently strays, as no one claims them or knows them. Elliott has endeavored to shoot them, but his gun hangs fire, though it shoots readily at anything else. His brother tried to shoot them, but his gun also refused to fire, the cap snapping, but the cartridge refusing to explode. The same shell was discharged when fired at a mark shortly afterward.

It is said that the picture of the old man which hangs on the wall will not remain straight no matter how often it is fixed. As soon as it is straightened it again leans toward the old man's grave.

MOSES HULL ON THE SICK-BED.

To the Editor:—I am impressed to write you of the condition of our Brother Moses Hull, and without consulting either himself or his wife, because he is too ill to be consulted, and his wife is too busily occupied at his bedside to be disturbed; but I feel that everyone will be anxious to know of his real condition, as it is known to some that he has been hovering on the brink of the other shore, and for a time there was but little hope of his recovery. For the past year he has kept about with difficulty, but owing to the great need, and his promise to Father Pratt to carry forward the work of the school, he has determinedly kept at his post. He has given way only occasionally when for a few days at a time he would be compelled to keep his bed; even then, getting out of a sick-bed and teaching or preaching when it seemed necessary.

He had been confined to his bed two days when he started to Washington to attend the N. S. A. convention. While there he was at his post of duty during every business session, but was obliged to go to his room and bed nearly every evening. His daughter, Mrs. Johnson, was with us at the convention, and on several occasions found it necessary to render him assistance. When Brother Barrett was obliged to cancel his appointments, Mr. Hull consented to fill them on his return home. This proved too much for him. He took cold with the overwork, and came home too ill to sit up all of the time; still, he kept at work until the following week Friday, when he was obliged to leave his class. He grew worse so rapidly that a physician was summoned. Since that time he has suffered enough to pass over a dozen times, and in fact he has said repeatedly, "If it were not for the school, I would pray to be let go on."

It is now fourteen days since anyone except his family has entered his room. I am told by the physician he is improving but that it will be some time before he will be about, and that he can never be well until there is a surgical operation, his trouble being bowel, kidney and bladder complications.

Everyone who reads this will feel a wave of sympathy for Moses Hull, and some will read it who know how, and are able to express their sympathy. I hope to reach the eye or ear of his friends who are able to understand his condition, and who will act from their hearts and judgment.

Mr. Hull gave up a good salary to take up the work of the school, to receive forty dollars per month. We have paid all bills in our power to pay, but not all the teachers. He is not now even earning his salary. Mrs. Hull cannot leave him to earn anything. The books do not sell themselves when he cannot introduce them. There will be a big doctor's bill, and the house must be run. Will his friends remember him now in his need and will they do it in a spirit that shows they appreciate the noble old man whose staunch integrity, loyal fidelity, and courage has been a land-mark in Spiritualism for nearly fifty years? I am not asking for charity for Moses Hull. I ask his friends to come forward and show by deeds their love for him.

CLARA L. STEWART.

Whitewater, Wis.

The above indicates that Mr. Hull is dangerously ill, and needs assistance. This office contributes $8, and hopes that Spiritualists generally will shower down upon him the assistance he requires at this time.

A Lawyer on Church Taxation.

Duane Mowry, Esq., a prominent lawyer of Boston, in "The Green Bag," a magazine devoted to jurisprudence, gives his reasons why church structures and church property should be taxed, as is other property. He says by omitting such taxation other property is made to bear the burden of government which should be equally shared by all that receives its protection. He gives five reasons, which to us seem unanswerable, why there should be no exemption of church property from taxation:

"First. Because the church performs no public office or function known to the laws of the land which entitles it to immunity therefrom.

Second. Because the policy of exemption from taxation of church property involves a union of church and state, which is at variance with the fundamental principles of our government, and wholly un-American.

"Third. Because such exemptions are inequitable, in that they favor a portion of the community, statistics showing that about one-third of the population are church members or communicants, only, at the expense of others not interested.

"Fourth. Because the policy of exemption of church property from taxation involves a liability to the accumulation of great wealth, to be held in mortmain by never-dying corporations, independent of the state and which may be used against the best interests of the public.

"Fifth. Because the exemption of church property from the taxation is wholly inconsistent with and totally opposed to the cardinal idea of the church, viz., that all means contributed for its support, as well all efforts in its behalf, shall be given freely and voluntarily, a tax imposed by government never being given voluntarily in the sense church offerings are obtained."

"Invisible Helpers." By C. W. Leadbeater, the noted Theosophist lecturer and writer. Very interesting. Price 55 cents. For sale at this office.

"Mark Chester; or a Mill and a Million. A Tale of Southern California." By Carlyle Petersilea. A pure psychic story, elevating and reformatory. Paper covers, 40 cents. Cloth, 60 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

"The Kingship of Self-Control." By Wm. George Jordan. It treats of the crimes of the tongue, the Red Tape duty, the supreme charity of the world, the revelation of reserve power, etc. Price 30 cents. For sale at this office.

Mediumship and Spiritualism:

THEIR VALUE IN THE WORLD'S ADVANCEMENT.

A Lecture, Given through the Lips of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Chicago, October 4, 1903.

Of course you know the usual definition of medium is anything which is the means of the conveyance of something from one part of space to another, or from one person to another. The air is the medium of sound, of light and of all those subtle forces that constitute the agencies of life. The earth itself is a medium for these agencies, and when it comes to science, a medium is either that which unites, or that in which certain elements are soluble that otherwise would not be so.

Medium, in its technical modern sense is one who is an instrument or a means of conveying intelligence from spirits who have pased through what is called death to those who remain in the mortal form. Of course any messenger is a medium. The telegraphic messenger is a medium, the postoffice clerk, the letter carrier; but in this especial sense, a medium is one who is employed to convey messages from the spirit world to those still in human life.

Spiritualism is the modern manifestation of mediumship and of the communion between the two worlds. Technically Spiritualism is the aggregate knowledge that is in the world growing out of this intercommunion between the two states through mediumship. In a larger sense Spiritualism is whatever pertains to a knowledge of the spirit.

But we maintain that Spiritualism is not a modern discovery or a modern dispensation. It is the modern manifestation of ancient power of the spirit in a different way. If you read in Paul's epistle to the Corinthians the chapter on spiritual gifts you will have just as good a statement and enumeration of spiritual gifts as you will find in any spiritualistic work of modern times. Showing that those gifts were in existence then as now.

A gift is something imparted or bestowed. Mediumship is bestowed; it is a gift to do that, without which gift a person could not perform the things done; it is the performance of certain things, the manifestation of certain powers over substance and intelligence, and this manifestation has never existed and does not exist in the world to-day, separate from mediumship.

AID FROM THE SPIRIT REALM.

There were never prophets, seers or teachers who had a knowledge of the spirit realm without the spirit realm being in existence and aiding in that seership or teaching. The different orders of intelligence in spirit states not only communicate to each other, but to mortals at need. This need is governed, as everything else in the universe is, by the Infinite purpose, and by intermediate intelligences who fulfilled that infinite purpose. Consequantly, when we speak of mediumship in the modern sense, we do not speak of it as a new discovery, as the only proof of immortality or the only manifestation of an immortal life. We speak of it as the modern manifestation—the only living testimony that is active in the world to-day concerning the future life.

We have heard about "independent clairvoyance." There never was a thought about independent clairvoyance until after Spiritualism had been in the world some time. We have heard about spiritual gifts, or a knowledge of spiritual things being unfolded by oneself. We know that the spiritual realm contains those who are a great deal wiser than the wisest upon the earth to-day; because they not only have the wisdom with which they were endowed while upon the earth, but the wisdom that has been attained since; and all these minds are more wise than the wisest human beings, or than one human being.

Mediumship, in a measure, is an adaptation to human conditions.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS COME IN CYCLES.

Spiritual gifts or manifestations come to the earth in cycles or periods, according to the needs of humanity on the earth, according to the cyclic state or conditions of the earth, and according to the religious and spiritual requirements. Consequently the Christian Dispensation was in response to a need. The Christ and the spiritual gifts accompanying the Christ were neither accidental nor out of the order of the divine economy, but perfectly in accord with it. The gifts that accompanied Buddha, which enabled him through that divine attainment to perceive what had been, were also in accord with this great purpose. Whenever the earth and its inhabitants are experiencing physical upheavals; whenever socially and politically there seem to be changes and transitions and cataclysms, there are also spiritual forces set into action to answer the needs of the hour.

Sixty years ago people were floundering between materialism, the materialistic schools of France, Germany and Great Britain, and a theology that had well-nigh become materialistic and had blotted out all hope. A little later the schools of theology sent forth their students with Darwin, Huxley and Spencer in one hand and the Bible in the other. The theological student was expected to reconcile the two, and many of the theological schools were extending into a liberalism that verged upon agnosticism. The eloquent liberal preacher, O. B. Frothingham, fifty years ago was confronted with the proposition of possible annihilation for the human race while preaching to his congregation in New York.

SCIENCE AND SPIRITUALISM.

Science seemed to undermine the foundations of theology and the literal kingdom of heaven; that which each especial denomination expected its followers to experience, was swallowed up in the larger proposition of whether theology could be maintained at all. Religion was not affected. Science was not affected. But the real spirituality of the race was however hungering.

Spiritualism came as much in response to that need as coal oil came in response to the need for an illuminating substance, as gas, electricity and other physical discoveries and manifestations came. The race needed a new light concerning an old proposition, a new manifestation concerning an old truth, and it came.

It came in the form of mediumistic manifestations of spirit presences. Of course neither the whole nor even a small part of the human race, except the few that dreamed dreams and had visions—also induced by spirit guardians could have any knowledge of the other world. Mediums were, therefore, selected, not with reference to any especial physical traits, not with reference to any intellectual traits, not with reference to any moral traits, but selected as adapted to give the manifestations that were needed to the world. In this there was perfect accord with the ancient method: Trance, visions, dreams and their interpretations, the gifts of tongues and the interpretation of tongues, of healing, of the pouring out of the spirit to teach wisdow or knowledge—these were all again made manifest. Even reviving that which was known among the ancient oriental countries, who consulted the "Mahatmas" and those endowed with such gifts, showing that these methods were again conformed to.

THE METHOD ADOPTED NOT WRONG.

If the method is wrong, then God is wrong, for He made it. If the spirit intelligences are wrong, from the poor sailor boy, who wishes to send a message to his mother, to the teacher who gives the highest words of wisdom and knowledge, then every method by which intelligence is manifest is wrong, because it is just as much in accord with the divine plan and purpose as any method of the universe.

These manifestations and these teachings have kept pace together. No "signs" and "tokens" or wonders have been given that were not accompanied by exalted philosophy—a philosophy that has culminated in the philosophy of life. So if the manifestation is wrong, then all methods by which human beings are permitted to receive knowledge from each other must be wrong.

SALIENT POINTS AS TO METHODS.

These methods are accepted we know in the human state. But the spiritual methods have not been universally accepted because people do not know about them. If you wish to know about astronomy, you consult the most eminent astronomer. If you wish to know about chemistry you consult the most eminent chemist. If you wish to know about railroads, you consult those who know the most about this subject. If you wish to know about Spiritualism, you CONSULT ITS ENEMIES. THAT IS THE USUAL METHOD. The people who do NOT know about it are the people who have the most to say about it. When Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace was chairman of the Psychological Department of the British National Association of Science, they were one evening discussing hypnotism, psychology and Spiritualism, when a man arose in the rear of the hall and said: "Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything about these things, but I think——" "Stop!" said the chairman. "Time is too short for you to tell what you don't know. There are plenty of people who do know something about these subjects, and we want to hear them." If you want to know about Spiritualism and mediumship, the Spiritualists who have known about it the longest and who are most eminent in its work are the ones to ask. Upon the lines of human evidence and human knowledge their testimony is the best.

MEDIUMSHIP DOES NOT DESTROY PERSONALITY.

Through medimusaip has come into modern thought the demonstration of the existence beyond the change called death, which both science and theology had abandoned offering any evidence of. Through mediumship has come the knowledge, a priori, that this evidence of a state being a continuation of personal intelligence, is also corroborative proof of immortality. So the gateways to the knowledge of immortality have thus been thrown open.

Mediumship does not destroy the personality, the personal life, the individuality or the individual responsibility of the medium. Human life, as you see it, is not very largely individualized at best. You can tell what paper a man reads in the morning by the politics he talks. You can almost always tell the church he attends by the theology he talks. You can tell his theories about business and who dominates him in business by what he says and does in a business way. You can tell how the father or mother dominates the children, or the children dominate the father and mother, by what they do and say. In fact man as a "free moral agent"—and woman, too (with the permission of man)—has hardly attained that state, and if the world is to arrive at the kingdom of heaven by exercising enlightened volition and persistence, which is the result of that enlightened volition, and is to accomplish the achievement of immortality, why, of course the world, as a whole, is a long way from that at the present time.

AN EARNEST PLEA FOR MEDIUMS.

But since that is not our theory; since we know that when there is an individuality it cannot be destroyed, the human states that do not express the fullest and highest unfoldment of that individuality are states of growth, of preparation, and the soul comes in contact with the dust to gain expression by different paths of experience. Why not mediumship? It is one of the ways by which the world gains knowledge and experience. A medium is in no sense a victim, any more than any other human being is a victim that lives and does anything or is made to do anything. No spirit band or controlling intelligence ever manifests through a medium that has not an intelligent wish and desire, as well as ability, to protect that medium's personal and individual rights and to maintain that medium's personal responsibility.

The manifestation through a medium is governed by laws, just as perfect as the laws that govern the material universe. An intelligence of a lower order cannot influence or dominate one of a higher order. A medium may be unfolded as such, or developed as such by wise spirits. Then a spirit that is not so wise may be permitted to manifest. But it is by permission. The sailor boy manifests to his mother and uses profane words as was his habit on earth; but it does not make the medium profane. If some one kills a person and seeks after having passed to the other world an outlet for confession to some mortal, and the guides of a medium say, "here is a a channel through which you may confess or speak to some mortal," that does not make a murderer of the medium. But it is a means by which that murderer gives expression to his pent-up longings for confession and forgiveness. Then it is also true, that those who commit murder who are not nominally mediums, are not compelled to do so by spirit power. The law of murder is a human law, it exists in connection with human passion. Spirits do not have human passions. Weakness in the spirit life is the result of not having conquered human passions waile here where you have all the material appliances for the gratification of those passions. There is no weaker or more powerless thing in the universe than what you here call an evil man or woman in the spirit life. If this were not true, even before Spiritualism came, the world would have been abandoned long ago; for every human being would have been killed off. If the good were not more dominant than the evil, and if the power and influence in spirit states were not in accordance with knowledge and spirituality, there could be nothing left upon the earth but chaos.

MEDIUMS LIKE OTHER PEOPLE.

Spiritualism is a movement, not an accident. Mediumship is a movement. Now we do not say that personally all mediums are wise, good and pure. They are what they are. But their mediumship has not made them any worse. In the majority of cases it has made them much better. It has given them the spiritual knowledge, that according to the life on earth and its unfoldment so must the spiritual harvest be.

THE GREAT LESSON THAT SPIRITUALISM HAS BROUGHT INTO THE WORLD OF MODERN THOUGHT IS THE LESSON THAT EACH INDIVIDUAL, EACH PERSONAL SPIRIT REPRESENTS IN THE SPIRIT STATE THE RESULT OF HIS OR HER LIFE ON EARTH. THIS IS THE FIRST WORD, THE LAST WORD AND THE WORD ALL THE TIME.

Spiritualism has conquered (to those who have received it, and many who have not nominally received it, but who have been pervaded by its spirit) the fear of death physically, and the fear of what may come after death in the way of a literal hell-fire. BUT IT EXPLAINS THAT YOU WILL HAVE THE HEAVEN OR THE HELL THAT YOU TAKE WITH YOU.

Over and over again, hundreds and thousands of times, spirits have said: "I am sorry that I did this when on earth. I am sorry I did not attain that." These messages are valuable to show to human lives, to teach human beings that each one takes into spirit existence that which constitutes the sum total of that one's personal nature. Excepting, as said before, that in physical life physical passions dominate; in the spirit state that succeeds it, that which was physical passion on earth, the dominating power, becomes, what it really is here, spiritual weakness.

The mediums who have given the messages of Spiritualism to the world for the last fifty-five years have been on the average just like other people. Anyone in the sound of the speaker's voice could be a medium if the gift were bestowed upon that one, if the spirit intelligences regarded it as wise or best. Where there is persistent opposition the spirits withdraw, because the opposition is not good for the medium, and the spirit world chooses to find a mesenger, or ministrant, or interpreter that will bear the knowledge of spirit life to the people without resistance.

MEDIUMSHIP AND PERSONAL LIBERTY.

A great cry has come up from certain people during the entire history of Spiritualism (it is not a new thing), "Does not mediumship take away one's individuality?" Not at all! An individuality that once exists cannot be taken away. If you are doing work for a firm down town you do the work that that firm wants you to do during the hours that you are employed. If you do not approve of the work you leave it. But while you are doing it, if you write, you write what they want you to. If you are selling goods, you sell the goods they want you to. If you are connected with any institution, you for the time being do their work. But the time you are away from such an institution you can follow your own pursuits and live your own life of usefulness. But you are a ministrant to all intents and purposes in the work of your employers. Civilization may be demoralizing, but that is what civilization does with men and women.

INTELLIGENCE NOT DESTROYED.

Now this intelligence of the medium that for the time being is either set aside or consents to give the message that is given, is not destroyed, the individual volition is not subjugated, the moral nature is not subjugated, but the message is given to the world. In every instance where the message has been of persistent value to the human race and the medium has continued to be a medium for the manifestation, there have been continuous advancement and improvement made in the intellectual and spiritual unfoldment of the medium. The most ignorant medium knows more about the future life than the most intellectual materialist on earth. And that is knowledge so much more valuable for the continued existence of the person, and what it brings, that the intellectualist would change his knowledge for it if he knew how. Such intellectualists and scientists as have started out to prove the fallacy of spiritual ministrations have remained to pray. Wallace, Flammarion, Crookes and three score men who determinedly started out to prove that the message from the spirit world might be explained within the known laws of the material universe without recourse to the spirit world have, after careful investigation, admitted their error and admitted the truth of the message. Now when Mr. Huxley said, about thirty-seven years ago, that one would not want to read all the letters that passed through the postoffice, nor care to know about all the messages from the spirit world, even if they were true, he betrayed the lack of the discrimination of the real man of science and investigation. The one letter that he wants in the postoffice, if his son is afar off, that will tell of his whereabouts and condition, would be one he would wait for day and night. Like the one message you wait for, when in the Philippines or South Africa your favorite son is a target for bullets. That message is the one you are willing to wait for. So when down into what is called the valley of death your choicest ones, your dearest ones have passed, and some one says to you there is a pathway opened, a process as justifiable as telegraphing, as justifiable as letter writing, by which you may know that your loved ones live, we say that the human being is not in existence that would scorn that way, or that would reject that message when it is known that the message can be received.

MINISTERS WRITING AUTOMATICALLY.

Ministers in their pulpits often receive their sermons through their own hands, writing them automatically, declaring a higher knowledge of the future life than any theological school has given. Men of science in the laboratory, through the mediumship of one endowed with these gifts receive the knowledge that enables them to arrive at a finality in experiment never realized before. All geniuses, all inventors know that they are but the instruments by which the inventions, or so-called discoveries are given to the world. By night they dream, by day they work, and when the dreams of the night reveal that which no experiment could discover to them, they know that an unseen hand has unlocked the invisible gateway that they might give the messages of new thought or invention to the world.

MEDIUMSHIP AND INDIVIDUALITY.

When that wonderful book was written, by which it seems the death knell of slavery was wrought, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Harriet Beecher Stowe said: "I did not write it. It was written through me." When Dante in vision beheld the face of the one whom he adored in silence, and far across that stream that seemed to divide them, she held the white rose of immortal love. In the prelude to his matchless Paradiso, he says, "Even the words came from her;" he becomes the medium of giving that divine message to the world. And when we say this, with all reverence, Jesus said, "Of myself I am nothing, but as the Father gives me utterance." He became the message bearer of the love that upon Olivet shone and upon Calvary triumphed over the weakness of men. Men and women do not lose their individualities by being the bearers of loving and useful messages.

Physical consciousnes is not individuality. A great many persons know more when they are asleep than they ever do when they are awake. The setting aside of that which ordinarily controls the instrument, which is consciousness in the body, is frequently access to a higher realm than all the waking hours ever knew, and will gradually introduce that higher realm into the waking hours. The one standing before you, who as a child was the instrument for spirit messages and ministrations, even as now, passed and repassed into that realm and came back laden with messages and knowledge of the spirit life, enriching her knowledge and enabling those who spoke through her lips to give knowledge to the world.

The man to whom you loan your instrument to play upon, and who is a master, not only makes better music than you can, until you are a master, but he leaves the instrument in better condition for you to play upon. Twelve musicians can make more music than you can. A medium opens the avenue for intelligences, more than one, and because of that gives added and more valuable testimony. One writer of one book may interest you. An hundred writers on the same subject, but each giving their individual experience, must be more valuable. A medium as the mouthpiece for many authorities, for many spirits who each have their experience, even if the experience is one of sorfow that is permitted to be given, gives a most valuable lesson.

The treasures that you are to lay up for the future conditions of mind in spirit states are to be gathered here; you are told that you may lay up those treasures in your lives to-day for the future. Make the best of this opportunity, of the splendid philosophy that has come into the world through Spiritualism.

You hear it percolating through the pulpit; you read it from the men of science; you read it in the literature of the day. There is no human being who thinks that has not been taken forward more than half a century by the knowledge that Spiritualism has given and the messages that have been given through mediums.

There is not a medium of any value that will not bear testimony to what we have said. There are twenty mediums or more in this audience, and they know that their lives have been enriched; that their knowledge has been increased; that their individual and personal self-control is greater; that they are more valuable, even in their daily lives, to one another and to their families and friends than if they were not mediums.

We can well understand the opposition of the "learned professions" to mediumship. It does away with the business of the pulpit, excepting in exact proportion as the ministers of to-day preach Spiritualism—in that degree they are more successful.

It takes away from the practice of the doctors, unless they also employ clairvoyants and healers to diagnose their diseases and suggest what remedies are best, which we have known dozens of physicians to do. The power of healing in various ways has caused the medical fraternity to stop and question. It is no wonder that they are talking of regulating hypnotism, Christian science and spirit healing.

It has taken away the business of lawyers, by teaching people not to go to law, that there is a good deal better way to adjust these things. There is no Spiritualist worthy the name but what believes in arbitration; that is the final adjudication of every difficulty between people and races.

So it is not strange, with law schools turning out lawyers, medical schools turning out doctors and theological schools turning out preachers, that the world of the learned professions should object to your being your own ministers, your own doctors and your own lawyers. Of course it must. But the time is coming when you will be, even more than to-day.

No Spiritualist claims that the present status of Spiritualism is a finality. There is no finality in eternity. No Spiritualist claims that the present manifestations of mediumship are a finality. But the time will never come on this earth nor on worlds vastly in advance of yours when some intelligence will not exist higher than yours, who will have a message of love to give you, and will speak through the mediumship of some one; even when the Christs, even when the philosophers, even when the great teachers are no longer put to death. Nevertheless, physical death can be borne when one is the messenger of life eternal.

Do You Know What It Means to Cure Constipation?

It means to turn aside and throw out of the body all the woes and miseries caused by a clogged up system, and they are many. Constipation means that the bowels are weak, so that they cannot keep up that constant motion the doctors call peristaltic action. When that stops passages cease, the blood begins to absorb the poisons through the walls of the intestines and thus disease is scattered everywhere. Death often lays onits foundation in this way. Torturing diseases like dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney troubles, liver complaints, heart disease, headaches and a hundred and one other complaints start that way. A cure must come through toning up, strengthening and invigorating the bowels. This can be easily, gently, and permanently done by Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine. It is a tonic laxative of the highest class. It builds up the bowels, restores the lost action and adds new life and vigor. Only one small dose a day will positively cure constipation of any degree by removing the cause of the trouble. Try it. A free sample bottle for the asking. A SOLILOQUY.

On Thomas Huxley's Sepulcher, In England.

Some years ago, when in England, and at the grave of Thomas Huxley, I looked down into the yawning grave under a young and healthy oak in full leaf. Around the sharply cut rectilineal fissure stood men and women who bore some of England's most illustrious names. In the warm smother of wavering light, I stood on the rought graveplank and looked into the depth. Far down in the dimness I saw on the lid of varnished oak the formal handful of earth, a few bay leaves, and a white rose, and "Thomas Huxley" lettered on the metal plate. Then I raised my eyes from the dull chasm in the yellow gravel into the gleam of the sweltering July day, and, for a few seconds, was physically blind. Mentally blind I still am to all that the mystery means—the pulse of blood, the pent of breath, the throb of intellectual life all over, and only earth to earth, dust to dust, the rustling of clay clods upon half-hollow boards, the spade's sharp click, the shovel's prolonged grating, and then darkness and long months and years of unsightly and unseen decay.

This is, indeed, a tragedy of terrible moment, and one that, in spite of its frequency, never waxes stale. What the real significance of it is we are as far from knowing at this hour as we were when the earth's first dead man was wept over by the world's first mourner. Even that Thomas Huxley, whose name is now on a brass plate ten feet down in the grave, when alive, could throw no more light upon the mystery to which he has now succumbed than could that little village girl in the Finchley Cemetery, with the look of wonder on her child face and the posy of yellow buttercups in her hand. Much Science has answered, much philosophy has guessed. But, Why are we here? Whence came we? Whither go we? remain interrogatories utterly outside all mortal gnosis. We do not seem to be dowered with even the crudest rudiments of the faculty by which the problems of eschatology might be solved. The proverbial "desire of the moth for the star" is not hyperbole at all, compared with our desire to know the unknowable that lies at the source and root of birth and life and death.

What dark, rank leaves of hedereal gloom shall I lay on thy shrine, dread Thanatos! What dust shaken from the cerements of sepulchre, what ashes from the urns of races vanished from the world, shall I scatter upon my head ere I stoop before the cerie glory of thy throne! What dews from the hemlock, what ichor from the nightshade, must I drink from the chalice of Hecate ere I presume to invoke thee! What dull hatchments must impress me, what weight of the gaunt sarcophagus, what pallor of the buried shroud, what gleam of the white face-cloth, must lie upon my soul ere I am worthy to be thy neophyte. I sit in the shade of the cypress, and there pass dim and far visions of the gloom transmuted into glory by thy weird alchemy, O Death!

"Sure and certain hope?" Nay, in this connection, we have not sure and certain of anything whatever. The truth is, we do not know even what to hope for, our nescience is so profound. We can hope only on the relative plane of our experiences; but here we have had no manner of experiences whatever. We invoke the sphinx, but the sphinx is silent. We cry to God, but God is dumb. We lay our dead in the dust, and the weed that grows above them knows as much of death as we. We shed our tears in bitterness of heart. We go to the old home, and the old face is not there. There are voices, but one loved voice is hushed. There is hand-shaking, but there is missing one hand that was warm and firm and true; and we know it is mouldering ten feet down in the gravel—and this is all we know.

Piety and affection have, for long, through all the history of man, exercised themselves as to what to do with the remains of the dead. It is hard for the son to give up his father to the remorseless mould, to lay down in the merciless dust the knees that dandled him when a child, and to, unresistingly, allow the grave-worm to gnaw the tongue that "told his wondering boyhood legend's store." Ah, it is terrible to lay that gray head in the unfeeling earth, and to behold it never more. It is hard for the bridegroom to lay his young bride deep down in the clay, even before the orange flower in her hair had withered, and she had fairly stepped over the Rubicon between maid and wife. God, what is it to have to heap insensate sods and stones on that recently warm and throbbing bosom, to lose sight forever of that form which first inspired the intense poesy of Life and Love! Can not something be done to retain it on the bourn of mortal being, to guard it against disintegration, to protect it against decay? And, in response, embalming was contrived—a dread parley with Love, a tragic compromise with Death.

There is no leathern mummy in museum or neglected catacomb but was once a solemn centre of affectionate sorrow. To those who embalmed, the mummies of their dead were precious above all other possessions. We read in Herodotus that, in order to put down borrowing as much as possible, one of the kings of Egypt (Asychic) made a law that when a man borrowed he must mortgage, or put in pawn, to the lender, the body (or mummy) of his father. It was considered infamous and impious for a man not speedily to redeem such a pledge; and, if any individual was so unfortunate as to die while the mummy of his father was still unredeemed, his body was allowed to remain unburied, which was one of the greatest punishments which could be inflicted.

I never see a mummy but its mute and leathern lips preach me a homily, chant me a Jeremiad that would have choked Jeremiah with woe. I see maidens of the olden world—none of the modern world—with their astral bloom and erotic fervor—kiss those now leathern lips in rapture, aeons before Semiramis had left her cradle, Chiliads before Troy's Helen had been born. And maiden's kiss is the seal of the holiest sacrament which earth ever knew, which heaven ever attested. Albeit, in an instant from the dim bourn of the infant world, I collapse with bitterness and cynicism. I remember that the very grave and its sanctities have been desecrated and outraged by Mammon. These ancient lips, in regard to which I have been tragically sentimental, may be a modern fraud. For instance, it was discovered that seventeen of the mummies in the Berlin Museum have been fashioned at Alexandria by the deft hands of manufacturers of antiquities. A sum of no less than 800,000 marks has been recently disbursed by the museum for Egyptian relics, and the inquiry which is being pursued is expected to result in other edifying discoveries. Those lips on which I have been gazing, lost in a dream within a dream, may, in my own day, have been jabbering German; they may never have been kissed by anything better than a jabbering Berlin harlot who still plies her trade in the Strasse Talleyrand. Instead of uttering oracles ere Delphos had been built, that mouth, possibly, never did anything more eloquent than chew the tough integument of a German sausage. Ugh!

Never anyone yearned for high ideals, for realities, with more intense desire than I have yearned, and I can find them nowhere—only fraud and sham and mockery. And I am accused of mordant cynicism, blighting satire and biting sarcasm; and all this because I can find no altar upon which I can lay the sacrifice of my soul in safety. The earnest men of the old Nile valley embalmed because they believed in the immortality of the soul; now men do not really believe in the immortality of the soul, nor in anything whatever—except money. While in America the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain heard of the famous Trans-Atlantic professor who one morning addressed his class in words to this effect; "Gentlemen, this morning you will be required to write an essay. The time allowed you is five minutes, and the subject is 'The Immortality of the Soul.'" Five minutes spared from money-making is now-a-days sufficient for such an unimportant subject as the soul's immortality.

Vagrant Camp Followers.

In former communications to The Progressive Thinker, I have asserted that the continuity of life is proved by science and the sentiment of mankind, and that the same fact is abundantly proved by a multitude of credible witnesses who have received communications from the spirits of the departed. To my mind these truths are as firmly established as any fact can be established.

The philosophy of Spiritualism stands upon sure and safe foundations. Ignorance and superstition have in the past assailed it in vain, and will be powerless to injure it in the future.

This Spiritualistic philosophy appeals to the judgment and conscience of humanity; it offers the only rational solution to the vexed problem of life; and its tendency is to elevate all those who follow its glorious teachings.

It never, as yet made a single human soul worse; never caused human misery. It has ever and always preached the doctrine of hope, happiness and peace and good will.

Those who have thrown aside their earthly bodies are not dead; they have not gone to a distant land; they are ever with us.

"All houses wherein men have lived and died
Are haunted houses. Through the open doors
The harmless phantoms on their errands glide,
With feet that make no sound upon the floors.
We meet them at the door-way, on the stair,
Along the passages they come and go,
Impalpable impressions on the air,
A sense of something moving to and fro."

But there is a large army of vagrant camp followers of the Spiritualistic hosts, that greatly injure our cause among many. I allude to the men and women who answer sealed letters, slate writers and the like. In the spirit of honest investigation, I have for some years patronized these pretenders, more or less, and never once got any satisfactory results. Not long since I consulted one, and upon first blush I was of the opinion that I had received a remarkable communication and so wrote the pretended medium. Upon further investigation I found out that there was nothing remarkable about it.

If I could have the proof of the communion of the departed with the living, that many reputable people of my acquaintance have had, there is nothing under the sun that I would give more for.

Years ago, when the "Religio-Philosophical Journal" was published in Chicago by my cousin, S. S. Jones, I saw an advertisement in that paper, that a certain photographer located in the east could take exact photographs of spirits of the departed, for which service he charged in each case the modest sum of ten dollars. I sent him the ten dollars and requested the photograph of my grandfather, Thomas Pope, and informed him, incidentally, that I was a cousin of the editor of the Journal. I did not hear from him for about a month, when he returned the ten dollars, saying that the conditions were not favorable for a photograph of my grandfather. This incident is a fair sample of my experiences along such lines, except it is the only case where money advanced by me has been returned.

Faith Cure Wins Point.

Columbus, O., Nov 17.—The decision of the Supreme Court to-day in the Bishop case, on appeal from the Common Pleas court of Butler county, does not legalize Christian Science, but sets forth that there is no law on the statute books of Ohio compelling a person to summon a physician in case of illness or injury. There was no evidence before either court, the decision says, to prove that the Bishops, the defendants in the case were followers of that cult.

It appears from the papers in the case that Sylvia Bishop and her husband failed to call a physician to treat their child, who was severely burned and afterward died. They were indicted for manslaughter and acquitted of the charge by a jury at Hamilton. The state brought the case up on exceptions, and the Supreme court to-day unanimously overruled the exceptions.

The child of the Bishops was not treated by the parents and the claim was not made that their course was dictated by the fact that they were Christian Scientists. The case rested upon the proposition whether under the laws of Ohio a person was compelled by the statute to call a physician in cases of illness or injuries. The court held that while such a course was to be condemned, there was nothing in the laws to forbid it.

The decision is received by the Christian Scientists here as tending to sustain their views on the subject.

Scientists claim that it is encouraging to the creed, in so far that it lays down the proposition that it is not illegal under Ohio laws to fail to summon a physician. The decision is likely, it is said, to bring about legislation on the subject at the coming session of the Ohio general assembly.

CURES DEAFNESS AND CATARRH

ONLY ONE REMEDY IS CERTAIN AND THAT IS "ACTINA."

Deafness is the direct result, in 95 out of every hundred cases, of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The effect of catarrh is to fill up and clog the air passages with deposits, these in a short time stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Deafness ensues, and the hearing cannot be restored until these deposits are removed. It is impossible to reach the inner ear by probing or spraying, and that is the reason why the greatest aurists and physicians find their skill baffled. But science has discovered a way to reach these heretofore inaccessible portions of the head. This discovery has been named "Actina." It is a vapor current which, passing through the Eustachian tubes attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal deposits, so that they pass away, and at the same time loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, so that they immediately respond to the slightest sound vibration. Ringing noises in the head are also caused by catarrh, and are the premonitory signs of deafness. "Actina" never fails to cure this distressing affliction; we have known cases of years' standing to be cured in three weeks. "Actina" is also a certain specific for asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are either directly or indirectly caused by catarrh. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, also sent Free. A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS, Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

MANY ITEMS reached us last week on Monday morning, too late for the current issue. Send your items in NOT LATER than the previous Saturday.

Geo. F. Perkins writes from 122 Mission street, San Francisco, Cal.: "I am making a desperate struggle. If any person having sent a dollar for reading and have not received it, will they kindly send date of birth in own writing, and I will respond as best I can. Give me a chance to earn a dollar."

MRS. A. E. Sheets, the well-known lecturer, is lying ill in Nichols Hospital, Battle Creek, Mich., where she has been since October 1. Her stay there will doubtless be prolonged, and she would like to receive letters from friends, as the days and weeks pass slowly. When able to attend funerals she will give notice through The Progressive Thinker. She has assurance of ultimate recovery.

Dr. Beverly writes: "At Lakeside Hall you will always find new and attractive features. Next Sunday at the after-meeting, Dr. Beverly's class will bring their crystal balls, and give each a short reading to demonstrate, that you can become psychic enough to see for yourself that the inner faculty contains wonders that are not dreamed of in the old philosophy. Speakers from the New Thought Convention will entertain us. Mrs. Dr. See at 3 p. m., and the best psychics till 10 p. m."

Prof. Ransby, trance platform worker, would like to hear from small societies between Cleveland and Boston. Address, General Delivery, Cleveland, O.

Mrs. F. H. writes: "The First Spiritual church of Cleveland, Ohio, opened it doors Sunday evening, Nov. 14. A good attendance and good music. Free door and free seats. A very fine and large lyceum is carried on by the society which meets in Wilson Hall, corner Wade Park and Dunham avenue."

Aug. Recht writes: "The Society of Spiritual Truth holds meetings every Sunday at 3 o'clock, at Crosby Hall, 423 Classon avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. Lectures, tests and communications are given by Mr. Rasmussen and other mediums."

Kate R. Stiles, an eloquent lecturer and a test medium, has been interesting the people of Toronto, Canada lately. The World reporter says: "Those who listened to the communications from the spirit world were solid men and women, with more than ordinary intelligence, and firmly impressed with the soundness of their belief. The Toronto Spritualist Association was organized about ten years ago and has a membership of 300 to 400. A. R. McDonald is president and N. A. St.Clair secretary. Several of the officers stated that there were about 10,000 Spiritualists in Toronto, although only a small proportion had paid up. There are three associations in the city."

Sunday evening, Nov. 15, at the First Spiritual Society of Ottumwa, Ia., Harry J. Moore, the popular young orator, christened two children, boy and girl, of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson. The service was very beautiful and impressive, and was the means of interesting many, for five members were enrolled during the evening. The lecture delivered by Mr. Moore upon the subject of "Baptism," was an able defense of the floral christening. Mr. Moore traced the history of baptism from its earliest use up to the present innovation, with great accuracy.

The humble home of Thomas Cross, in the tenement section of the South End, was visited to-day by hundreds of people to see what many hold to be a striking Spiritualistic manifestation. On a pane of glass in a kitchen window can be plainly see what appears to be the imprint of a woman's hand, the palm, the fingers and thumb, and even the lines of the palm being distinctly visible. All efforts to remove the imprint have failed. Mr. Cross is a Spiritualist. He is employed in one of the cotton mills, but on Sundays, and when other occasions permit, preaches his doctrines. Mrs. Cross died two months ago. She, too, was an ardent Spiritualist, but the children, of whom there are six, three boys and three girls, know little of the doctrine. The oldest, a girl of 10 years, named Eliza, is skeptical of the faith of her parents, and Spiritualists interpret the appearance of the hand on the window glass as a sign to the doubting daughter from the mother. The hand was discovered by the girl as she was washing the window, and repeated efforts have failed to erase the imprint. Hot water and soap, acids and muscular efforts have so far served only to make the hand stand out more plainly. The fingers are spread wide apart and the knuckles are large as though the hand had been used to hard work. The more enthusiastic among the believers in Spiritualism who have witnessed the phenomena do not hesitate to say that they detect the mark on the third finger showing where the wedding ring was long worn. The merely curious who have visited the place have bent their energies to finding an explanation of the mystery and have even gone so far as to remove the window from its place to permit a more thorough examination. One after another have given up the puzzle. Mr. Cross does not attach great importance to the matter, as he says he is accustomed to receiving still more wonderful communications from the departed.—Fall River, Mass., cor. Boston Globe.

The Pottstown (Pa.) Daily News says: "That there is an unknown quantity in creation, an undefinable, indescribable something, a mental telegraphy, through which the thoughts of men are transmitted without any tangible agency is admitted by the most practical, and those who doubt it do not attempt to explain instances of phenomena which cannot be understood upon any established hypothesis are simply agnostic upon the subject. Soothsayers of ages past have foretold the overthrow of kingdoms and there are today those who seem gifted with the power to penetrate into the midst of the days and years to be. One of these is now stopping in this town, Madame Demorest. A lady of striking appearance with a strong, intelligent face and head crowned with a wealth of hair just touched with gray, she would attract attention of even the casual observer, but her predominating features are her eyes. They seem to be looking into the great beyond and to fathom the innermost thoughts of those she addresses. The Madame is a pleasant conversationalist, and explains in a lucid manner the theory of the existence of spirit forms."

Dr. J. C. Phillips, the healer and psychometrist, writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "I visited the Golden Rule Society (legally organized under the state organization) last Sunday. There was an attendance of about fifty persons. Dr. Knowles, of Michigan, was the speaker. He gave the members some wholesome advice regarding their work and how to be on their guard with the traveling fakes of the country. I was well pleased with the speaker's remarks, and hope and trust said society will be successful. Mrs. L. D. Everett is the president of said society."

Leslie and Henry Marsh, brothers, work on farms about a mile apart in the town of Tyre, near Seneca Falls, N. Y. On Saturday night they each dreamed that their uncle, Henry Marsh, who had left his home in Tioga, Pa., in a mysterious manner eight years ago, had died in Colorado, leaving them joint heirs to a large estate. After dreaming this both brothers, still asleep, got up and dressed and set out to inform each other of the news concerning their uncle. Half way between the farms the brothers met and awakened in the road. They were greatly confused, but finally exchanged stories and each returned to his bed. The brothers each received a letter yesterday from the surrogate of Weld county, Colo., informing them of the death of their uncle Henry and that they are the heirs of his estate. The Marsh brothers are Spiritualists and say that their uncle always believed in dreams. Neither of them had ever had any somnambulistic experience before.

W. F. Jamieson writes from his new home, Pentwater, Mich.: "Forty-three years ago I began my public career in this state. I am 'impressed' that I will end it in Michigan. After more than forty years' travel from Dan to—no, from Michigan to Mexico, Kansas to Kentucky, Connecticut to California, Massachusetts to Missouri, back and forth, to and fro, like the orthodox fourth person in the trinity, trying to do the world some good, by teaching the gospel of common sense; seeking ever to learn more about nature, especially human nature; having little difficulty in keeping happy, the cycle is complete. We left Cincinnati, wife and I, a few weeks ago, came by rail to Chicago, steamer to Michigan. Here I am willing to live—and die; perchance, 'to be' forever! Mr. Howe will then confront me with a 'scientific certainty.' I hope he will and I wish he knew it!"

Frederick Fuelner, who lives at 2500 Auburn street, Port Richmond, had a bad dream early in the morning, and when, to save himself from the clutches of a strangler, as he thought, he awoke about 2 o'clock in a paroxysm of terror, it was to find a man by his bedside gazing down upon him. It was only a flutter of his eyelids, and then Fuelner closed them tight and held his breath. The next moment he heard the intruder go into another room, and, springing lightly out of bed, he ran downstairs and out into the street, shouting 'Burglars!' at the top of his voice. Officers Kuster and Wilson, of Belgrade and Clearfield street station, heard the alarm, and running up with drawn revolvers, dashed into the house. In one of the downstairs rooms they found a large-bodied man under some furniture, and pointed their weapons at him. He crawled out and meekly held out his hands for the handcuffs to be snapped on his wrists.—Pittsburg Leader.

Augusta D. Treadwell writes encouragingly of her mediumship. She regards it as an exceptionally great blessing to be a medium, and heal the sick, comfort the sorrowing, and bring messages of love from the dear friends on the other side.

E. C. Thompson writes from Bridgeport, Conn.: "I receive the paper every week regularly, and I enjoy reading it very much, and just at the present time I think it is doubly interesting with all the different letters from all the different ones, on The Great Psychological Crime. You have truly stirred up a Storm Center, and I do not want to miss a single paper just now. Now there is one thing that I wish was different. In Bridgeport, a city of almost ninety thousand, we have not any Spiritualist meetings. There are several mediums in town and also many Spiritualists here, but no open or public meetings. There used to be a large and flourishing society here, but now it has gone, and what the people need is to have some one for a leader, but we can't seem to strike the right one. Last winter we had Dr. Noyes and wife here with us; they did a good work. What I wish is that some good live medium would come here, and get the society together again. If you know of any good one that is looking for such a place as this, I will do anything that I can to help him, as I think that there is a good opening here for some one who is willing to work. In closing let me say do you, go on with the good work that you are doing. I am a Spiritualist and am not afraid to stand up and be counted with The Progressive Thinker line."

Occultism, that strange knowledge which enables the wizard of the east to perform seemingly impossible feats, is losing some of its elements of mystery since it is being successfully taught in this country after the manner of ordinary education. It is the latest of all the modern popular studies, and may be described as the unfolding of the inner consciousness. The aim of the teachers of this as yet little known "science" is to bring out what is already within every one. It is not dependent upon suitable subjects, after the manner of hypnotism, but may be studied with success by any one willing to devote the time to it. The adherents of this new education maintain that there is no power, either of the body or mind, which cannot be fully developed by the practice of the drills which constitute the essential part of the study. But it must be observed systematically and faithfully. Before beginning the lesson the mind of the pupil must be filled to the utmost with the heart's desire, for, while the student is rising mentally into the desired realm, whether it be of music, art, or poetry, the creating power each one possesses is going forth through the unfolding of the inner consciousness. In order to eliminate all other thoughts from the mind a heavily traced black ball is fastened to the wall directly in front of the eyes.—Detroit Tribune.

S. C. Tracy writes of Mrs. Maggie Vestal, of Chesterfield, Ind.: "The messages I received were something remarkable, I being a resident of California, and here on a visit. The spirits came and talked to me for about two hours; told me all about Masonry and where they saw me, and about a certain law suit that took place in California six years ago."

Two thousand miles to consult a clairvoyant. Many people will say, "he's crazy," but nevertheless that is what Henry W. Moore, a New Yorker, who has made several millions out of steel and copper during the past few years, did a couple of weeks ago, when he came to Denver for the purpose of consulting Laska, the clairvoyant out at No. 6 East Fourteenth avenue, and getting his prediction on the result of the election in New York last Tuesday. This seeker after clairvoyant information is quite a plunger even for Gotham, and is said to never miss having a small fortune down, either on a big horse race or an election. When the nominations for mayor of Greater New York were made he was at his wits' end and as the result of repeated losses he had grown afraid of his own judgment. In his dilemma he began telegraphing in an endeavor to find Laska and upon locating the man of mysteries in Denver he at once took the train and started West. When he arrived at the Brown Palace it was hard to convince the bell boys that he was not John W. Gates, because every boy who did anything for him received a tip of from 50 cents to $5 and consequently he never lacked for attention. So much confidence had he in the clairvoyant powers of Laska that he had come west determined to wager his money on the size of the majority and he told the clairvoyant that he would do something handsome for him over and above the regular fee if he won. Laska predicted that McClellan would be elected by over 60,000 majority—his majority was 63,617 and Moore wagered an even $100,000 that McClellan would win by over 60,000. When the returns were all in and his money collected Moore's first thought apparently was to make good with the clairvoyant, and yesterday Laska received a draft for $5,000. This is high water mark for fees paid to any clairvoyant in the country and it only required, so Laska says, about three minutes' work. —Denver Post.

Prof. R. S. Ray writes: "The Spiritual Unity Society held its first anniversary entertainment and ball, Nov. 14, at Heuser's Hall, corner Wisconsin and Larrabee streets, North Side. It was largely attended and every one went away satisfied. There were several mediums from all sides of the city present who willingly gave their services. Many received loving messages from their dear ones from the other side of life through the message bearers. The musical program was exceptionally good; in fact the whole affair will be long remembered as an enjoyable event. There were two large tables filled with floral tributes presented by the friends. We intend giving another entertainment and ball some time in February, but it will be necessary to have a larger hall next time. Thanking one and all for their kind attendance and assistance."

Mrs. Flora L. Furse writes from Mitchell, N. D.: "Mrs. Emma M. Nutt-Moore, in her lectures in Mitchell, has given perfect satisfaction to the public. Her tests and improvised poems from subjects given by the audience are wonderful, and her lectures have been inspiring and she is making many converts to Spiritualism."

Laura C. Morse writes: "It has been three years since I was told through a medium, they had papers on the other side to read, and held discussions as we do here. Well, that was a great happiness for me. The same dear friend who told me that still talks to me of spirit life."

Open house meeting to be held at the residence of Mrs. Nora E. Hill, 750 W. Lake street, Thursday afternoon and evening, Nov. 26, Thanksgiving, for the purpose of giving thanks and harmonizing together. All are welcome. Lunch will be served which ladies have donated."

Spiritualist meetings will be held at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue, between Polk and Harrison streets, every Sunday, afternoon at 2:30, evening 7:45, commencing Sunday afternoon, Nov. 29. Special program for this occasion. Lectures, good singing and tests. A number of good mediums will be present. Seats free.

Rena Chapman writes from Marcellus, Mich.: "Mrs. Julia M. Walton, of Jackson, Mich., one of our untiring lecturers and test mediums, has been granted a missionary commission for this state, and the societies can secure her services by corresponding with her at 507 S. Blackston street. The State Association is making arrangements to hold its mid-winter meeting in Jackson, February 5, 6 and 7, 1904. Some of the state's ablest workers will be in attendance; the program is not completed."

Bertha C. Chung writes from Osceola, Wis.: "Will J. Erwood, secretary of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, lectured in Osceola, Nov. 2, 3 and 4, on the Philosophy and Phenomena of Spiritualism, to large and interested audiences. As there are only about a dozen Spiritualists in and around Osceola, we have had only a couple of mediums with us before, so the chance of hearing such a good speaker as Mr. Erwood was a treat never to be forgotten by us Spiritualists here, and was very much appreciated by the public in general. The last night the hall was so crowded that there was not a vacant seat and very little standing-room. Many had to leave for lack of seats. His lectures were grand and his tests good, although he does not claim to be a test medium. He gave quite a number of tests after each meeting, all of which were recognized. Although it is two weeks now since he was here his lectures is still the main topic of conversation around town. I can truthfully say that many a staunch Methodist would be pleased to hear him again, and I think many are ready to embrace the beautiful religion which he teaches."

New York State Association Missionary Work:—H. W. Richardson, president, writes: "The state officials are now arranging the itineracy of its missionaries for the months of December and January, and under direction of the state board are continuing the same liberal policy under which this branch of state work has been so successful heretofore. But in order to conserve our financial forces we desire to reduce the traveling expenses of our state missionaries to a minimum, and for this reason solicit that inquiries and applications for our workers be sent in promptly, thus allowing the routes to be arranged in advance and thus arrange dates at contiguous points. Applications may be sent to the president of the state association, H. W. Richardson, East Aurora, N. Y., or to Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, 137 Congress street, Troy, N. Y."

P. W. Needham writes from Wabash, Ind.: "Brother and Sister Sprague came to Wabash, Nov. 14, and on Sunday held two rousing meetings in the Modern Woodmen hall. As a result the Psychic Research Society formed with 24 charter members. The following officers were elected to serve until Jan. 1, 1905: P. W. Needham, president; A. M. Rodebaugh, vice-president; Sam A. Brown, secretary; Mrs. Lizzie Paco, treasurer; Geo. Kimmel, Samuel Ramsey and Mrs. Rose Rish, trustees. Bro. and Sister Sprague leave Wabash amid showers of kind thoughts from all classes, and should they return to Wabash there is not a hall in town large enough to hold the people who will want to hear them."

Mr. and Mrs. Parker, phenomenal and automatic writing mediums, are now located at 1507 Wolfram street, Chicago. They will make arrangements for seances in near-by towns. Address them as above.

Daniel W. Hull is now in Snohomish, Wash., from where he would be glad to hear from all parties wishing his services.

Wanted to correspond with physical mediums in view of engaging their services for the winter in connection with the First Spiritualist Association of Jacksonville, Fla. H. E. Hull, secretary, 1570 Florida avenue, Jacksonville, Fla.

I. S. Getchel, president, writes from Rockford, Ill.: "To those interested in the Spiritual Science Society of Rockford, Ill., I wish to say that we still live, even though we were voted dead by those who willed us so, but we are Spiritualists and fully believe that death is not a reality, but only the change to a better condition, which we have found true in the work of our society. Twelve good working members have been added to our membership since our vacation. Our growth is not spasmodic, but the steady, healthy kind that lasts. Mrs. Nellie S. Noyes, of Boston, Mass., closed a three weeks' engagement with us last Sunday, Nov. 15, and although there was a special effort made to detract from our meetings, her audiences were larger than the previous Sunday which proved her ability as a lecturer and medium. After conducting six public meetings and two benefit circles, increasing in both interest and attendance to the last, in parting we realize that our cause has been strengthened, and our people go on with a better understanding of our beautiful philosophy, and would say to anyone seeking talent, if you want some one that is not only able to draw but to hold an intelligent audience and work for the strengthening of your society, you can find but few if any better qualified."

John D. Vail writes from Marshalltown, Iowa: "On closing the camp-meeting at this place on the 13th of September, we prevailed upon Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown (one of the speakers for the camp) to remain in Iowa for a short time, and try and work our new circuit plan, which you so kindly printed in full in The Progressive Thinker last June or July. She being heartily in favor of it, consented to try it, and during the time, nearly two and one-half months, she spoke twenty-four times for Spiritualist societies and five times for other organizations as follows: At Marshalltown four times for Spiritualists, once for Soldiers' Home, and once for Woman's Club. At Des Moines, about twelve times for Spiritualists, once to prisoners in jail, once to Children's Home, and once for Odd Fellows at Perry, Iowa. At Clear Lake, Mason City and Northwood, she lectured and gave entertainments twelve or thirteen times. At Webster City she organized a new society and gave nine lectures and entertainments, speaking one afternoon to a gathering of about 70 of the finest ladies in the town. Her work has been of a harmonious nature, causing harmony to evolve from chaos in some instances. Everywhere she leaves many loving friends and nothing but praises for her work, raising Spiritualism to a higher plane than many of the Spiritualists themselves thought possible. She made a success of the circuit plan. She worked a week in a place, and then changed to the next in town, working about ten weeks. She made her salary of $12.50 per week and all expenses, and turned into the state treasury over $22 or nearly $10 per month. Mrs. Brown is a tireless, willing worker, and we are only sorry we could not keep her laboring for the state association. Her limited time being used up, on Nov. 13, she left for Bloomington, Ill., to visit friends, promising to work for us again after her trip around the world, which I believe she will commence January 15, 1904. We bespeak for her only the kindest and best from everyone, and believe the Spiritualists make no mistake when they can raise themselves to higher thoughts and aspirations by employing those whose are refined and harmonious at all times."

The subject of Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond's discourse, next Sunday, Nov. 29, will be "If the Soul Teachings Are True, Why Does the Soul Mix With the Dust?" Masonic Temple, Room 309.

POQUONOCK, CT.

Spiritualists There Hold an Interesting Meeting.

The Connecticut Spiritualists held a semi-annual meeting in Liberty Hall, Poquonock. At the evening session Rev. F. A. Wiggin spoke on the subject, "Is Spiritualism a Religion?" His lecture abounds in pointed remarks and good sense, as follows:

"The piping voice of materialism says Spiritualism is not a religion. If the Century Dictionary definition of religion is true, Spiritualism is not a religion. The fear of God is not religion. It is simply the voice of ecclesiasticism. In the first chapter of the Epistle of James we find the true definition of religion: 'Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.' That is the religion of true Spiritualism, but not of those who seek only phenomena and sensation. Spiritualism does not fear God. God is love—universal love. God is not a being at all. They, who make God a personality, limit Him at once. They simply make a big man of Him. God is a universal, divine principle, permeating all nature. It is not necessary to follow the rules of any church to be religious. We have something like 350 different sects, each giving forth its own ideas of religion. Spiritualism teaches that we owe love and helpfulness to mankind. It is better to throw out love to your living friends than it is to put so much taffy on their tombstones. What's the difference between sacred and secular institutions? In the former you are put through the mill and ground out or down, to a fine theological point. In the latter, common sense ideas are taught, and the physical health is not neglected. The most important of our secular institutions is our public school system. This is really the most sacred of all. The free schools of America are the foundation stones of our liberty. If it were not for them all the so-called sacred institutions could not keep us from going to destruction. Our free schools are our safety. They do not teach dogmatism, nor sectarianism. They say to ecclesiasticism, 'Hands off!' Sound common sense has the right of way; theological straight-jackets have to go to the wall. If it is right to do a thing on Monday, it is right to do the same thing on Sunday. Spiritualism doesn't teach us to put on a long face on Sunday and on Monday to go into the stock market and rob our brother man. I asked Carnegie once if he would give $15,000 for a church for Spiritualists. I never dreamed that he would do it. I wanted to put him on record, and I have done so. Spiritualism tells you to keep your feet on solid earth and your head on your shoulders, and not in the clouds. One of the great troubles of mediumship is that the mediums sit too much. One lady told me that when she wanted anything all she had to do was to think of it and it came to her. She didn't do anything herself. She simply sat at ease and thought the thing she wanted and it came. That is not Spiritualism. In the language of the day it is called 'The New Thought.' Spiritualism teaches that only by honest industry can we produce a dollar. Spiritualism doesn't approve of such gigantic corporations as the United States Steel, with one-half water. It teaches honesty, love, charity and brotherhood every time."

At the close of each address, Mr. Wiggin devoted a half-hour to answering questions, written on folded pieces of paper, which he did not unfold, nor see at all. His eyes were blindfolded. He showed a remarkable psychometric power in reading, without the aid of material vision, these folded questions, and his answers gave general satisfaction.

Mrs. Helen Russegue, of Hartford, was present, and being called upon, gave one of her interesting and characteristic talks.

A Model Answer—Hudson Tuttle to the Front.

I would not trespass too much on the valuable space in The Progressive Thinker, especially when the Symposium is using so much room and absorbing so much attention; but I am so impressed with the importance of Hudson Tuttle's answers to questions, as well as his other papers that I want to direct the readers especially to his department? In this week's Progressive Thinker, Nov. 21, his answer to J. M. Matthews is a model of clear, broad reasoning, and elegant diction. His language will compare favorably with that of the late lamented R. G. Ingersoll in vividness and poetic beauty.

I find Florence Huntley decidedly forceful and remarkably easy and charming in her word paintings. By her second letter, just received, I discover that to her mind I am not so clear, or consistent, as I try to fancy I am, and she is puzzled to know what I mean, and finds some evidence against my frankness! Well, we must expect to differ and seem inconsistent to others who see with different eyes and interpret through different brains; but will find a point of agreement sometime and somewhere.

I will try to be consistent and make my thought clear as I progress with my analyses.

Readers who look for a polemic conflict will probably be disappointed. I am not in this discussion for a partisan victory—or defeat—but for truth, lead where it will. But I want to be SURE of the foundation before I adopt a new creed, or reject a science that has done so much for the world in fifty years. It is no light matter to be settled with a few assumptions and assertions.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

William L. Miller was converted to Spiritualism three years ago, through the mediumship of Mrs. M. Buchanan, at Marshalltown, Iowa. He passed to spirit life, Nov. 4, 1903, of heart failure. The Methodist minister of this place persecuted his spirit for an hour, and then consigned him to Mother Earth to await the coming of the great Judgment Day. Ye Gods! S. T. STEWART.
New Sharon, Iowa.

Passed to spirit life, in Hydesville, Cal., Oct. 23, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Lamb, aged two months.

Little Verna, sweet bud of promise, could not unfold in the chill winds of earth life, but was tenderly borne to the beautiful gardens of immortality. T.

After an illness of several months, at her home in Union City, Mich., Mrs. D. E. Youngs, aged 66 years, passed to a better life on Nov. 11, 1903. She had for twenty-five years been a firm exponent of the beauties of Spiritualism, and knowing for months that she must soon pass on, and through her faith was well provided for, she made all arrangements as cheerfully as though going on a short visit. Interment at Riverside Cemetery, Union City.
CHAS. S. YOUNGS.

Passed to higher life, Nov. 7, Willard Snow, aged 74 years, an old pioneer Spiritualist. He leaves a wife and adopted daughter to mourn their loss. Services conducted by Dr. P. T. Johnson.

William Dykes, of Cleveland, Ohio, passed to the higher life, Nov. 10, 1903, aged 67 years. He leaves a widow who is consoled by her knowledge of Spiritualism. Mr. Dykes was a good man and much loved and respected by his friends. Interment at Riverside Cemetery, Rev. C. H. Figuers officiating.

In the World Celestial.

LIGHT OF EGYPT.

The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is (a valuable addition and) a library on occult subjects. Spiritual astrology is especially elaborated. Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc., are a few of the subjects treated of in a scholarly and masterly manner, showing the author to be familiar with his subjects. You cannot afford to be without it, as well as all his other books, viz.: The Light of Egypt, Vol. I., bound in cloth, $2; paper, $1. The Light of Egypt, Vol. II., bound in cloth only, $2. Celestial Dynamics, cloth, $1.

THE SOUL OF THINGS;

Or Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. By Wm. and Elizabeth M. F. Denton. A marvelous work. Though concise as a text book it is as fascinating as a work of fiction. The reader will be amazed to see the curious facts here combined in support of this power of the human mind, which will resolve a thousand doubts and difficulties, make geology plain as day, and throw light on all subjects now obscured by time. Price, $1.50. In three volumes, cloth bound, $1.50 each. Postage, 10c per copy.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the contin

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin, Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

C. H. Murray: Q. Where can I procure the works of D. D. Home?

A. As the books of Home are dropped from the catalogues, it would appear that they are out of print. Possibly they may be obtained through the Banner of Light Publishing Co., Boston, Mass.

J. M. Hodson: Q. I have built a family vault, with superior rock, and at great expense. But I find the walls are constantly wet and hence unpleasing to think of. Is there any material with which it could be lined which would prevent this? What of the newly discovered Uralite?

A. Uralite may or may not be what is claimed for it. It is probably no better than other artificial stone. There is nothing that can be used to prevent this condensation. The walls are colder than the air which condenses, as dew collects on a pitcher of cold water in a warm room. The condensation which annoys this correspondent is the result of deficient ventilation. The construction is faulty in this respect. There should be an escape flue through the roof of the vault, and if closed by solid doors, an intake, near the floor. An architect understanding his business would easily make the required changes.

G. H. Mobley: Q. Is spirit photography a fact? If so, how are such pictures taken?

A. It is possible to take spirit photographs, but the means of fraud are so ready to hand, that all such pictures should be received with closest scrutiny. Some of the most widely advertised "spirit pictures" bear on their face unmistakable evidences of deception. In obtaining such genuine photographs it is contributive to a successful result if a particular spirit is desired, to have a time appointed, that the one desired may know and be present. Otherwise, the spirit might not be present and there would be failure.

Spirits cannot be photographed. The substance of which they are formed does not reflect light. They have to condense sufficient material around them to produce reflecton of actinic vibrations. This is much less than would be required to reflect light. Hence they begin the process of materialization, but do not reach a point where they can be seen by the eye.

Inquirer: Q. What truth is there in the story of the "Star of Bethlehem?"

A. The story which in changing forms is heralded by the press, about a scientific confirmation of the biblical narrative, has not quite as tangible a foundation as that of Jack and the beanstalk.

In one of its forms it is said that the astronomer Kepler, 300 years ago, by application of the laws of motion he discovered, found that on Dec. 25 or 26, 6 years B. C., Jupiter and Saturn were in exact conjunction for Palestine. They appeared as one star, and hence very brilliant. It was this "star" the wise men saw and were by it directed to the infant Savior.

Then German scholars found errors in the received chronology. The planets were in conjunction all right, but Jesus was not born on exactly that night! What accuracy these chronologists attained, when they have not a shadow of data to guide them!

But now comes the climax, the "discovery," that revives the threadbare story. Baron von Aefele, in a pamphlet published in German, by deciphered hieroglyphs found in Egypt, shows that the Egyptian astronomers recorded this conjunction, and that it occurred Dec. 26, 6 years B. C. of our calendar. Hence Christmas was fixed on the 25th, not because it was a pagan day of celebration, but because the Christians knew the exact day on which Jesus was born!

In pious times of exultation it is remarked by self-satisfied editors, that "the main intent to Christians is that this old Egyptian record, taken with Kepler's calculations, confirmed the gospel narrative. It shows that the birth of the founder of their faith was attended by an exceptional aspect in the heavens."

If the "Star of Bethlehem" was only a natural phenomenon, the union of two planets for a time as one, what miraculous significance has the story? Is not all its value in the belief that it was a divine symbol, outside the ordinary course of things?

This story of Kepler, to begin with, is a pious lie. That such a computation is possible, cannot be denied, for the laws controlling the motions of the planets are unchanging, and conjunctions and eclipses may be calculated for a million years past or future. Yet the immensity of such calculations, reaching back for even 2000 years, can be appreciated only by the mathematician. From the date of Kepler's discovery of planetary laws until his death, would not have given him time to work out this tremendous problem, the slightest error at any point of which, would have vitiated the result. What did he set out to find? Why did he anticipate that Jupiter and Saturn by conjunction, produced the blazing Star of Bethlehem? The light of Saturn is so weak it would not appreciably affect that of the former. The story has the ear-mark, unmistakably, of a fake. Its concoctors show their ignorance of astronomy and mathematics, in saying that Kepler made this tremendous calculation by means of his "laws" of planetary motion, when these laws do not form any part of the equation.

Granting, however, that he made the calculation and found that the two planets were in conjunction at the mentioned date, by what process of reasoning can the event be connected with the guiding star, unless the chronology printed in the margin of the Bible and supposed to be as inspired as the text, is confessed to be a blunderful mistake? And even then all the miraculous which the divinity of the infant has been supported for ages, departs like a wisp of cloud in the summer sunshine.

Now that not a scholar in the world eminent for chronological study maintains that anything definite is known as to year or day of Jesus' birth, the "accuracy" of "Kepler's computation" is its condemnation. But now this German Baron comes with the usual budget of "discovered manuscripts," or "hieroglyphs." Admitting he has such a priceless treasure, the difficulty comes when he attempts to fix their date, and suspicion awakened when he assures us that Egyptian astronomers had recorded the conjunction Dec. 26, 6 B. C. This of course showing that our chronologers are just six years out of the way!

The Baron, nor anyone else can fix the date, for there is absolutely nothing tangible to fix it by.

The whole story is a fabrication and the "star" a myth like all the legendary tales of the endless succession of hero gods who have been apotheosized, during the misty ages of pre-historic, and early historic time. Being gods, after generations to satisfy a sense of consistency, invented miraculous birth, and divine fatherhood.

Honest Inquirer: Q. I have become deeply interested in Spiritualism. Have read many books on the subject, but being a Christian, naturally like Watson's book best. I think I can say, however, that without prejudice, I want the truth. I was getting ready to attend the Chesterfield camp-meeting, when I happened to read "The report of the Seybert Commission." It completely upset and disgusted me, and I gave up going. Still I hope that we can communicate with our spirit friends. How can I have this proven to me?

A. If this correspondent had fully understood the animus of the members of the Seybert Commission, he might have been disgusted, but it would have been at them and not at Spiritualism. To win the bequest for their university they enacted a farce investigation. According to the will of the generous Henry Seybert, the fifty thousand dollars he gave was for the permanent endowment of a chair for the investigation of psychic phenomena and Spiritualism and instructions in the same. The investigation was to be continuous. Since the report, years ago, what has this sapient committee done? Absolutely nothing. Their report is a libel on the fair name of Seybert. If this correspondent will become more familiar with spiritual manifestations he will reach this conclusion. The best method of having it proven to him, is for him to become a member of a home circle. He will thus be able to have the phenomena constantly before him for inquiry.

"THE NEW NAME."

"And His name shall be in their foreheads." "And I will write upon him the name of my God." "And I will write upon him my new name."—Revelations.

A soul struggling up to the sunlight—
Up from the mire and the clay,
Fighting through wars and jungles,
And sometimes learning to pray—
And sometimes a king with a scepter,
And sometimes a slave with a hod—
Some people call it Karma,
And others call it God.

A beggar ragged and hungry,
A prince in purple and gold,
A palace gilded and garnished,
A cottage humble and old—
And one's hopes are blighted in blooming
And one gathers the ripened pod—
Some call it fate or destiny,
And others call it God.

Glimmering waters and breakers,
Far on the horizon's rim,
White sails and sea gulls glinting,
Away till the sight grows dim,
And shells spirit-painted with glory,
Where sea-weeds beckon and nod—
Some people call it ocean,
And others call it God.

Cathedrals and domes uplifting,
And spires pointing up to the sun,
Images, altars and arches,
Where kneeling and penance are done,
From organs grand anthems are swelling
Where the true and the faithful still plod—
Some call it superstition,
While others call it God.

Visions of beauty and splendor,
Forms of a long-lost race,
Sounds and faces and voices
From the fourth dimension of space,
And on through the universe boundless,
Our thoughts go lightning-shod,—
Some call it imagination,
And others call it God.

Vibration of Etheric Substance,
Light, flashing through regions of Space,
A girdle of Something enfolding,
And binding together the race—
And words without wires transmitted,
"Ariel"-winged, Spirit-sandaled and Shod,
Some call it Electricity,
And others call it God.

Earth redeemed and made glorious,
Lighted by heaven within;
Men and angels brought face to face,
With never a thought of sin—
Lion and lamb together lie
In the flowers that sweeten the sod,
Some of us call it Brotherhood,
And others call it God.

And now the sixth sense is opened—
The seventh embraces the whole—
And clothed with the Oneness of Being
We acknowledge dominion of Soul,
And in all of life's phases and changes,
And along all the paths to be trod,
We recognize only one power—
One present Omnipotent God.

Rome Throttling Free Speech.

The Jesuits Driven from Germany, France, Mexico and various other Orthodox Countries, flock to the United States to carry on their Devilish Work. In the Philippine Islands their lands have been taken from them. P. A. Seguin, an ex-Catholic Priest was set upon while lecturing in Iowa and nearly killed. The Petition following explains itself.

PETITION.

In the District Court of Grundy County, Iowa, December Term.

P. A. Seguin vs. Wm. Murphy, J. P. Murphy, C. C. Murphy, J. J. Murphy, James Murphy, Francis Murphy, Wm. McAvoy, Jerry Condon, Pat Condon, John Condon, Jerry Flynn, Pat Flynn, C. J. H. Murphy, T. D. Murphy, C. C. Hummel and John O'Connor, defendants.

Plaintiff for cause of action against said defendants states:

COUNT I.

That on or about the 12th day of October, A. D. 1903, said defendants did in the hall of the Modern Woodman of America, in the town of Dike, Iowa, and upon the public streets of said town of Dike, Iowa, and in a restaurant in said town of Dike, Iowa, and in and upon the depot of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company, in said town of Dike, Iowa, and in the nighttime of said day, unlawfully, wilfully, wantonly and maliciously and in an angry, rude and revengeful manner, assault, strike, beat, wound, bruise and otherwise maltreat the body and person of this plaintiff, and did with their clenched fists and with clubs and other missiles and bludgeons, with which the said defendants were then and there armed, the proper names of said dangerous weapons, which the said defendants then and there held in their hands being unknown to this plaintiff, did beat, strike, assault, wound and bruise this plaintiff with such dangerous weapons, missiles, clubs and bludgeons, and did howl at, jeer, hoot, mock and ridicule this plaintiff, and did then and there by force rob him of two hundred and ten dollars ($210), lawful money of the United States, property of this plaintiff, and there being upon his person, and did carry away other valuable property of this plaintiff, and did then and there break plaintiff's arm, knock him insensible, kick, beat and bruise him, while in a state of insensibility and unconsciousness, produced by said beating received by this plaintiff from said defendants, and did maliciously and by force and threats compel plaintiff to leave and quit the town of Dike, Iowa, against his will and under his protests, from all of which unlawful and malicious doings, wrongs and acts of the said defendants, plaintiff's nervous system received an irrecoverable shock; his flesh was lacerated, torn and bleeding, and his entire body beaten and bruised, which said injuries are of a permanent nature and character, and from which plaintiff suffers great physical pain and torture, his nervous system entirely broken and ruined, from which he suffered and will continue to suffer, and will suffer the entire loss of his time and earnings, as well as the loss of his said property, and by reason of which he has suffered great physical pain and torture and mental anguish and agony, and been put to great expense for medical aid and medicines and surgical attendance, nurses and nursing, all to the great damage in the sum of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000), no part of which has been paid, though defendants have been frequently requested so to do.

COUNT II.

Plaintiff, further complaining, says, that on or about the 12th day of October, A. D. 1903, he was the lessee and in the peaceable possession and occupancy of the hall of the Modern Woodmen of America, situated in the town of Dike, Iowa, and that said defendants were riotously and tumultuously assembled at that time, and in the night time of said day in said town of Dike, Iowa, and that said defendants did then and there, while thus riotously and tumultuously assembled, did wilfully, wantonly, maliciously and revengefully break into plaintiff's said premises, and did then and there wilfully and maliciously trespass upon the same with the intent on the part of the said defendants to perpetrate a permanent injury upon the person of this plaintiff, and to wilfully and maliciously deprive him of the use, benefits and proceeds of his said premises, and that in the night time of said day, while thus riotously assembled in plaintiff's said building, and upon his said premises, said defendants did wantonly, wilfully, maliciously, revengefully and without any cause or provocation therefor, while thus trespassing upon plaintiff's premises, made an assault in and upon the person of this plaintiff, and did then and there, in the night time of said day, as aforesaid, in said building, and upon plaintiff's said premises, in a malicous, angry, rude, vicious and revengeful manner, strike, beat, wound and bruise this plaintiff with their clenched fists, and with weapons, missiles, clubs, bludgeons and other dangerous and deadly weapons, the particular description of which is unknown to this plaintiff, did assault, beat, bruise, maim, wound and mangle plaintiff, striking him upon the head, breast, shoulders, back, abdomen, face and neck with such missiles and weapons, striking him upon his face, kicking him upon his knees and tramping upon his feet, and gouging his eyes with their fingers, and plaintiff having sufficient mind and strength left, did make his escape from, of and out of said building and from said defendants, and did reach the far side of one of the streets in said Dike, Iowa, opposite his said premises, the said hall, and was attempting to save his life, limb and person from the fury and rage of said defendants, then a mob, and the said defendants, at the time, a howling, hooting, jeering, blaspheming, bloodthirsty, murderous and dangerous mob, did with intent to further injure, assault, bruise and mangle this plaintiff, follow him in their wrath, howling, screaming, shrieking, hooting, jeering, whooping, hollowing, roaring, bellowing and blaspheming, and threatening plaintiff in murderous language, and when immediately in front of a restaurant building in said town of Dike, Iowa, said defendants, in their wrath and with hot blood, overtook plaintiff and then and there again assaulted plaintiff with their feet, hands, clubs, billies, shillalahs, bludgeons and other dangerous weapons, then held in their hands, and while calling him vicious, vile, dirty, vulgar, low and unmentionable names, they did knock him down, beat him, bruise him and stamped on him, and while thus lying, bleeding, partially unconscious and helpless, the said defendants did rob and took by force from the plaintiff's person two hundred and ten dollars ($210), his property, lawful money of the United States, and when plaintiff did again escape from said defendants and their mob, almost helpless, he entered said restaurant for safety to himself, and to get away from them and their fury; they did further follow him in wrath and force him to emerge from and leave said building, and plaintiff attempting to get away from them went in an easterly direction, whereupon the defendants in like manner, as aforesaid, again followed him, overtook him and seized him, and he was unable to again extricate himself from their clutches or their wrath, but was compelled to remain in their grip and was forced by the defendants to the depot of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company and all the time said defendants were threatening plaintiff with bodily injury and inflicted the same on him, and subjecting him to all manner of insulting invectives, sarcasm and innuendoes, low jibes, taunts and disgusting insinuations, and refused to leave or quit said plaintiff of his person, but subjected him to all kinds of ribald jokes, disgusting threats, billingsgate and infamy, cursed and swore, profaned and blasphemed to and at this plaintiff, and used coarse, low, vile, filthy and disgusting language, and by force compelled plaintiff in the night and against his will to take the first train coming upon said railroad and leave town, and made him by force, applied to his person, board said train, against his will, and go to a destination against his will, and without any choice on his part, and during all of said time threatened him with all manner of abuse and inflicted the same, from which abuse and injuries received as herein recited, plaintiff suffered great physical pain and torture, and mental anguish and agony, his arm broken. Defendants shattered his nervous system, made him sore, insensible, weak and exhausted, wounded and bleeding and such injuries are permanent, and have caused plaintiff the entire loss of his time and will cause him to suffer loss of his time from his vocation in the future, besides his physical and mental suffering and torture, endured and yet to be endured, and put him to a great expense for medicines and medical aid and surgical attendance and for nurses and nursing, all to his great damage in the sum of fifty thousand dollars, no part of which has been paid, though defendants have been frequently requested so to do.

COUNT III.

Plaintiff further states that at the time he received the injuries, assault and indignities, hereinbefore set forth in the first and second counts of this petition, he was in good health, sound mentally and physically and was earning considerable money in his vocation, to wit, the sum of ten dollars per day, net.

Wherefore, plaintiff asks judgment against said defendants for the sum of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000) as damages, and for exemplary damages and for costs of suit, etc.

IT IS COMING.

It is coming! It is coming!
I can sense it in the air,
Hear it like the distant thunder
Rumbling, grumbling, everywhere.
'Tis the fast approaching crisis
Of a question deep and grave—
'Tis the final grand encounter
'Twixt the master and the slave.

Toilers bending 'neath their burdens,
Giving life-blood for a crust,
Strike for better terms and wages,
Asking only what is just.
Then old lordly corporation,
With his millions at command,
Coolly contemplates their action—
Knows they'll lose on every hand.

Then come days of anxious waiting,
Hungry children cry for bread,
Men wrought up to desperation,
Vow 'twere better to be dead;
And the public long-forbearing
Suffers while the war is waged
'Twixt the money lords and rulers
And the toilers bound and caged.

Can they hope to win the battle?
No! for gold alone is king;
Labor's arm when 'gainst it pitted
Falls, a weak and helpless thing;
And the daily press and pulpit,
Throttled by the powers of gold,
Add their thrust to honest labor,
And the cause of greed uphold.

Judging by these object lessons,
Something soon must come to pass;
While the world is filled with plenty
Thousand's starve to death, alas!
Will the sturdy, honest-handed
Millions robbed of hard-earned gains,
Meekly bow to old wage master,
And submit to wear their chains?

No! a thousand times, no, never!
Not while coursing through our veins
Runs the blood that bathed "Old Glory"
On a thousand battle plains.
From the factory, mill, and work-shop,
From the farm, and forge and mine,
We will join the strike for freedom
And unfurl its grand ensign.

In one broad phalanx the people
Will march forth with certain tread
And will wrench from corporations
Their means of earning bread.
Thus the question will be settled,
Not with cannon or flint-locks,
But by peaceful, wise decision
At the bloodless ballot box.

WORK AND REWARD.

The Earthly Tribulations of a Medium.

Only a few months before the passing away of Carlisle Petersilea, I received from him a letter in which he referred to one of the pieces I had received, and he gave me great comfort and encouragement to go on in the course I had espoused, as he knew the physical misfortunes under which I was laboring. I shall ever cherish it as a priceless treasure, for he now rests from earth's duties, but his works will surely follow him.

I wish to give to others some of the facts under which I am laboring, feeling that if my future writings fall short of others there will be cherished for me and the work I am trying to do, a great deal of charity.

Ten years ago at the age of 16 I was stricken down with typhoid fever and the softening of the spine.

Previous to that time I had been physically strong and straight as any robust boy could be. Weeks went on, and although I was raised from the bed of sickness, it was with paralyzed limbs from which nothing but the most skillful medical advice and tender nursing ever could have brought me.

But the severe spinal trouble which resulted from this sickness was beyond the power of medical doctors to cure.

The most skillful doctors in Boston, and one of the most noted skillful massage instructors there treated me and I was benefited, but no power could straighten the curved spine.

This led to other physical infirmities, especially a tendency to heart trouble and at times a severe pain in different parts of my body.

Oh! how I longed to die, for the future seemed fraught with suffering; I did not want to live.

I did not fear death, although I was not a professor of any religion, for it seemed to me that the same natural laws which governed life here would govern it in the Great Beyond.

I occasionally attended services at one of the Baptist churches in this city, and the pastor seemed to take a good deal of interest in me, doubtless feeling that I was liable to be called hence at any time, as I was certainly in very delicate health. He wanted me to join the church over which he presided, and gave me the Articles of Faith which it would be necessary for me to adopt before I could become a member.

I read them over and over again, but understood fully that I could not conscientiously accept them and frankly told him so.

He was not offended, for which I shall always respect and honor him.

A little later my grandpa on the maternal side was called home. He had reached more than fourscore years, but his mind was clear and his wise counsel and charitable heart made him of great usefulness to his family and the community where he lived.

As I stood beside the lifeless clay, I cried out in anguish, Why could not I have been taken and he spared.

He had been a firm believer in Spiritualism for many years, and had told me of some messages which he had at different times received through different mediums.

I liked to talk with him about these things, and when he had left me I longed more and more to know of them myself, and I said if there is such a thing as the departed talking with those they have left on earth, I'll seek until I find; I'll knock at the door of wisdom and truth and trust it will be opened unto me.

I have sought earnestly for the crumbs which might fall from my master's table.

I was not strong physically and not developed intellectually, as I should have been had not the severe illness come upon me.

I had at times different impressions which I felt sure came from no earthly source, and I tried to be guided by these impressions. I longed to do something which might bring a ray of hope to some disconsolate heart and trust my efforts would not be in vain.

Two years ago I had a very severe attack of asthma which aggravated my heart trouble and my suffering was intense.

As I lay hovering between life and death I seemed to have a vision, for I felt that I had left the suffering body and was in the presence of the supreme Judge. It seemed to me that I was blind, but I heard a voice which said, "You are now at Death's door; you have suffered much physical pain.

"Here in the spiritual life beyond death you will not suffer any more; you have hoped to benefit the world, you want to help others, but as yet you have been unable to accomplish much.

"If you now enter the spirit world you can carry out a good work among those here, who need help.

"Do you not think that it would be better for you to leave your deformed garment, and behold yourself in your spiritual body, than to take up the one of clay again?"

I replied: "I know not how to answer you. If I thought only of myself I should be glad to enter the realm of spirits now, but I feel there are many truths concealed from the world which I may be able to help give them unto mankind.

"I am willing to return to suffer more from the infirmities of the flesh in order to accomplish what has been the one great desire of my heart."

Other questions were asked me to which I replied, after which I had the promise that I should be instrumental in helping to prove to the world that there is a way by which those who have passed on can return and communicate with those who still remain in earth life.

The slender thread which connected the earthly body and the spiritual was not severed, but remained as a key to the material, and I said to the dear ones around my bed, "My earth work is not done; I shall not leave you," and to their surprise and their great joy I was restored to them.

That experience has left an indelible impression upon me, and from that time until the present I have tried to be a faithful worker in the cause of Spiritualism.

The help which comes to me from the spirit world is no delusion, and sustains me through many a trying ordeal, and in my feebleness I shall try to impart it to others.

I am willing to bear the cross, believing that if I am faithful I shall at last wear the crown of victory.

What Is This Mysterious Vital Fluid of Life?

Who is this Wizard that Dumbfounds the Doctors and Startles Two Continents by a Series of the Most Remarkable Miracle-Cures Known Since the Beginning of the Christian Era.

Can it be that at Last We Have Found the Wonderful Vital Fluid, the Real Force or Essence of Life, which has been the Dream of the Chemists and the Goal of the Learned Medical Professor of all Ages?

Dr. Jackstone Heals the Poor as Well as the Rich—None are Turned Away. Those who Write Him Seem to Receive the same Benefits as those who Call in Person. He sends His Mysterious Preparation by Express to All Parts of the World. He absolutely Refuses to Accept a Single Cent of Pay Unless his Treatment Succeeds, then You Pay Him What You Like Beyond the Actual Cost of His Remedies.

A. WILBUR JACKSONE, M. D., Ph.D., Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine—Discoverer of Force of Life.

To discover and make the vital fluid or force of life has been the dream of the chemist and the goal of the learned medical professors of all ages. The prophets, sages, and wise men of old, as well as the doctors, scientists, and learned chemists of to-day, have each and all pondered, wondered, hoped, experimented to discover this mighty intangible essence that makes us think, live, move, and have our being. At last it seems that the dreams and fancies of yesterday are the facts of to-day. At last a marvelous, mysterious fluid has been compounded, which, if not the secret of life, is, to say the least, the most wonderful, remarkable, and effective curative agent known to man. But what else than the vital fluid of life could heal Bright's disease, consumption, hardening of the liver, and other supposed fatal diseases, when doctors had said the last ray of hope had gone? What else could make the paralytic walk, give relief to those on the verge of death with locomotor ataxia, rejuvenate the aged, and fan the fickle flame of life into a steady blaze, which will burn with an unremitting glow until the life of man shall exceed that of many of the patriarchs of old? What else could possibly accomplish such wonders? At last we seem to have been rescued from the thraldom of disease; kidney, liver, and lung troubles have been robbed of their terrors; the rheumatic throws away his crutches with ecstasies of delight; the dyspeptic eats what he pleases, and when he pleases, and laughs at the gaunt form of indigestion.

The veritable wizard of medicine has come into our midst; not the wizard of old, surrounded by mystery, mysticism, and fear, but a genuine scientific wizard, who compounds his marvelous preparations in the bright light of day, under the guidance of science in an elaborate chemical laboratory. He holds out bright hopes to the sick; he solves the hidden mystery of ages; he cures when doctors fail and friends despair. He is not a mercenary man. He heals the poor and rich alike. He says his great discovery is for all mankind. He sends it by express to all parts of the world, so that the most humble peasant in Africa may receive the same benefits as the millionaire in New York. He accepts no pay unless his treatment succeeds. He says: "I do not want something for nothing; I want no one to suffer; anyone can test my treatment. I will send a four weeks' supply of remedies, express charges prepaid, to anyone desiring such; simply state the leading symptoms of your disease, and tell me you want treatment. I will make a full and complete diagnosis of your case free of charge, and write you fully in regard to the nature of your disease. I will also send you a complimentary copy of my latest medical work, covering your special complaint. This book describes fully the nature and use of my wonderful discovery, Force of Life. It tells what it cures and why it cures. It tells what it contains and how I came to discover it. It is elegantly illustrated with the finest engravings."

Dr. Jacksone has certainly made the most remarkable discovery of all ages, if measured by its benefits to mankind. For his preparation sells anyway. The demand for it is enormous. The cures it makes, miraculous. Dr. Jacksone's private address is Suite 242A, 1931 Broadway, New York. He assures that every letter written him will receive personal attention. He has a woman specialist, to whom women can write in confidence. One cannot witness the remarkable cures performed by this great man and remain silent. It is a duty every man owes to the world to tell his sick neighbor about this wonderful discovery. Hundreds are dying every day who might just as well live if they only knew of this great vital fluid of life, and realize that it alone would save them from an untimely death.

"THE UNKNOWN"

-BY-

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities, Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

An Exceptionally Important Question: Is Faith in God a Crime?

IS FAITH IN GOD A CRIME?

Two years ago a citizen of White Plains, N. Y., was sentenced to pay a fine of $500 or be imprisoned 500 days in the county jail for neglecting to call a licensed physician to attend his sick child. The case was appealed, and quite recently the supreme court affirmed the judgment. In delivering the opinion of the court, Justice Haight utters this significant language:

"Sitting as a court of law we have nothing to do with variances of religious beliefs, because we have no power to decide which is correct. We place no limitations upon the power of the mind over the body, the power of faith to dispel disease, or of the Supreme Being to heal the sick. We merely declare the law as given by the legislature."

All of which is equivalent to saying that the healing business has become a special privilege, and a monopoly of it given by our law-makers to a privileged few; and when the spiritual rights and liberties of the citizen are jeopardized, the court is shackled by the dead letter of the law and dare not inquire into the ethics, rationality or justice of a given case.

In the same journal containing the above account we read of a California city where 300 children are excluded from the public schools because the parents refuse to comply with the barbarous compulsory vaccination law of that state. And a third item in the same paper tells of a child that was inoculated with virus containing diphtheria germs which culminated in lockjaw, and in a few hours that child, like good old Enoch, who walked with God," was not, for God took him."

It is not easy to conceive of three occurrences which more forcibly bring before the bar of Reason and Common Sense the fallacies of orthodox theology and so-called medical science than do these three. And in view of the increasing frequency of such occurrences it is not out of place to inquire "where was I at?"

I disclaim membership or affiliation with Christian Science, faith cure, mental healing or any of the similar latter-day methods of dispelling disease. I know but little about any of them, hence neither applaud nor condemn. But I do know that a despotic hierarchy, equal to if not worse than the beast of Rome, is secretly working its way into all the legislative bodies of the land, from the senate chamber to the city council; and the freedom of opinion, speech and act once guaranteed by law is being rapidly destroyed by law.

Let us look at this case from the standpoint of a thoroughly orthodox Christian and see what reason this New York criminal had for believing that his child could be healed through faith in God.

He was one of those unfortunate creatures who sometimes think for themselves and have the audacity to act as they think; and that was the cause of his undoing.

He was a Christian; and times without number he had been told, and no doubt had told others, that the splendid civilization, the intellectual and social refinement, the advancement in arts and sciences, and the social, civil and religious liberty which the 19th century handed down to the 20th, was the exclusive product of Christianity. That Christianity is the product of the Bible. That the Bible is the product of the Hebrew Jehovah, and that this Jehovah is the sole cause, as well as the exclusive healer of all the ills flesh is heir to.

Through the lips of Moses, David, Isaiah, et al, he had heard this Jehovah declare: "I am the Lord, and there is none else; no other God but me. I form the light and create darkness; I kill and make alive; I wound and I heal; I will appoint over you terror, consumption, the burning ague, that shall consume the eyes and cause sorrow of the heart. I the Lord smite with the botch of Egypt [small pox], with emerods [piles], with the scab and the itch [leprosy and ring-worm] whereof thou canst not be healed. I the Lord do all these things."

Indeed that New York culprit knew as a matter of fact, that if the language of the Bible be literally true, and if the theological dogmas drawn therefrom are correct, there was no manner of use in calling a physician. He no doubt reasoned thus to his child: "If the hairs of your head are all numbered, and not even a sparrow falls to the ground without Jehovah's knowledge and consent; if all your outgoings and incomings, your downsittings and uprisings are under his personal supervision; if the hour of your birth and the day of your death were foreseen, forecordained and fixed in Jehovah's plan from all eternity, one thing is certain; if the hour for your departure has arrived, all the doctors in Christendom cannot keep you alive a moment; if that hour is not due, all the doctors, soldiers and other hired assassins on earth cannot kill you."

Then why fine and imprison a man for meekly permitting this Hebrew Jehovah to work out his own purposes in his own good time and way?

Not only does the Hebrew Deity claim the authorship of disease, but he also claims to be the only healer, and to possess the only unfailing remedy. Not an ache nor pain does he send to his children but what he stands ready with an all-sufficient antidote to be applied whenever the patient has been sufficiently humbled; completely broken and contrite in sprit, and willing to repent and accept the cure in faith and humility. That New York victim was no doubt familiar with the long list of faith cures related in the Old Testament. He knew of the multitudes who were cured of snake-bite by merely looking at a brass snake elevated on a pole. He remembered the instance of a cook making soup of wild gourds without knowing their deadly nature, whereby scores of the sons of the prophets were poisoned and would have died had not a handful of meal been cast into the pot at the command of the healer. Also the wonderful case of Naaman the leper, dipping himself seven times in the river Jordan when the loathsome scales of the disease God had sent dropped from him and "his flesh came again as a little child."

But time would fail me to tell of Job and the long list of Old Testament worthies, all of whom "walked by faith and not by sight," and were healed of all manner of infirmities by the exercise of faith in the Great Physician. And not alone to the chosen people of the Old Testament times was this serpent-on-a-pole faith-cure method of healing vouchsafed. But it came down from the Old to the New Dispensation; bridged the gulf between Malachi and Matthew and became a leading feature of the Christian Era.

Jesus of Nazareth was foreshadowed as the Sun of Righteousness who should arise with healing in his wings." As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness so should he also be lifted up for the healing of the people, and unto him should Jew and Gentile come side by side for faith cures. He came, and the record of his short life is honeycombed with instances of faith cures and mind healing more wonderful than anything related in the Old Testament. And "mirabile dictu," the power to do the same things, and even greater, was distinctly promised to each and every one who should believe in and follow him.

It is not a railing accusation, but a strong indictment against current theology to say that it has entirely mistaken the meaning and purpose of Christ's mission. And I mean no offense, but merely state a self-evident truth in saying that if the Christianity of to-day is following Jesus it is lagging a shameful distance behind. Theology bases man's hope of salvation entirely upon the words which Jesus is supposed to have uttered, and not upon the acts he is said to have performed. And yet, when John sent his disciples to inquire into the credentials of Jesus, the latter did not refer them to an Apostles' Creed, a Westminster Confession of Faith or the Thirty-nine Articles, but said: "Go tell John what ye see me do. The blind receive sight; the lame walk; the deaf hear; the lepers are cleansed; the dead are raised, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them. Verily I say unto you, if ye have faith and doubt not, the works that I do shall ye do also; and greater works than these shall ye do, because I go unto the Father. And these signs shall follow them that believe; they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

According to the record—Mark 16th chapter, 18-19—these were the last words Jesus uttered before his ascension. Do they mean something, or nothing? Is the entire story fact, or fiction? Either Jesus uttered those words or he did not. Either he meant what he said or he did not. Either he is able to fulfill those promises, or he is not. Which is it? How many Christians exercise faith in a single one of those assurances? How many D. Ds. or M. Ds. are willing to take up serpents, or drink poison, and trust Jesus to bring them through unscathed? According to the record, Paul and the early Christians did all these things; and if faith in Jesus was sufficient to produce such wonderful results then, why not now? Did Jesus mean what he said? The entire Christian world gives a feeble "yes" with the lips and an emphatic "No" with the heart and daily life for a reply. In the matter of healing the sick, instead of following the directions and accepting in faith the assurances of success which he gave, the entire proposition is treated as a preposterous absurdity, and the men and women who attempt to show their faith by their works are prosecuted as criminals. In this as in all other matters of a really spiritual character, "Vox Populi" has become vastly more potent than "Vox Dei" for the simple reason that the dead hand of pagan mythology still hobbles the thought and conduct, and beclouds the reason of the masses. The priesthood of to-day, like the saintly whited sepulchers whom Jesus denounced, are continually binding heavy burdens upon the shoulders of others and will not relieve them so much as with one of their fingers.

Preferring the churchianity of the church to the Christianity of the Christ, they have allied themselves with the "business interests" of the land; the money changers and money getters; the captains of industry and successful managers of men who manipulate legislatures, courts and juries in the interest of the privileged few, and to the injury of the unprivileged many. Whether consciously or unconsciously, intentionally or otherwise, matters not; the Christian world of the 20th century is like the Hebrew world of the first, its leaders are despising and rejecting the one whom their own prophets say came to save them, and are continually crucifying the Son of Man afresh and putting him to an open shame.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. Justice Haight reveals the existence of a deplorable fact. The cold, formal letter of the law which killeth, is the narrow jail yard beyond which courts of justice dare not go, and that letter bears the unmistakable impress of the Golden Calf. The recognition of religious rights and freedom of individual opinion which were incorporated into the charter of our government, are being nullified by the insidious efforts of narrow-minded D. Ds. and M. Ds.

Both professions are anchored to the snubbing posts of ignorance and bigotry. Both have joined hands with the legislative and judicial functions of government, and the enhanced power thus obtained is beginning to be felt. The tyranny of the dead is as active in the medical and legal fraternities as it is in the theological, and all three are fast becoming unbearable.

Precedent; the opinions and dictums of the early fathers are the only safe standard by which to measure the new questions which a new civilization is continually thrusting upon our attention. Partisan legislatures and partisan judges can be made the most powerful engines of oppression in a popular government, and under the corrupt conditions that now exist they are certainly becoming so.

Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to a friend, says: "The judiciary of the United States are like a body of sappers and miners working underneath in the dark, and will eventually undermine the liberties of the people."

In view of this New York case, the Income Tax decision, the Dred Scott decision, the government by injunction refusing the right of trial by jury, the numerous unjust and oppressive discriminations against mediums and healers, —does it not seem as though the undermining process was now going on?

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker.
TESTIMONIALS OF CURE.
My Dear Mrs. Dobson-Barker:—I want to say, I have been ailing for thirty years and you are the only one that has done me any good.
MARY JANE PEARCE.
Perris, Riverside Co., Cal., Feb. 21, 1903.

Mrs. Dobson-Barker—Kind Friend:—As I tried your treatment four years ago, and it helped me so much, I will write to you again to see if you are still practicing, and if you are I want to send to you for another month's treatment, for I can safely say that you did more for me than all the doctors on earth, and I hope you are well and still practicing. May the good angels bless you, is my prayer. Respectfully,
MINA M. YANG.

Stanton, Mich., Jan. 19, 1902.
Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker—Dear Sister:—I take my pen in hand to let you know how I am. I thank you and your band for I know I would be in my grave now, but you and your band have saved me. I suffered everything. I am happy to say I am a well woman. I was sick a long time; I do my own work; how I would like to see the woman that cured me. I let every one know who cured me. I was sick twenty-five years. I still remain your friend,

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.
Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH;
Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crockee. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

IMPORTANCE OF THE LYCEUM

The necessity of training the minds of the young is comprehensively shown by the Editor-at-Large. The Lyceum in the past played an important part in connection with many societies, and great good was accomplished thereby, and now an effort is being made to revive an interest in the work everywhere.

The Sunday School Illustrator goes out to multitudes of Sunday schools and furnishes the material to the teachers for their class instruction. A late number contains what they are to teach regarding Spiritualism. A more slanderous statement it would be difficult to make, and yet these are the views which are to be instilled into the minds of millions of children!

"Spiritualism is as old as the days of Moses. It is not a myth, not a thing to be laughed at, not a simple pleasure to while away an hour, not a communication of the dead with the living for the benefit of the latter. It is a terrible reality, a possession of evil spirits, a dominion of demons who control men and lead them to destruction. And those who go to performances of magicians and necromancers, who take part in table turnings and spirit rappings, who consult the mesmerist or clairvoyant, who indulge in planchette, who seek in any way for communication from the dead, are in the ways of death. A witch is a spirit medium, one who possesses supernatural or magical power by contact with evil spirits.

"We are warned against 'giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons, through the hypocrisy of men that speak lies.' I. Ti. 4:1, 2, R. V. And there are spirits of demons working miracles abroad to-day. Re. 16:14, pretending to be the spirits of departed friends, whom they shrewdly personate, and work such wonders as would, if it were possible, deceive the very elect. But they cannot be deceived because they will not put themselves under the power, not wishing that spirits shall take possession of them and work through their physical and mental faculties. And there are those who have power to-day to deliver others from demoniacal possession even as Paul did. Ac. 13:8-10; 16:16-18.

"Jesus gave His disciples authority over unclean spirits and bade them cast out demons. Mat. 10:1, 8." W. B. Laning, of Trenton, N. J., in 1853, through a writing medium, cross-questioned the evil spirit, and insisted in the name of the Lord that it speak the truth, then he said, 'In the name of the Lord, is the Bible true?' 'Yes.' 'The Bible forbids consulting familiar spirits. Which shall I believe, you or the Bible?' 'The Bible.' 'Why did you tell me it was right to consult spirits?' 'I wished to deceive you.' 'What is the business of spirits with men?' 'To deceive.' 'In the name of the Lord, is there a good spirit, the spirit of a departed Christian, among all these rapping and writing spirits?' 'No, not one.' 'Where are the spirits of departed Christians?' 'The Lord has taken them.'"

We quote only a small part of this lengthy screed, which shows the importance with which the subject is regarded and the fear that the young people may gain a truthful understanding of its teachings.

It it were possible to reply in the Sunday school papers the truths of Spiritualism might be presented in contrast to the assertions made, and the wholly false and brazenly ignorant interpretation of the Bible opposed by a correct exegesis. But these papers are edited by those who believe lying, and traducing those who do not agree in belief, commendable for Christ's sake, to use the religious papers is out of the question.

To reply to these threadbare assertions in spiritual papers, would be repeating arguments already stale by repetition. This is not my present object.

I want to call attention of Spiritualists to instructions given their children at Sunday school. You think after your home teaching, that they will be unchangeable to the persuasion of others against free thought and spiritual doctrines. If this is true, why do all the sects so urgently press the Sunday school on the attention of their followers? Is it not because experience has shown that the child is pliant as the young plant and receptive to the influences by which surrounded? If a child at six or eight years, begins attendance at Sunday-school, and continues regularly until fifteen, he or she will be prepared to be led into the church, and the denomination of that church will be that of the Sunday school which preceded it.

You who have come up from the fogland of theology, passed the Gethsemane of cruel creeds, and after years of struggle escaped the old beliefs which clouded your early lives with fear, doubt and foreboding, do you desire your children to pass through the same experience? Or do you prefer that they begin where you now are, free from the blighting dogmas, which cast a gloom over the fairest prospects? Shall they start from the mountain tops with minds free to absorb the truth wherever found, unfettered by the misunderstanding of the past, with self-dependence on their own righteousness; or shall they start from the bog-lands of theology? Will you provide their training and instruction, or will you turn them over, with fond reliance on their independence, to the training of those who hate, with a bigot's unforgiving hatred, your beliefs, and will herald as a triumph of their religion, if they bring your children into the church, and make them despise you because of your belief?

If you do not provide a place for your children to go, you should not complain they attend the Sunday school, and at the teachers there make the most their opportunity. You should not be surprised when your daughter joins the Methodists, and marries a circuit preacher, or your son is cajoled by the Presbyterians with an offer of a free scholarship, enters a theological school and becomes a gospel minister—being called by God with the incentive of position and salary.

If you do not relish this prospect, you must supply a school of your own. Children are gregarious. They like associates, and contact and friction with others is a spur to their endeavors. At the Sunday-school they are told that the only path to preferment, position or honor lies through the church, and that it is a disgrace not to be a member.

To counteract all these influences you have not only to build up societies, strong and influential as the churches, but, of more importance, associations for your children. The plan of the children's progressive lyceum has been well prepared by the seer, A. J. Davis, and there are books which furnish the requisite help and instruction. The N. S. A. most wisely has appointed superintendent of this work, John W. Ring, who publishes a weekly paper, "The Progressive Lyceum," as "lesson leaf," to assist with helpful hints and suggestions. There could be no better selection for the place. Capable, earnest, with the zeal of an enthusiastic disciple, absorbed in the work, he devotes all his energies, I may say his life, to the cause.

A progressive lyceum can be sustained where a society cannot. Why? Because it gives every one something to do, making every member a working factor. It may and should include adults as well as children. Groups or classes are especially designed for them, and they will gain as much benefit as the younger classes.

The method of the lyceum is distinctly spiritual; to draw out from within; to cultivate thinking, in opposition to the old method of teaching, which is to bring some outside revelation, to be parrot-like learned. The Sunday-school scholar is expected to bring his little cup to be filled by the teacher with scraps of Bible lore, and commentaries on texts. The lyceum attendants are led by the teachers to think for themselves, and have no reverence for anything new or old except the truth. It is because of this feature that a lyceum can be self-sustaining. Lectures are desirable at times, but at a lyceum session every member is expected to contribute something, a selection, a motto, a recitation, an answer to the question under discussion, and the whole forms a satisfactory and interesting meeting. The demand for social affiliation, intellectual and moral culture, are answered in a most complete and perfect manner, and there is little necessity of going to outside sources to awaken interest.

HUDSON TUTTLE,
Editor-at-Large N. S. A.

LET US BE THANKFUL.

Oh, we ought to all be thankful we are living here to-day,
And can dance or pray and gormandize
all in our own sweet way.
Yes, we ought to each be thankful for the privilege of birth,
If we own but rags and hunger or the most of this whole earth.

And, too, let us all be thankful, as we sit around our fire,
That the "Christian" men who own it haven't put our coal up higher.
Let us also feel quite thankful as we squeeze our empty purse,
That the stringency in money cannot make the matter worse.

Let us all be duly thankful, though we have a racking pain,
That our agony just fits us for the growth that we obtain,
And no matter how we suffer, or if others suffer more,
We should all be very thankful that for all 'twill soon be o'er.

Let's be thankful to each other and a brother's hand extend,
And just make the world some brighter
ere our journey here must end;
Be thankful to employers and employes
just the same,
For we know each is essential as a factor in life's game.

Let us brace up and be cheerful, for each other do our best,
And 'twill serve a higher purpose than well seasoned turkey breast.
Let us serve the God of conscience or the dictates of our soul
And be thankful all are brothers in the great Eternal Whole.

DR. T. WILKINS.

GUARDIAN ANGELS.

With us in our wanderings;
With us when we rest;
Ever waking thoughts most holy,
Purified and best.

Roaming where'er we may,
O'er the sea or land;
Ever strengthened, led and guided
By a helping hand.

Ministering angels now
Are the glorified;
Heavenly comforters are those
Whom we say have died.

Watchful care they give us now,
Tender love bestow,
Drawing nearer, nearer heaven
Helping us to go. —Selected.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

For many nights after this, Martha lay awake and looked at the mysterious light upon the wall. At last she resolved to tell Mrs. Brown and ask her opinion. With this intention she again sought her friend, but this time she found another neighbor with her, an elderly woman whom Martha had known and loved from her infancy. Martha had often heard her mother say that Mrs. Jones would be a real good woman if she was only a Christian. Elder Drake said that Mrs. Jones was a hardened sinner, but even he was forced to acknowledge that she was a pure-minded, kind-hearted woman to whom no one ever appealed for help in vain.

As Martha now entered her friend's home she saw Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Jones in earnest conversation.

They looked up and greeted her kindly, and as Martha took the chair offered her, Mrs. Brown said: "Please go on Mrs. Jones; I have talked with Martha about these things."

"I was going to say," said Mrs. Jones, in her calm, even tones, "that I was brought up by my uncle who was a deacon in the Baptist church, and a harder man I never knew. He had family prayers twice every day. He went to church and prayer-meetings regularly, and never failed to pray and exhort in the most earnest manner. In fact, he was considered one of the chief pillars of the church, but in his family he was a terror. So far as I know he never showed any mercy to man nor beast. I remember one day he knocked down his son Sam because he dared say there was no devil with horns and hoofs. I know now that it was not religion that made my uncle what he was, but it certainly was no help to him. I have known some very earnest Christians who were every way excellent people, but I have known as many more who were not Christians, who were equally good. I will not believe there is a God anywhere who will take a dishonest man into heaven because he believes a thing is so, and send an honest man to hell because he does not believe the thing is so."

There was silence for a few minutes while Mrs. Jones counted the stitches on her seam needle, and Martha sat wondering what her mother would say to her if she knew she was listening to such talk.

"As to Spiritualism," Mrs. Jones resumed again, knitting upon the blue wool sock, "I know nothing whatever about it. I have heard a good many 'they says' but I never put confidence in rumors. I have seen and heard some queer things in my life, but I have ceased trying to explain them. The Bible says plainly that the dead know not anything, and have no more reward, and yet if one can believe the accounts given in the Bible as facts, the dead do know a great deal and often return and communicate with the living. When a person tells me a certain thing is so, and a little later tells me something entirely different is so, I do not believe either statement."

Mrs. Brown smiled.

"Will you tell us some of the strange things you have seen, Mrs. Jones?"

Mrs. Jones laid her knitting across her lap, and looked thoughtfully through the white draped window onto the blue hills far away. For some minutes she sat thus, and then she turned to the expectant faces bent upon her, and said: "Yes, I will tell you something that I never told anyone but my mother—something that happened years ago when my little Mary was three years old. I went to a neighbor's to spend the afternoon, leaving Mary at home with the older girls, telling them to put her to bed at half-past six. I started back home at seven, and it was probably half an hour later that I turned into the lane leading from the main road up to our house. It had begun to be a little dusky, but I could see every object distinctly, even the pebbles in the road. As I entered the lane I looked up and there was little Mary in her night dress, coming swiftly toward me. Her yellow curls were blowing about her face, and her hands were outstretched to me. I noticed one thing odd—her bare feet did not seem to touch the ground, but I never had a thought that it was not Mary. I put out my hands to take her in my arms. 'Darling child,' I said, 'what made you come out with only your nighty on?' I almost touched her—then she was gone! Yes, as true as I sit here I put out my hands to take my little girl, and she vanished. I was so amazed I could not move for an instant, and then a terror fell upon me, and I fairly flew up to the house and burst upon the kitchen door. 'Where is Mary?' I gasped, as my eyes fell upon the two older girls. 'Why, in the bed-room, of course—you told us.' I rushed into the bed-room and there in the bed lay my child sound asleep, and all right so far as I could see. Three weeks later we laid her in her little grave." The voice of the speaker faltered. "I was, in a measure, prepared for her death; the blow did not quite crush me, but she was the idol of my heart."

The speaker turned away her face and Mrs. Brown laid a gentle hand upon her neighbor's.

"I understand," she said softly, "I, too, have wept by a little grave, but, dear Mrs. Jones, our dead are not lost; they still live; I know, for I have seen and heard my loved ones passed away."

Mrs. Jones shook her head doubtfully, and said: "I am glad if you can think so; there are times when one needs consolation. Well, I will tell you of one more strange occurrence, and then I must go home. When this I am going to tell you happened, I was a young woman and had but four of my nine children. We were living in the big house over on the hill, and Mrs. Trask lived in the house with us. She had five children older than mine. The house had just been built, and was not half finished. Mrs. Trask and I had been to a quilting and did not get home until late. Excepting the baby I carried in my arms all the children were left at home. As I said, it was late and almost dark. When we had got more than half way up the hill we saw the house suddenly illumined. We could see every timber and board—it looked as if the inside was all one sheet of flame. We both cried out and ran as fast as we could but when we reached the door the light vanished and the house appeared silent and dark. We rushed in and found the younger children abed and asleep. The older children with my husband we found in the barn yard milking. My husband laughed at us and said some embers in the fire place had suddenly blazed up. When we went back to the house we searched the fire place, but could not find so much as a spark; the ashes were cold. Suddenly Mrs. Trask spoke out: 'I know it is a warning, and it means me.' She charged her children to be very careful, for, she said something dreadful is going to happen,' and something dreadful did happen. In less than a week Mrs. Trask's only son was killed instantly by a falling tree striking him upon his head."

During this narration Uncle Ezra had come in and taken a chair where he could watch Martha without her observing the fact. As Mrs. Jones concluded her story, Mrs. Brown looked at him and said: "Such happenings as Mrs. Jones has told us about look like warnings, but I cannot understand it at all. They rarely ever seem to amount to anything more than to frighten the one who is warned, so why should the warning be given? If you can throw any light upon the subject I wish, Uncle Ezra, you would do so."

Mrs. Brown had unconsciously fallen into the habit of addressing the old man as Uncle Ezra, as everyone else called him so. It is quite probable that he would have looked surprised if any of his neighbors had addressed him in the conventional way. To him it seemed the most natural thing in the world that they should call him Uncle Ezra. He now tilted back his chair, and thrust his hands in his pockets before replying:

"Waal, I dunno as I can explain it, but I done a heap of thinkin' about it. The first time I ever heard of anything of this kind was a good spell ago when I lived down to the Corners. One of my neighbors was comin' home from his work one night, and jest as he got to the brook he saw a child's head a floatin' on the water. The moon was shinin' bright and he run down to the brook quick, now I tell ye, and when he got there he saw it was his own little girl, Betty. He saw her face white as death and her yeller curls floatin' on the water. Waal, jest as he was goin' to jump in and grab her she was gone. 'Yes sir,' he says to me, 'there was the brook runnin' along bright and shiny in the moon light, but Betty was gone. And it happened quick as a wink.' Waal, I guess by what John said that he put for home at a pretty lively jog, and when he got there he found Betty abed and asleep. Waal, the rest of the story is something I do not like to think about, but I s'pose as long as I've begun I shall have to finish it. John was kinder shiftless and never took much care of things, and it seems that he had left some kind of heavy machinery—I don't recollect what—tipped back against the side of the barn, and one day not long after he saw what he did, the young ones got to playin' around there and they knocked the thing—whatever it was—down, and it struck Betty and killed her—cut her head right off. Waal, this affair set me to thinkin', and you can see for yourself that what John saw was a warnin', and if he had set to work and tried to have found out what danger threatened Betty it is more than likely he would have noticed his carelessness and saved his girl.

"Now, my idee about the matter is this: Spirit friends are watchin' over us and when they see danger ahead they try to warn us. If they can't speak to us nor impress upon our minds what they wanter say, why they have to think up some other way, and what we call warnin's are the best they can do, and if the one who is warned, instead of bein' scairt or tryin' to explain it away, would jest try to understand what the warnin' meant he would be guided to the right thing. Now it seems that Mrs. Trask did understand that warnin', and told her children to be careful, but the boy warn't careful, for I heard the men who were choppin' with him, say that he was the most careless feller they ever saw handle an ax."

Martha did not linger this time as she went home in the gathering twilight, but walked briskly along. Once at home she went straight to her own room, and taking from a cupboard a rather dusty Bible, she laid it upon her stand with a decided "There! I'm going to read that through and know for myself what there is in it."

Faithful to her resolution for every evening before she extinguished her candle, she sat and read a few chapters and made notes upon sheets of brown paper. Years afterward she found this old Bible with its notes, some of which read as follows:

"God was first a creator, then a gardener, then a law-maker, then a butcher, then a tailor."

"God who made the sun walked in the garden in the cool of the day. Was the sun he made too hot for him?"

"God told the serpent that he must crawl upon his belly and eat dirt, the rest of his life. In the New Testament I read this serpent is the devil, so if God told the truth the devil is crawling around, eating dirt now, and yet the Bible says he goes about like a roaring lion. What strange stories!"

"Cain was a farmer and brought God some fruit, but God did not want it. He wanted the blood of innocent and helpless creatures cruelly slaughtered, and when Abel killed some and burned them, God like the smell of the burning flesh and was pleased. Then Cain got mad and killed Abel, and God put a dreadful punishment upon Cain because he followed God's example and killed something. If I get the least bit mad, Mother says God will burn me up, but God got mad lots, and I am sure people did not use him any meaner than they do me sometimes. I suppose I'm wicked, but I can't help thinking, and I do wish God was not quite so much like everybody else."

"Three men came and stood before Abraham and he killed a calf and they ate it. And one of the three calf-eaters is called Lord, and promises Sara a son. In chapter seventeen it is God who promised Sara a son, so I suppose God helped eat that calf."

Thus reading and questioning, thinking and fearing, Martha went steadily on seeking for truth and light.

Thanksgiving Humbuggery.

Some plain facts pointed out in reference to this day which maintains such prominence in the Christian world, while there are millions that have absolutely nothing to be thankful for.

The days are fast growing short and cold. Winter with its attendant joys for the rich and sorrow for the poor is settling down upon us.

Thanksgiving Day, one of its holidays, in this country, is at hand.

The president has issued a proclamation that all the people of this great free (?) land shall observe the day with appropriate thanksgiving to God for their many blessings.

Let us briefly consider the meaning of this and the causes we have for being thankful.

When the New Englanders originated this day it was prompted by a feeling of gratitude for good crops and general prosperity.

When the harvests had been gathered in, the horses, sheep, cattle and other domestic animals sheltered from the cold blasts of winter, and the family store-house filled with plenty to last through the cold season; then these honest-hearted Christians from the fullness of their hearts gave thanks, setting aside a day for such observance.

But why continue the custom when it has become a farce to the majority of the people. Why proclaim a day for rejoicing and giving of thanks when cause for gratitude no longer exists with the many?

It seems absurd to attempt to compel worshipfulness and thankfulness in the hearts of a people who feel no such emotions for lack of cause for such.

If this be not the purpose of the proclamation, then to continue it is hypocrisy to say the least of it.

Gratitude, like love cannot be forced. "No force divine can love compel" neither can national sovereignty of even a Theodore Roosevelt, compel thankfulness to spring up without cause in the hearts of the overburdened throng of sufferers that go to make up the majority of the people.

In the large cities of the North already thousands of little feet, bare or poorly shod, press the snowy pavements as they struggle through the dark to and from their ten or twelve hours' work each day. In the South it is no better except that the cold does not chill and freeze their little half-clad bodies as in the northern states.

A million and a half of these little white slaves are toiling their young lives away in factories of every description, in sweat shops and mines until these great industries have become monuments to the suffering of children.

Fifty per cent of the children of the poor die under the age of four years, and the average life of the child of the southern cotton mills is four years, and these are years of aching bodies and dwarfed minds. I wonder what possible cause these helpless, hopeless little ones can have for being thankful.

Here are two telegrams from the public press published the same day in the same city, and illustrate the contrasted conditions of the rich and poor in this Christian (?) land where all are called upon to give thanks.

New York, Dec. 4.—Mrs. Drinkwlier gave a poodle dog tea party yesterday afternoon at her palatial residence * * * It was in honor of the birthday of her favorite poodle dog. Her dog wore, for the occasion, an elegant diamond necklace costing several hundred dollars. Very ornate printed invitations were displayed to the poodles and pugs in good society.

When the hour arrived for the party the streets in the vicinity were thronged with grand equipages in which the lucky dogs rode in state, warmly wrapped in silk and satin blankets, richly embroidered in lace and gold, with a coat of arms appearing on most of them.

Each dog was accompanied by a liveried, colored attendant and all the paraphernalia of aristocratic rank. The poodles and pugs sipped milk from golden saucers.

The subject of founding a hospital for dogs was discussed.

Here is the other one of the same day.

New York, Dec. 4.—Mrs. Ella Morgan found a little girl baby in the hallway of 218 West 64th street, Tuesday night. It was wrapped in a shawl and was crying from hunger. It was taken to the matron of the police headquarters. At noon Wednesday, a woman, dressed in the garments of a widow, entered the police station. She was wet through, and leaned for support against the railing as she burst into tears and told Capt. Smith that she was the mother of the abandoned child.

She had walked the streets night and day since Sunday and had laid the infant in the hallway in the hope that some kind-hearted person would find it and at least save it from death by starvation. She would have fainted from sheer weakness had she not been supported. The captain sent out for some food and when the unfortunate woman revived she was committed to jail until she is strong enough to look for work, when she will be permitted to go out and starve herself some more.

Diamond necklaces, gold saucers, liveried servants, silk blankets, fine carriages and hospitals for dogs; and rags, starvation, police courts, policemen and jails for women and babies!

Let us pray! Instead of giving thanks.

I listened to a sermon not long since in which the minister spoke feelingly of the nearing Thanksgiving Day, saying: "It is a day on which the poor especially should be glad as they rest on that day and can spend their time in giving thanks to God for His wondrous love and many blessings."

The most of that congregation were women and I thought of the millions of their toiling sisters working for starvation wages, wages which force more than three hundred thousand to live by the sale of their womanhood, wages which drive thirty thousand to suicide annually, and many to death by starvation.

He spoke also, of charity work, urging the church to make this an occasion for helping the foreign missions. In closing he said: "This is a glorious Christian land, and it does well to observe a day of thanksgiving, and we should not forget that it is required of us to give unto the Lord as well as thank Him for His gifts to us."

And in my mind arose a picture of Christian societies gathering together garments to send to the poor abroad, that had been made by half-starved women in factories under the very shadow of their church, and under the protecting wing of their boasted Christian land. And I saw again a vision of the poor girls of whom Wenonah Stevens Abbott speaks in an article in the current issue of "The Vanguard." She says: "I have known (not heard, but known) eight girls to rent a room together, live through a cold winter without any fire, with no method of cooking except an oil stove, sleep on the floor because they could not buy furniture, go to bed week in and week out without undressing because they had not sufficient bedding to keep them warm, and live nearly three months at a time on corn meal mush without milk, molasses or anything to make it palatable. All this that they might retain the one thing left to them—honor.

"These young girls were all gently bred and well educated and worked six days every week from seven in the morning till six at night, with a half-hour nooning."

What blessings! O land of Christian love and liberty! What cause for gratitude have all thy children!

Of the seventy millions in this nation the vast majority belong to the army of wage slaves. One fifth being women, and more than a million children. Now how anyone can have the heart to ask them to be thankful for their bitter lot is more than I can understand.

The fat turkeys that strut about the barn-yard awaiting their coming doom mean nothing to the multitudes except a reminder of their poverty.

Judging by the present economic and industrial conditions of this country one would think that God had forgotten His poor, or was busy providing diamonds and dogs, gold and glitter for the rich, and that He is probably too much engaged to heed the thanks of the poor since He does not hear their prayers.

I believe in but one religion and that is the one best calculated to make for mankind a heaven here on earth, by equalizing the wealth thereof, and giving to all an equal opportunity for happiness.

My God is the eternal law of Love and Justice which will eventually break every chain and liberate every man, woman and child.

BIBLE SPIRITUALISM.

"Let Us Make Man in Our Own Image."

An inspiration seems to seize me at this time, and I yield to its influence. Having traveled in the lecture field a great deal, and having many church people come to hear me, it is quite often the case I hear them say, "If I could only get Spiritualism in the Bible I could accept it all right."

With this cry I seem to catch something of the inspiration that moves my pen on this occasion, and I now emphasize this proposition to one and all—"Show me the beginning of spirit, and I will show you the end thereof."

Then if there is no beginning of spirit, or spirits, it is not improbable that those spirits were without life or language, so it is no great stretch of imagination to take up the language of the Bible and almost hear the spirits who were the first to come upon this earth plane of physical existence saying, "Let us make man in our own image."

Nor think it strange when I say, to one and all, I have found no place in that book or any other where it says, let us cease making man in our own image.

I am not asking anyone to believe or disbelieve the Bible story of the creation, but there surely is nothing strange that the first spirits to live in animated physical bodies should say to each other, "Let us make man in our own image," nor is it strange that man is yet being made in his own image, just as it was said of the first man and woman, if the Bible should be true.

Countless millions of people created in their own image have lived out their identity on this earth, and still exist in close touch with it in their individuality, each one having as far as possibilities permitted rounded out their forms to the image of their spirit, just as you, myself and all others created in our own image, kicked, struggled, and by other means in our power, rounded our bodies to size and form of our own image.

I am here, five feet, six inches in height, weighing about one hundred and sixty pounds, while you have filled out your form to suit the dimensions your spirit required, and this fact, Bible or no Bible, applies to every man, woman and child in the world. We every one of us are in our own image. If this were not so, I would have been either taller or shorter, lighter or heavier than I now am, and in consequence not in my own image. While there is left a spirit that has never yet manifested in the flesh the creation in their own image will go on.

Should the time ever come when there is no spirit to which those words would apply, then, and then only, would cease the creation of man in our own image.

Is there anything strange in those words when inspiration furnishes the key to unlock the hidden meaning therein? Surely I do not find it so at least. This world, grand, good glorious, is full of strange situations until Spiritualism finds the key by some phase of mediumship, and I can safely declare that Spiritualism and mediumship have opened the way to all the truths regarding the past and future so far as spirit is concerned. If my inspiration is wrong concerning those words, or if there be those who think me wrong, I ask that person to point me to one, only one individual that is, or was not in his own image, for I must say that I have never met one that was not in his own image. I will not say that it is true that such language was used by the first spirit to live on earth in the body, neither will I deny the truth of the statement, yet all who ever read the first chapter of Genesis, know the words are there. I don't know who wrote those words, or whether the writer had them from others, or received them by inspiration, and it may be, he or she wrote wiser than they knew, but when you meet Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Catholic or other denominations who believe the Bible to be infallible, the word of God so to speak, I find it is a pretty good club to fight them with, provided you can get the right inspiration with it. I need it, simply for those who want Spiritualism provided they can find it in the Bible.

LIFE'S BETTER INFLUENCE.

Better the song and the smile, my dear,
Better the song and the smile,
Brief is the time we may linger here,
Little avails either sigh or tear;
Better the song and the smile, my dear,
Better the song and the smile.

Better the laugh and the jest, my dear,
Better the laugh and the jest.
Sunshine of heart and of merry cheer,
Chasing the shadows that oft appear;
Better the laugh and the jest, my dear,
Better the laugh and the jest.

Better the word that is kind, my dear,
Better the word that is kind.
Speech that is cold and perchance severe
Well may be spared as we journey here;
Better the word that is kind, my dear,
Better the word that is kind.

Life's but a day at best, my dear,
Life's but a day at best,
Be your endeavor to brighten each year,
Making less frequent the sigh and the tear;
Life's but a day at best, my dear,
Life's but a day at best,
—Exchange.

The Paucity and Injustice of Traditionary Evidences---The Spiritual Phenomena of the Present Time Compared with that of the Medieval Ages.

From evidences gleaned directly from the fields of rostrum work, the conclusion is unavoidable, that it is not a question of whether Spiritualism is being considered from a religio-theological or a fraterno-scientific standpoint; but it is a question, and a serious one, as to whether Spiritualism or Spiritism or Psychism if you please, is in any approximate future, going to be considered analyzed, organized and taught as a scientifically demonstrable phenomena of natural law.

At present, or in the immediate past of its modern existence (which is practically the limits of its existence), its apostles or expounders on the scientific side could be enumerated by the fingers on one hand, and with several digits to spare. I refer to rostrum workers, belonging to, and laboring for, the national and state religious organizations.

Theology as a mental force is composed of disconnected ideas, subjective, intuitive, disassociated with the great universe of the objective world, and hence fallacious when universally considered; and while competent to diffuse erratic ideas from man to man, is in no wise competent to generate from the basic objectives, a continuous system of organic ideas, giving birth to teachable and transferable knowledge on these occult subjects.

It has fallen to my lot, of late, to listen to nearly a dozen theological sermons (not Spiritualistic lectures), by nearly as many reverend ministerial pastors, preaching in the cause of religio-biblical Spiritualism, before an audence called together as Spiritualists, and presumably for the purpose of listening to intelligent discourses on intellectual facts and predicates, associated with, and radiating from, the great central scientific fact, inter-comprehensible communications between embodied and disembodied human consciousnesses.

The writer, with thousands of others, has sat mum as a "dead Indian," and played the heathen for these Spiritualist apostles to missionary; indirectly, if not directly inspired by their Infinite Intelligence, until even the soul's hopes and the psychic's ambitions are on the verge of a final mutiny. In fact we have been missionaried out of all patience; veritable heterodoxical stool-pigeons, utilized to call the orthodoxical side of the fence to their sweet feast of religious inspirations.

Hence to both the front-seated Theist and the back-seated Atheist, is meted out from the same dish, with the assumption that it is equally good for and desired by both; mountains of the ideal, and mole-hills of the real. Maximum doses of the centuries-chewed morsels, the) "common stock" literary repetitions that at best were but illy designed for the educational utility, even of those ancient, illiterate, nomadic tribes, wandering in constant warfare or settled in plague-breeding indolence among the hills and valleys, and athwart the plains of Asia Minor, in a traditionary past of which we read much and know nothing; and minimum doses of the things that are now, and are known; of the knowledge that knows, and is known.

Let me ask of you, dear pastors, and reverends and missionaries, when dealing out to your corralled audiences, this crude and bungling mass of religious laws and codes, why not also bring their crude implements of warfare and husbandry? If enlightened man must return to the nomadic Hebrew for systems of ethics, why not also return for domestic and commercial customs, and plow by the use of cows yoked to a sharpened stick, reduce our dwellings to skin tents and rock caves, and transport our merchandise on ox-carts and camels' backs; even burn our prophets and witches.

It is true that the average Spiritualistic reverend does not make use of, or perhaps even endorse all the great mass of illiterate literature found between the lids of the modern Bible; but that which he does use, must accept the fate of poor Tray who was found in bad (very bad) company.

In fact there has been gleaned from it but very few excerpts; only three or four of common use for the purpose of PROVING THAT MODERN SPIRITUALISM IS TRUE. One is the circumstance of the Woman of Endor; another is the vision of Belshazzar, and another, perhaps, is the materialization of the newly-departed spirit of Christ; and a spiritual sermon, by a Spiritualistic reverend in a Spiritualist pulpit, introduced by a spiritual prayer, closed by a spiritual doxology, that has not for its argumentative nucleus, one of these old and threadbare fossils of traditionary literature, to prove and establish the reliability of modern spirit phenomena, and bolster up all modern demonstrations, from that of Hydesville to the last occurrence, would be a radical and audacious departure from the habituated course that has been adopted by the typical missionary and preacher of modern Spiritualism. In the meantime, while serving the hypothetical sauce to those only for whom it can be of use, those thoroughly impregnated with piety and intense religious impulses, what is being given to those of sufficient mental stamina and intellectual development to have warded off and ignored the quasi-historical traditions of the illiterate nomad, and stand ready to accept any reliable, and modern demonstration either of physical phenomena, intro-spirit philosophy or any phase of intellectual reasonings; who are open to the inspirations of psychologic facts, rather than of theologic fiction.

And again, is it not a veritable acknowledgment of a weakness in the testimonials furnished by this modern occult uprising, to ignore the publications of such authors and authorities as Davis, Wilson, Owen, Home, Denton and many others, supported by a grand army of beautiful and truth-embellished phenomena, so vast in its magnitude and lustrous in its spirituality that all traditionary evidences, ancient or mediaeval are efficiently eclipsed by its brightness, and substitute the beforementioned paucious and insignificant grist of traditionary and questionable Hebrew narratives.

One Spiritualist clergyman publishes the declaration that he will not deliver sermons except they be prefaced by prayer; a lady reverend declares from the platform, that no person can be a true Spiritualist unless he believes in the Bible; she also demonstrated in the course of a few weeks, how to make two societies where before there was but one, and that, too, without increasing the membership.

And again we read of the dedication of a new church (house of worship), the opening hymn at which services being the old orthodox hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Perhaps those directly responsible for the selection can explain why it is that in all the great variety of Spiritualistic hymns and songs consisting of many volumes, from Spiritualistic composers and writers, there could not have been at least one fit and appropriate to be rendered on even so sacred an occasion as the above. This was followed by an invocation (prayer) though we are not enlightened as to whom addressed. In the address the society was also considered as "the church"; so it seems that the flesh and blood church was dedicating the brick church.

The morning services were concluded with a doxology (a form of glorification or praise, said or sung at close of divine services).

Then a sweet little six-months-old babe was christened, received into the christen church by being baptised in a consecrated church; the former of flesh and blood, the latter brick, wood or stone. We are wondering if in the above circumstance the brick church was really consecrated, and if so, if the consecrators were themselves consecrated. A foolish question, I dare say, but with me it was ever thus. And then we go on wondering whether if the little helpless subject (victim) should succeed exceptionaly well in after life, if it will be on account of the wonderful ceremony, or in spite of it.

And again why is it that about one thousand such little grown-up subjects are wearing away their few precious days in the Ohio penitentiary, as many more proportionately are in other such institutions of the country, with ten times as many at large who should be there?

The two terms, "saving grace," and "damning curse" seem to come to me inextricably mingled. This reversion of religious customs and ceremonies seems to be unique in the Spiritualistic ranks, for while most of our old-line churches have been creeping mollusk-like in the direction and pace of a snail, yet this new infant is undoubtedly creeping crustacean-like in the pace and direction of a crawfish.

We also read to-day of a lady pastor looking for vineyards in which to labor, who is recommended as a Bible Spiritualist; and no doubt having forgotten or ignored the tenets of modern Spiritism, or the ism of the spirits, from the initiatory at Hydesville to the last psychic voicing of the last night's trumpet tone; placidly glides up and down civilization's blooming land, nurturing and brooding with matronly care that most baudy agglomeration of combined materialistic, demonistic, spiritualistic; witch-burning, woman-debauching, God-creating, prophet-killing, infant-damning, blood-drinking, God-crucifying, first-born-slaying, calf-worshiping, hell-firing, plague-breeding, famine-causing, water-poisoning, blind-stricken, flood-raising, maiden-stealing, flesh-burning, sex-mutilating, alien-drowning, tongue-confounding, wealth-creating, horse-thieving, calf-spotting, whale-swallowing, wine-drinking, pregnation-stabbing, idolater-slaying, jewel-pilfering, home-destroying, sun-stopping, bull and ram-roasting, rib-stealing, soul-cursing, murder-endorsing literary relic of an authenticated record of primitive homo's terrible struggle in the octoplan tentacles of a religious fanaticism—a career of war and murder, of rapine and plunder—a red-handed struggle between demons, and devils, deities and death.

And all this is to be carried into the homes of noble men, pure women and guileless children; and handed out to the congregated gleaners looking for things that are born of friendship, and charity and love, as inspirational emanations from the empirical throne of an Infinite Intelligence, in a sad and retrogressive exchange for the natural expirations of sublimated intelligences from the psychic courts of heaven!

O, listen, ye shades of the mortal dead. Shall the senile form of an expiring theology be revivified into a new potency, and sent again stalking broad-tread over our priest-ridden land, and that, too, by those who have most profited by its downfalling, and were thereby allowed to come to infantile proportions only by the deserved weakness of this ghost of christo-pagan theology, now the subject of their resurrectionary efforts.

Hearken! ye hallowed correspondents, through the parting clouds of a familiar borderland! Shall the calm, deep and pure ocean of modern phenomena, kissing the shores from life to life; bearing across its bosom wise and pure lessons of intro-psychic life, be ignored if not abandoned, and there be substituted and utilized in its stead, the dark, shallow, stagnant and festering pool of paganism's traditionary babblings?

Shall we accept into our home literature all these moral abominations, inadvertently allowing them to be instilled into the ethics-guided intellects of our offspring, barely for the sake of any good that might happen from a continual repetition of a short dozen quotations of doubtful truth from among their immense and discordant proportions; or shall we accept it because of pecuniary considerations, and with mercenary motives? One of the most inconsistent demands asked at the hands of the public, by the church and clergy of the country, as judged by "worldly people," was the demand of the non-taxation of church property and special favoritism in the way of half-fare to the clergy; and heretofore Spiritualists have been among the loudest in their cry against this favoritism. But already the Spiritualistic organizations of this country have dipped their eager fingers in this church-uncovered public "flesh-pot." They, too, are buying special privileges at the sad expense of both courage and integrity. To them "The Ides of March" seems to have come, and they might be pictured as grinning like apes, fawning like hounds, bowing like bondmen kissing Caesar's feet, whilst damned Cascas, like curs behind, strike Caesar in the neck. As in the great Roman conspiracy, so now is the Great Caesar of Modern Spiritualism being slashed by its friends? and also like them, "not that they love Caesar less but that they love Rome more"?

Byron has given us a dream that was not all a dream; so they are giving us a Spiritualism that is not all a Spiritualism.

After an endeavor, through the space of half a century, to impress upon the world, our high standard of ethics and morality, shall we now un-Brutus-like, Contaminate our fingers with base bribes, and sell the mighty space of our large honors for so much trash as may be grasped thus?

And finally, shall the brave gunners of Atheism, who have alone and effectually battered down the theocratic bulwarks of deism's organized and uncomputable hordes; and also the principles of mental liberty for which they fought, through long centuries of death and dungeon-served compensations, now be sacrificed at the foot of the throne of mammon, or before the threshold of a false ambition?

Shall those who have heretofore sacrificed freely at the altar of mental freedom, fortune, liberty and life, now exchange its dearly-bought benefits for an unsavory dish of creedal pottage?

The precious souls of those who fought and have passed, and returned, cry aloud against it; the intellectual welfare and liberty of those yet to come demands its forbidding.

Away with this gaudy and gauzy pomp of Theocratic Egoism.

Pure Spiritualism comes from pure love. Pure love comes without ceremony.

"Does it Strike You that there is very much Love Displayed in the Cyclone's Deadly Whirl when looked upon as a manifestation of the Power of God, and Outside of the Power of Man to Avert?"

OUR PRESENT LIFE.

A Paper Read Before the First Spiritual Society of Manhattan, Kansas.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:—To live is our duty, how to live long should be our duty, and to never die our aim.

The most important thing in physical life is to live, the next in importance is how to be happy. Those who can accomplish these have accomplished the objects of physical life. Physical life is a course in, or a branch of our education or development, and is of vast importance in our future advancement. The science of human life opens up the greatest field for research of any of the known sciences, and the one least explored. In this field will yet be discovered some of the most startling truths that have ever yet been revealed to the understanding of man, truths which will revolutionize most of the theories, practices, and beliefs of the past, and make foolishness of some of the pretended wisdom of the present day. Every effort should be put forth by the brightest minds of the age, assisted by the government, and encouraged by the people, to penetrate the darkness which now surrounds this science.

If there is one thing the great mass of people want more than another, that thing is a continuation of their physical life in their present bodies. Unquestionably this world is the very best place in the universe for us, and the physical the most desirable condition in our present state of development.

It is evident that man in the physical body on this earth occupies the best place in the universe for him.

This being the case, it is his moral duty as well as subserving his best interests to retain his present physical body for the longest possible time that his knowledge of the laws that prolong life will allow him. As we learn these laws and obey them our physical life will be extended, and when we fully understand these laws I believe we can retain our physical bodies as long as they are of any use to us, or as long as we shall desire them, and when on account of our advanced condition we no longer need, or desire to retain them, we will be able to throw them off gradually without any sudden collapse of the whole physical organism, as we now throw off the dead and useless tissues of our bodies without pain or inconvenience.

In substantiation of the theory that man will be able to retain his present physical body indefinitely when he understands the laws that govern them, I would refer you to the kindness displayed toward man in the enactment of all the understood laws of nature. If nature's laws as far as understood would indicate that the power which enacted them was friendly to man, and that their enactment was intended to promote man's best interest and corresponding happiness, it is reasonable to conclude that all her laws will show the same kind regard for his welfare when we understand them.

This must be the case unless the creator is the enemy of mankind, which I do not think any one believes. Having established the fact that the overruling power of our being is good, and that he has enacted no law that does not redound to our best interest, what are you going to do with the law of physical death?

There is no desire implanted in the human mind so strong as the one for physical life, and there is nothing that befalls man that he looks upon with so much dread as physical death. Now I would ask you, is it possible that a power having only the good, the development, and happiness of man in view, could have placed that strongest of all desires (that for physical life) in man, and then left him under the power of death with no hope or way of escape? Giving him to understand by every principle and law of nature that to retain possession of the physical body was essential for his rapid development and happiness, and then allowing death to deprive him of the use of that body before he has received but little if any benefit from his possession of it, wringing the hearts of his friends and blighting his prospects of rapid development, and the corresponding happiness resulting therefrom, shutting the door to physical life against him after luring him in that direction, and then offering him no reward for the sacrifice he has been compelled to make.

Would such a condition of things indicate love of a creator for the created? Would such a state of things tend to strengthen the respect of the governed for the governor? Is it possible that such a decree could be the outgrowth of love? There can be but one answer to these questions, and that is no. If such a state of things were true they would indicate that man had been abandoned by his creator and left in the hands of the devil, with God's impenetrable wrath rolling between him and that which he most desired. I am happy in the belief that we are not left in any such a deplorable condition, but that every honest desire that would add to our happiness may be attained.

The very fact that the thoughts of physical death are not pleasing to us, is in my mind proof that the control over death is placed in our hands. Death will continue to be the thing most feared and dreaded by man until he shall have conquered it and made it subservient to his will. The Bible says that the time will come when man will be able to say, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?

The Christian church has construed this to mean some time after death. To thus construe it would make it sound like the babbling of the foolish, for then death will have had its full sting and the grave its complete victory. The things unchangeably fixed by God pleases man, and any change in them could not possibly work any good to him.

Those things in nature which do not work to please man are not fixed, they can be changed by man so they will become pleasing to him.

The laws governing the elements which do not work entirely in our interest, are laws which it is desirable for us to understand while in the physical condition. A relief from further annoyance from a seemingly rebellious element is our reward for learning to control it.

Necessity is the great motive power of human progress.

We do not care to control those things which continually work in our interest, and we are not apt to study the law of their control as there is no necessity for it. Nature makes dangerous to our lives, our property and our happiness, those elements she desires, and our best interests require that we study looking to their control and use.

In substantiation of the wisdom, justice, and love, displayed by the creator in his dealings with man, I claim for man the power to regulate the seemingly rebellious elements of nature, or those that do not work for his best interest.

Would there be any wisdom, justice, or love displayed in the cloudburst that destroys the lives of hundreds of men, women and children, annihilating millions of dollars worth of property, and leaving homeless and destitute thousands of people in this country every year, if they were the direct result of an unchangeable law of God? Do you really think it is an indication of fatherly love to burn up a whole country with hot winds, and dry weather, while another is being drowned with too much rain, and no means provided whereby the inhabitants of these stricken districts could have possibly protected themselves against these seemingly outrages of nature. Does it strike you that there is very much love displayed in the cyclone's deadly whirl when looked upon as a manifestation of the power of God and outside the power of man to avert?

Does it look as though it was through loving kindness that the way was prepared whereby children could be torn from their parents and parents from their children by death, and the power to avert it placed just outside their reach?

And last but not least, was sickness sent into the world as a token of friendship by one who could have sent good health at the same price, and the means to prevent it withheld from those he loved?

Can you look upon a cancer eating out the young life of a dear friend, while you believe there is no help for it placed within their reach, and can see no good resulting from it and then say in candor: I honestly believe that the tender love and mercy of the creator for the creatures he has created far exceeds that of a human parent for his child? If I believed all these calamities were sent upon us by the ruler of the universe, and the only power that could avert them was in the hands of that ruler, I would be compelled to believe that the whole arrangement had been turned over to the devil, just before the law was enacted. I do not believe such stuff, but I do believe, and that belief when analyzed amounts to a positive certainty, that there is not an element or law in nature that was not intended to work for man's ultimate happiness, and not one which is not leading him the shortest way to that goal. To believe that drouths, floods, cyclones, sickness, and death, are the direct result of natural unbroken law, and unavoidable, is in harmony with the doctrine of infinite punishment for finite sin.

To believe that God has sent all these calamities upon us and has given us no means of escape, to my mind would be equivalent to believing him man's greatest enemy, for what more could an enemy do than to purposely tie our hands and then dump those calamities upon us, with no thought of resulting good. We ought not to believe such things, it is moral degradation to harbor such thoughts. On the other hand it is inspiring, elevating, and pleasing to believe that those things which do not please an honest man can be changed by him. Such a belief is the only one that would attribute love and justice to the creator.

Man will some day learn to control the rainfall, thereby preventing drouths and floods. He will tame and make harmless the cyclone and tornado, and convert their powers to his use. In the ages to come when man has learned more of the laws of physical life, sickness will be found only among the ignorant, and death will not be feared by the wise. The possibilities of the human mind always were and always will be beyond man's comprehension, man has been given complete control over every element in nature that annoys him. Only those things in nature which work continually for the best interest of man are unchangeable, all others can be changed by him and made to work in his interest. We should not doubt man's future power, but push on to that higher and happier condition which is just ahead of us. We should always keep in mind the fact that man has been given the power to subdue and put under his feet all his enemies. For this reason, if we wield the power which has been given us, by right action, and proper thought, we have nothing to fear. "The wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous fear not." I believe the longest strides made by science in the next hundred years will be along the line of the extension of human life. When man shall have arrived at that condition on the physical plane where he can truthfully say, "O death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory?" then man will have risen to the dignity of his position. God's goodness will then be made manifest, and some of man's greater possibilities will then no longer be doubted.

It is to be hoped that we shall never be found by the wayside among the musty theories of the past ages; rather let us keep to the front by getting on the band wagon of human progress, for we must either get on, get out of the way, or get run over.

MORE OF THEM.

Nuts for Professor Jamieson to Crack.

To the Editor:—Several years ago, one of my personal friends, David Newton, of Hopeville, Iowa, a druggist and dealer in general merchandise, a member of the Christian church, was in Keokuk, Iowa, laying in a stock of goods. He had been there two or three days, stopping with his sister. One night he retired to bed as usual. In the night he heard distinctly his little child saying, "Oh, I wish papa would come—I wish papa would come." Mr. Newton said in response to that cry he stood by the cradle of his child; it had croup. It had been subject to that trouble. He distinctly saw the child, its mother, the hired girl. He heard his wife give directions to summon a physician. He saw the doctor come; he saw the remedies applied to the child; he knew the medicine given was not what should be administered; he told his wife to go into the drug store in the front part of the building, and take from a certain shelf a certain croup remedy. She heeded him not; he went himself for the medicine; he reached for it but could not grasp it; returning to the cradle he saw his darling strangle to death. He awakened; he was sitting up in bed and was cold and stiff. He noticed the time; it was one o'clock a. m. He dressed himself, went down to the barn, fed his horses and prepared to start for home in the morning.

About daylight his sister arose and said, "David, what is the matter that you are up so early?" He replied: "My baby died at 1 o'clock this morning, and I am going home as soon as I can."

There were no telegraph wires in Iowa then, and his sister thought he must be insane. He went home and found the baby passed away at the time he had said and that everything he had seen in his vision had occurred.

Several years ago I knew Mrs. Sorcerel, of Osceola, Iowa. She was a Methodist and an upright, truthful woman. She told me this story:

"When I resided in the Isle of Man, my husband went to sea as a common sailor. He had been absent many weeks. One night I was suddenly awakened. My husband stood at my bedside. He kissed me and then said, 'I have fallen overboard and was drowned on the coast of China.' Then he gave me some directions as to business affairs, and some advice as to the education and training of our child and then faded away.

"There were no ocean cables then. Several months elapsed before the ship he went on returned. When it did return I learned that my husband, in a severe storm, was swept overboard on the very night that I had the vision."

These two stories come from truthful, conscientious, upright persons, both members of churches. How will Prof. W. F. Jamieson explain them?

A Higher Standard Needed.

In The Progressive Thinker of Nov. 7, over the signature of A. H. Nicholas, I find this said of the ideas advanced by J. J. Morse, of England, one of our grandest thinkers and speakers. "He spoke of what he calls 'higher Spiritualism,' and the 'higher aspects' of it, and he gets it so high it is out of the reach of ordinary mortals. He would divide our people into distinct classes, and resolve Spiritualism into 'phenomenal, philosophical and mystical.' Mr. Morse says: 'The outcome of the movement, if it is to survive, must be a science that is spiritual, a morality that is rational, and a religion that finds God in man.'"

I don't see anything to find fault with in the thoughts advanced by Brother Morse; on the other hand they are grand, uplifting and spirit strengthening. What better standard can we ask for? Abide by these and lift up those that are not on that plane, no need to "divide our people," as he fears, but raise them up to a higher and better standing. We are to look for the God (good) in our fellow travelers and encourage it to grow and develop.

There seems to be a division forming in the ranks of Spiritualism, unconsciously to most of us, but it is coming all the same. Either there must be a lifting up of those who are inclined to work for the mundane more than for the spiritual, for self-aggrandisement more than for the good of the whole. The better elements are naturally breaking away unconsciously perhaps. It seems to me the signs are as plain as the sunlight, and we think that Brother Morse's remarks are just what is needed at this time.

Another article in the same paper by Dr. Dickey, touches the key-note of the lives we should live in order to make the beautiful cause we represent grow in spirituality and be uplifting to all within our ranks, instead of a hiss and a by-word. Outsiders do not hinder the progress of our grand movement, so much as those within our ranks who pose as speakers and mediums and go astray in many ways, and all lookers-on can see and disapprove.

HOW I GREW TALL

A Startling Story Which Will Interest All Who Are Short.

The Height of Either Sex Can Quickly Be Increased From Two to Five Inches. These Marvelous Results Can Be Accomplished at Home Without the Knowledge of Your Most Intimate Friends.

The Free Book Tells You All About It.

MR. K. LEO MINGES.

Inventors, Scientists and physicians have for years been trying to find some method whereby the height of an individual could be increased and up to the last few years have met with failure. It remained for a comparatively young man, Mr. K. Leo Minges by name, to discover what so many others had failed to do.

Mr. Minges resides in Rochester, N. Y., and has devoted the best part of his life in studying and experimenting on the Cartilage, and his great efforts have at last been crowned with success. A large company, composed of Rochester's leading citizens, has been formed for the purpose of placing Mr. Minges' discovery and inventions before the public, so that now it is possible for any lady or gentleman who is short to increase her or his height from two to five inches. These results are absolutely guaranteed.

Mr. Minges has successfully used his method on himself, and has grown from a short, stunted boy to a handsome, robust man of six feet one inch in height. Thousands of people living in all parts of the world are using his method with equally as startling results. Let us send you the absolute proof of the above statements. We have just issued a beautiful illustrated book entitled "The Secrets of How to Grow Tall" which contains information that will surprise you. Ten thousand of these remarkable books will be given away free of charge in order to introduce them. If you fail to receive a copy you will always regret it. This great book tells how Mr. Minges made his wonderful discovery. It tells you how you can increase your height and build up the entire system. It contains the pictures and statements of many who have used this method. After you receive the book you will thank us the longest day you live for having placed within your reach this great opportunity.

Remember, a postal card will bring it to your very door, all charges prepaid. All correspondence strictly confidential and sent in plain envelopes. If you wish a free copy of this book and the proof of our claims, write today. Address THE CARTILAGE CO., Dept. 2426, Rochester, N. Y. 237

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These ten books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $3.10, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these ten premium books is about ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.10, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—a bargain the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS!

ECHOES OF THE SYMPOSIUM

LYMAN C. HOWE. MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

The Great Psychological Crime

A Comparison of Views and the Reasons Therefor.

Lyman C. Howe, the veteran Spiritualist Lecturer and Medium, a man well and favorably known as one of the foremost thinkers and writers in our ranks, will Champion the Cause of Truth as reflected in Spiritualism, while Mrs Florence Huntley, the well-known Author and Journalist, will defend all the statements in The Great Psychological Crime, which Mr. Howe will dare to assail, making a series of articles instructive, suggestive and inspiring, and which every Spiritualist should most carefully read.

Mrs. Florence Huntley, Chicago, Ill.:

Dear Madam:—Your interesting and very amiable letter of Oct. 25 is decidedly suggestive, and I may be in the incipient stage of hypnosis, induced by the gentle persuasions of your facile pen, and generous habit of thought within which is the subtle impress of a woman's will, more effective, I suspect, in promoting the mystic haze that veils the normal processes of my thought than any that a professional hypnotist could induce. The more delicate and remote the influence that appeals to the unsuspecting consciousness of a subject in the early stages of illusion, the more certain and far-reaching are the results likely to follow.

On page 181 of The Great Psychological Crime I read: "To the degree a medium is under control of spiritual intelligences, to precisely that degree he is unconscious of that control. As our author, incog, affirms that mediumship and hypnotism are identical, of course the same rule applies to a subject slowly, progressively, gliding down the inclined plane of hypnotic devolution, towards the abyss of annihilation. As it is also affirmed that a subject may be successfully hypnotized without his consent or knowledge, how can I, or anyone, know that I am not acting under the subtle influence, and secret dictation of another's will, in writing this letter? And as much of our mental action is above, or below, the analytical processes of active normal consciousness, how do you know that you are not, in these writings, exerting a direct purpose of your will to carry conviction to my rebellious reason and lead, or impel, my thinking processes into new and possibly dangerous by-ways, into which you, too, may have been led by the same secret processes? As you express more apprehension of my good nature than of the results of my criticism, you virtually acknowledge the influence of the same secret power acting upon your own convictions. But I assure you that I have no intention to mislead you by any subtle art, or secret exercise of my will, to overrule your own judgment, as based upon experience and observation.

You express a desire to avoid, as far as possible in this discussion, all tendency to "lapsing into the purely metaphysical, or the purely speculative." In as far as the subject matter of the book is clear of these tendencies, I think we can escape them; but it seems to me important to carefully and critically analyze the various propositions upon which the author contructs his theories before we advance to the discussion of the striking statements which give the book so much importance as a revolutionary production. In these analyses there may be lines of thought that will partake of the metaphysical. I am glad to know that you come to this task fully prepared to endorse the author and his work, as one with your own experience and careful study of the life and thought of the author. You, therefore, are, it seems to me, in all respects an authorized substitute, responsible for the book as really as if you were the original author. I can say, too, without reservation, I believe in your sincerity, and high moral qualities, as well as in your superior intellectual fitness for the work in hand. I may lack the latter, but I can, without egotism, claim the sincerity so essential to all efforts in search of truth. In my initial letter I did not refer to the "widespread prejudice in the human mind" as any essential part of this discussion; but as a prelude to what might follow, and a hint at the cause of the inability to accept new thought and new premises, which might bar out much that is regarded valuable in the book we are discussing. Possibly I may incline to "include too many things, under the word "prejudice," to meet your approval. But I think there is a far-reaching influence exerted by "prejudging" which is not generally realized, which may act against the acceptance of a valid truth, or give extra force to an assertion, and color the reasoning of the advocate or the recipient, to a degree that neither can realize, or even believe possible. Sincere and thoroughly conscientious men, endowed with superior intellects and blessed with great learning, have accepted, without a question, and defended with great effort, and profound logic, certain dogmas that inheritance and education had impressed upon their minds so deeply as to paralyze the moral sensibilities, and harden to a condition of savage cruelty, the most tender benevolence and sweetest human sympathies. Jonathan Edwards was as good as he was great. He had tender compassion for human sorrow. But, under the prejudging of his creed, and the authority of an assumed divine revelation, he could believe that a just God had created helpless millions as sensitive as himself, and ordained them to everlasting perdition ages before they were born. He could believe, and think it just, and rational, that the saints in heaven would rejoice and be exceedingly glad to look over the battlements and witness the torture of the damned, even though their own parents or children were among them; and that this view intensified their happiness in heaven! Thousands of illustrations might be presented to show how impossible it is for the human mind, eclipsed by strong prejudice, to see clearly or reason independently. But I concede that "there might be danger of confusing many or all of our rational and logical deductions, as mere prejudices," if we assume that prejudice is all, or that every phase of our thinking is dominated by it. But we should not forget the liability, and tendency, or cease to allow for it and guard all our rearings, as far as we may, from the error to which unperceived, or unrealized prejudice may lead us.

You express the conviction that there is nothing in the book that would necessarily involve comparisons of your and my own individual opinions, nor an elaborate treatment of the doctrine of Free will or universal irresponsibility." It seems to me that the repeated emphasis on "independent free choice," and the free and independent exercise of all our faculties, and the claim that hypnotism destroys this, and renders the subject irresponsible, makes it important to consider the degree—if any—of free will, and independent action, that actually exists in any given case. Conceding that I, at this moment, represent the sum of my "part of life, with its peculiar training and environment, with its individual activities, experences, acquirements, ideas, impressions, beliefs and prejudices," you seem to regard that as no reason for connecting these agencies, in a causative chain that cannot drop a link anywhere in the evolutionary processes, or leave any factor to the rule of chance. That my "daily life, with its immediate mental activities and moral standards" is, so far as voluntary action is concerned, under the direction of my own will, reason and conscience," is not questioned here. But is my will independent? My reason and conscience cooperate in dictating to, and directing my choice. But are they not, also, subject to the influence of causes which may be traced to antecedents, circumstances, temperament, structure, and many other agencies, each one of which is, within its special sphere, absolute and arbitrary authority in compelling obedience to its rulings? A magnet holds a bar of steel with the grip of fate, so long as there are no other agents active against the union. Gravitation holds a dewdrop on the lips of a rose with the same precision that it binds worlds and constellations in there spheres, and keeps them in their orbits. A zephyr may shake the dew from the rose, or a foreign intruder might disrupt the order of our "Solar system." In either case the authority of causation would be unchanged, and neither dew nor planet would be for an instant free or independent. To suppose an independent action is to suppose that causation does not reign supreme in the order of nature. If you can choose without a desire, or motive, behind your choice, you must be outside the order of causation, and your action is at the mercy of blind chance.

The light and heat from the sun come through some 90,000,000 miles of space. To think of them nestling in the solar disc, and planning a journey through the ether to the earth, to awaken the "liquid music" that slumbers in a crystal mountain, or a frost that sparkles in the valley, does not impress the mind with any fear of fate, or anything arbitrary awaiting the earth. But when these twin travelers arrive at the surface of our planet, nothing can resist their influence. We may modify the conditions that welcome their advent, and by stored cold regulate the temperature of our rooms, but not one ray of heat fails to impress itself and no chance can hinder it. But these are physical agents. Does the same arbitrary rule of causation apply to every manifestation of mind? I think it does. Not a thought, feeling, desire is exempt. This, I am aware, is not in accord with your idea that "It does not matter what facts or opinions have influenced our character building; these influences in no wise prevent the free and independent decisions of a sane or normal intelligence." Is not this "sane normal intelligence" the principal agent that decides our conclusions? Can we make any decisions without the consent of this "sane normal intelligence?" If not, how can the decision be independent? And if independent, what could determine it but chance?

But the most striking expression of your thought is that to your mind it seems that "my purpose is to excuse mankind, in toto, from the moral results of their own acts." Let me disabuse your mind of that delusion. My view of the unvarying relation of all causes with all effects, leaving no room for chance in the order of nature, physically or spiritually, is the only one which, to my mind, can establish the moral responsibility of the indiivdual or justify punitive legislation.

What is the object of punishment for crime, if not to prevent its repetition? If you stand over me with a deadly weapon and say, "You are free to gather and eat the forbidden fruit on that tree; but if you do, I will kill you in an instant," would you say I was free and independent? Would my decision be free from your ruling will?

You ask: "Is it not a fact that the basis of civil, criminal and moral laws is individual responsibility?" I think it is. But what is the basis of that responsibility? Is it a reign of chance? Perhaps I shall shock you when I say that according to my ideas of logic and correct reasoning, independent choice, or "free moral agency" is totally incompatible with moral responsibility; and that just in the ratio that we approach independence we become irresponsible. If it were possible that you could be independent, who or what would have any right to interfere with your action? As it looks to me, just in the ratio that you are not free, you are subject to the regulations imposed by all the causes, conditions and agencies that decide your life line from the cradle to the grave. But if this be admitted, you may ask "what has it to do with the question of hypnotic influence and control?" There is, I think, but one line of division, if any, and that is the point in the processes of nature, where the more remote, subtle, and complex activities of directing causes, concentrate in the pivotal expression of an individual will. As soon as this climax is attained it requires no very elaborate analysis to convince the intellect that there is coercion, authority and absolute dictation and control of one will by another.

It seems to me that the absolute authority of active causes in shaping minor events a hundred years back of a specific climax, is as real, as irresistible and as arbitrary as that which holds a hypnotic subject in moral and physical bondage to the will of his master. If I am correct in this it is only a question of difference between one class of compulsory causes and another. The one having a larger sweep, and longer range, while the other is inclosed within a small compass and short range. The one is the sunlight thrilling through the ether, awakening the slumbering rainbows in the dew many millions of miles from its source; the other is the dewdrop on the bosom of the rose kindling into life and sparkling as it must when touched by the golden arrows of the morning.

But it appears from your lucid letter that you make the division at the point of a new departure in a chain of causes turn in two opposite directions; for your very definite and strong statement that "Independent suggestion appeals to and stimulates reason. Hypnotic suggestion suppresses reason and compels obedience," divides the action of a class of causes of uniform tendency in one direction into two opposite poles, the effects of which on the individual are as opposite as truth and falsehood, good and evil. But suppose this "Independent suggestion" be from an active and decided intellect, impelled by a strong desire to convince the independent recipient, and therefore attended by a vigorous will, in what way would the impression differ from any other hypnotic effect, except in degree? Because one stimulates reason and the other suppresses, if both are from one and the same source, it would seem to me that it only proves that effects developing progressively, have special phases as they advance, which often happens in the progress of diseases. Certain stimulants will first exhilarate, then impassion, then soothe, then stupefy, then nauseate, and finally deaden. Some of these symptoms attend the use of opium, hashish and tobacco. If "Independent suggestion stimulates reason" might not its continuance, uninterrupted, result in all these varietions and end in the repression of reason and enslavement of the individual? If "the one impels, the other compels," may not the impelling processes in advance stages of expression become a compelling authority? This question you have partly anticipated by saying that "the author's answer would be that it is not a question of degree, but of process."

Then a new process must be introduced. To your question if I "would be willing to extend the same hospitality to even the same truth if it were thrust upon me by a process which paralyzes reason?" I must answer, I do not know. If I were anxious to obtain some truth that was out of the reach of my faculties, and I knew it was in the possession of another who could give it to me in only one way, and that way required a temporary suspension—or paralysis—of my reason, my decision would depend upon the character of the one having the truth, my confidence in his integrity and the certainty that my reason could and would be perfectly restored. Last January I was laid upon a glass table in the presence of two persons, one of whom was a stranger to me, and submitted to an operation for the removal of cataracts from both eyes. True, they were of little use to me as they were, but they gave me a little light. I did not know but both eyes would be permanently ruined. But I believed in the skill and integrity of Dr. Hubbell. The result was all I hoped, and I now see quite well with the aid of strong glasses.

When weary with the labors of the day, we sense a need of sleep, and voluntarily surrender ourselves to a condition of total helplessness, expecting to awaken when nature has accomplished her work of restoration. If we had reason to think we should never awaken, or that some dire calamity would befall us while in this helpless condition, we would be likely to resist the persuasions of Morpheus with determined resolution. But in infancy we do not, probably, reason upon the chances we are taking when we abandon all the voluntary processes of the waking state; and before we are old enough to reason upon it the habit of trusting has become so established that we seldom think of possible consequences, when we lie down to sweet repose. If, however, there were venomous reptiles in close proximity to our sleeping apartment, in such a situation that they might, at any moment, draw their cold, clammy forms over our face, and insert their venomous fangs into our body, sleep would be a most unwelcome visitor, and likely be resisted. When I was a boy—I am an old boy now—I lived with a mesmerist. In the family was an elderly maid, who was a mesmeric subject. When she was extra weary, or had in prospect a hard day before her on the morrow, she would ask to be put to sleep—mesmerized—to prepare her for the extra work of the coming day. In this induced sleep she would go to her room and retire as usual, remaining in the mesmeric sleep until such time as she desired to awaken, and at that moment she would arise, dress herself and proceed to the room of her mesmerizer to be awakened. This was accomplished by a few upward passes of his hand, and she was ready for business. She claimed that these induced states were more restful, more invigorating than natural sleep, and no evil effects, so far as I know, ever followed, and she lived to a ripe old age, with no apparent depreciation of bodily health or mental balance as results of mesmeric trances.

I am aware that this letter is quite too long for the patience of our readers, and matter that I intended to reach must wait for the next writing. But before closing I wish to emphasize the one difficulty that seems to lie in the way of any definite and certain conclusion to be reached in this discussion. Insofar as statements are verifiable by any means in my reach, I can trust reason to analyze and decide. But when we reason from uncertain data, our conclusions cannot be final. For instance, on page 49 The Great Psychological Crime I read: "Science has been able to demonstrate that the primary physiological action of the hypnotic process is registered upon the physical brain of the subject. Moreover it operates upon the physical brain in the reverse order of its evolutionary development." The 'science" that has been able to make this demonstration does not appear to be within my reach; at least not near enough to be available for this discussion. The ablest scientists in the world are liable to err in their observations of facts, as also in the conclusions they reach after the facts are all verified. Great world theories, supported by many facts, have been found wanting and abandoned. But when we know our man, and his intellectual qualities, his reputation for accuracy, and thorough scientific integrity, we have confidence in what he tells us, about matters that we do not know, and which he is in position to know. But, even then, we may be deceived. Our oracle may make mistakes, and his whole system may need revision. But in the present case the author of The Great Psychological Crime is unknown to our readers, and the science he so often refers to is unknown to the general public, and appears likely to remain unknown for a century to come—except to the limited school referred to. It is not, I infer, endorsed by the representative physicists of the world, if it is known to them at all. Hence, when we read such statements as the one quoted, we have not the support of scientific authority to inspire confidence, that we have when we read Prof. Tyndall on the properties of light and electricity, or Dr. Flint, or Foster, on anatomy and physiology. That you know, and believe in him, counts for something; but it does not settle the question of his scientific ability and accuracy, for you may be deceived!

But if the whole world knew him, and believed in him, as an oracle of science, we should still need the verification of statements that are apparently contradicted by facts.

That hypnotism, when practiced by conscientious, high-minded men, is essentially, and invariably, destructive to the individual life of the subject, seems to be contradicted by experience. The case I have referred to being but one of many, who do not appear to have been injured in any way by repeated and long-continued experimentation. If our author has some occult processes by which unusual knowledge is attained it may be very real to him; but we are left to accept or reject his statements according to the appeal they make to our own experience, observation and reason.

Before we can be justified in rejecting and denouncing an infant science that has done so much to alleviate human suffering and corrected so many abnormal habits and evolved so much knowledge of the psychic character of individual life, we must be quite sure of our authority. The testimony of one man, or a dozen, unless supported by a strong array of indisputable facts, which may be repeated and verified, under a variety of circumstances, is not sufficient to revolutionize the aspect of any accepted science or system of philosophy. As hypnotism is but the initial in this discussion, and is of minor importance to that of mediumship, I anticipate that my next letter will open some arteries in that great body of world-redeeming uses and blessings. With high esteem and sincere regard and supreme love for truth, I am most cordially yours,

LYMAN C. HOWE.

HE CRITICISES THE BOOK UNSPARINGLY.

Sar'gis, one of the most critical and comprehensive thinkers in the ranks of Spiritualism, condemns the book, the Great Psychological Crime. His remarks will hold your attention throughout, After reading his conclusions, then read "A Most Pitiable Case," on this page--a lady subjectively controlled by a spirit purporting to be Abraham Lincoln, is rendered insane, and it is for the reader alone to decide whether wrecking that woman's life is a crime on the part of the spirit--a psychological crime--or not. The case presents an interesting object lesson to every thinking mind.

To the Editor:—The "Storm Center" has come and gone, "The Great Psychological Crime" has been exploited, and we of the quiet majority in the Spiritualist ranks may be allowed to look at the rear of the procession and over the battle-field. A roll call finds the mediums still on duty, and a visit to the hospital fails to discover any newly wounded in the endowed beds. Indeed, but for the mental weariness from the much reading, the event would be already forgotten. Not being a medium, a lecturer, or teacher of any kind or in any respect, it would not be expected that I should appear in the symposium, but now that it belongs to anybody to look over the field a partial review may be in order—for after all we, the people and revenue providers are really "it." And what a field it is!

One of the curious things about it all is, that a mass of platitudes whose one claimed merit is an antiquity, so remote as to elude knowing, having their modern origin in Blavatskyism, assuming a superior wisdom represented by so-called "Masters"—as far as information goes a purely hypothetical existence—should under the thin veneer of the School of Natural Science have the dignity given it by so many of our prominent Spiritualists. Has literary finish become so rare as to be matter for gush when met with? The conspirator is always deferential, smooth and flattering to his victim. Our Bible Spiritualists may find an example in Samuel's story of Joab: "Joab took Abner aside in the gate to speak with him quietly, and smote him under the fifth rib." Friendship, sympathy with the truth of spirit and its return through mediumship is the role of all jesuitical attempts against the facts upon which its knowing rests, followed always by the stab of the slaying Joab. It was the hope that Hudson's screed would do the work that Isis Unveiled, the Secret Doctrine and other attempts had failed to accomplish. And now this desperate effort under cover of a crusade against hypnotism, making a bugaboo of that, and then the real purpose, stab mediumship as only a form of hypnotism. The performance is so thin that the wonder has been that it received the respectful treatment accorded it.

The scheme is a shrewd one: First, decry hypnotism, and exploit all the sensational stories of empiricism, and charlatanry that wonder-mongers have given to the world, enlarge upon its "destructiveness," and then boldly assume that it and spirit control are identical—therefore mediums must be suppressed, or given over to the control of the Indo-Chicago Camarilla. A more jesuitical game to subserve a purpose has not come under observation since the casuistic devices of the same agency to excuse burning people at the stake. To be a Jesuit does not require one to be a priest—the detective and "destructive" force of the order is in its lay membership, who are never known.

But when did this Indo-theosophical cult get its horror of hypnotism? Strange as it may sound amid the noise of the "storm center," mesmerism, or hypnotism was the very key to the ancient mysteries that this Nature School now anathematizes. Let us see by a few brief glances at the record:

Madame Blavatsky, in the Secret Doctrine, Vol. 2, page 156 says: "The writer is well aware that those specialists, whose computations of the ages of the globe and man are the most liberal, always had the shyer majority against them. But this proves very little since the majority rarely if ever turns out to be right in the long run. Harvey stood alone for many years. The advocates of crossing the Atlantic with steamers were in danger of ending their days in a lunatic asylum, Mesmer is classed to this day in the encyclopedias along with Cagliostro and St. Germain as a charlatan and impostor. And now that Charcot and Richet have vindicated Mesmer's claims and that 'mesmerism' under the new name of 'hypnotism'—a false nose on a very old face—is accepted by science, it does not strengthen one's respect for that majority, when one sees the ease and unconcern with which its members treat of 'hypnotism,' telepathic impacts and its other phenomena. They speak of it in snort as if they always believed in it since the days of Solomon, and had never called its votaries only a few years ago lunatics and impostors."

Compare that with the new-born expositions of this new cult—the founders of the ancient Indo cult in Europe and America hailed hypnotism as the modern discovery of the ancient truth. But here is more of it:

Col. Olcott, one of the founders of the ancient cult in this age, and president of the Theosophical Society of the world, in an address delivered in Calcutta in 1885, said: "Mesmerism, rediscovered in Europe, long known to the Asiatics, is the key to the Hindoo sastras. Young men, withhold your flippant skepticism concerning your ancient faith until you have mastered this subject. For in mesmerism is to be found the helm for the heart of the searcher of the hidden mysteries of the Aryan philosophy."

But if that were not enough there is more at hand: A. P. Sinnett, author of Esoteric Buddhism, the Occult World, and president of the Theosophical Branch in London, in his Rationale of Mesmerism, published in 1892, page 1, says: "But though it has come so strangely popular quite recently the term 'hypnotism' merely represents as regards its actual origin, a misconception of the facts relating to the abnormal conditions mentioned, coupled with a very unworthy disposition to slander the first important exponents of all this knowledge in modern times and to cover a cowardly retreat from denials which had become no longer tenable."

In the same volume, pp. 208, 209, in the chapter on clairvoyance he says that the employment of mesmerism for petty purposes is to be condemned and discouraged, and then makes this very remarkable statement: "Indeed, if people only knew the real significance of some lofty spiritual phrases they are in the habit of employing in connection with conventional religion, they would feel that very formidable terms of censure are due to any act involving the degradation of natural forces, having to do with the spiritual life. In their way and to the limited extent that the thing is possible for the modern ignoramus, such acts constitute what early theologians meant by the sin against the holy ghost."

We leave the School of Nature to wrestle with this sin, declared by the apostles of the ancient mysteries in this revival age. The whole chapter makes good reading in this connection. Even an outsider can see at once that these Indo folk only refer to what their cult calls black magic, and belong to that element that wars against white magic, or the use of these forces for good ends. By their own teaching this use is Satanic and a degradation of the powers of nature. But as this is not in our department we leave them to their record and that of Blavatsky, Olcott, Sinnett and the non-jesuit branch of the school of ancient India philosophy.

When white and black magic were recognized and defined as the key to the Aryan philosophy in the ancient school, Modern Spiritualism had not yet made its advent, and no amendment was then necessary to help in destroying the one knowledge that made the mysteries no longer mysterious. We will close this rather parenthetical reference by this farther quotation from Sinnett, who says: That in its proper use, "the practice of mesmerism rises into the region of the loftiest and most ennobling pursuit when the great force is employed to set free and stimulate to the utmost the highest evolution of the highest consciousness in man."

But what are we to do when doctors disagree? If as the book advises us to do—"insist upon the entire abandonment of every phase, form and degree of mediumship," how are we ever to know there are spirits, or a spirit world? True, the author-Master tells us that he can put us in the way, but then seventy millions of anxious Americans can't all get to Chicago to take lessons as to how and how not to do it. The thing is impracticable, and in all candor it is submitted, had we not better take what we have, and what is admitted we have, than to fly to possibilities so remote? And then again, when we look at India where this school of nature wisdom has been on tap so long that tradition is not able to find its beginning, and yet so deplorable the condition of its people, that will not kill a cobra for fear of committing matricide or murder some other member of the family, we are justified in waiting a few weeks, or even years before taking the leap irrevocable. That, at least, is western and modern prudence.

But to the symposium again: One of the curious things in all this attack, and the same with Hudson and others, they only recognize trance mediumship. Why? Because trance alone has even a semblance to hypnotic control. Outside trance there is no phase of mediumship open to this sort of hostility. But is hypnotic and spirit control alike or analogous even as to trance? The affirmation is here made that they are not. The resemblance begins and ends with the apparent abdication of the subject's individuality, and the substitution of the other. In the hypnotic case the imagination of the subject is the factor. He is himself except when the operator instructs him to be somebody else or to do some act. After all the talk, that is the beginning and the end of hypnotic control.

But again: Has a hypnotist ever produced a rap, written between slates, or made his subject speak a language foreign to him; or has a case of levitation ever occurred in hypnotic experiments; or did ever an imagined personage of the subject, or any other invisible personality materialize and appear as a third person in the performance? The ridiculousness of the whole assumption appears as soon as the thing is touched by the wand of comparison. The hypnotic subject is the automaton of the operator—that and that only. The one and only feature in which the two are ostensibly alike is the seeming suspension of the volition of the normal person. But with the medium this is not always the fact. In many cases the medium is conscious of all that is said or transpires." Conscious mediumship is as common almost as is clairvoyance. This apparent similarity is the basis of the whole theory that the two conditions are alike. A person in a profound sleep may appear like a corpse, but that doesn't prevent his waking up. All that is needed to upset this whole rigmarole about the identity of hypnotic and spirit control, even in trance, is a little experience mixed with common sense.

The physical phenomena of mediumship, as for example, illustrated by Zollner, involves the suspension or change in the direction of a natural force—as gravity—a thing disconnected with the medium or sitter—and utterly unknown to hypnotism and beyond the power of the hypnotist. As an illustration quotation is again made from the Asiatic cult as authority: In an address delivered in India, Col. Olcott, in giving an account of his investigation of American Spiritualism said: "I took an egg in my hand under one end of a 7½ octave piano, and the medium touched the under side of my hand, and the piano lifted about one foot off the floor." Did ever a hypnotic subject perform such a feat? Yet according to these new Masters in occultism, hypnotism and spirit control are one and the same thing.

This is not given to prove, sustain or vindicate mediumship, only to show how shallow and preposterous pretensions and pretenders appear when contrasted with themselves.

And added to it all, we are told and warned that the only way to escape danger of ultimate annihilation is to shut the door of investigation and knowledge, and take our risk of fortune in the dark domain of chance—for if we know of immortality and fail to follow the School of Natural Science we are apt to be wiped off the slate if this new custodian of the keys so long the peculiar possession of St. Peter. It has been told us that it is a terrible thing to fall into the hands of an angry God, who can punish at his discretion, but that is not a circumstance to the displeasure of an Indo-American master who can wipe you off the map of eternity.

It is not intended here to enter any defense of mediumship or Spiritualism. That has been done in the symposium with a wealth of ability that makes it unique and memorable in its history. Were it admissible in this connection, it were easy to find an overruling purpose in the book, and a channel in The Progressive Thinker, for the most remarkable and exhaustive discussion and triumphant vindication of Spiritualism as a gospel and mediumship as its evangel, that has been given to the world since Hydesville. Its peculiar feature is in its popular character, and wide dissemination by the newspaper—the priest of the newer dispensation.

What is here said is directed to the pretext upon which this crusade is founded. In the first place "hypnotism," the very key to the mysteries of the ancient cult of India is made the basis of attack, made a very gorgon of horrors, and then assumed as the twin of spirit control. It is this monstrous falsehood that must be exposed. Mediumship needs no defence, but the public must be advised as to the mendacity and malice of such a pretense. All that is needed to see the absurdity of the thing is observation, but not one person in a thousand has the opportuntiy. The observer sees at once that the difference between the medium and the hypnotic subject is simply that between an intelligent personality and an automaton. You have, no doubt, seen a fakir ventriloquist on the curbstone manipulate a wooden manikin, moving its jaws by a spring, while his remarks, to the onlooking jays, came through it—but it was the fakir talking. So is, in the last analysis, the hypnotist and his subject—it is the fakir all the time. So that cat is out of the meal.

It seemed a curious thing in reading over the symposium that so much able and entertaining writing was given in defense of mediumship, when in fact none is needed. The attack should have been met by a counter charge, for when it is shown that the charge is a mere pretext, and without semblance of merit, the whole purpose collapses. But the value of these papers to the cause as a whole is beyond caluculation.

And perhaps, a parenthesis here may not be out of place. The very birds can tell you that without mediumship there never was, and in the nature of the human intellect never can be any Spiritualism. And the sooner the press and platform understand and practice upon the fact, the rarer will "storm centers" arise, or psychological crimes fret the atmosphere.

Again: The existence of spirits, the

A Most Pitiable Case.

While the Spiritualists have been Singing the "Sweet By-and-by," and "There's a Land that is Fairer than Day," and listening to lullaby messages and eloquent lectures from the Spiritualist Rostrum, and receiving tests galore, is it not barely possible they have forgotten or overlooked the ruin caused by disorderly, mischievous and malicious spirits. Inside of Spiritualism as well as outside of it, even in the churches, spirit obsession is common--more common than many are aware. The writer of the following claims that there is a "Great Psychological Crime," and attempts to prove the same in an extract from a letter which is published below. The time has arrived for a serious consideration of this subject.

THE GREAT(EST) PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME.

When spirits, disorderly and devilish, visit the earth and take possession of the will and sensory organism of a pure and aspiring person and lead them into sickness, crime or insanity, they COMMIT THE GREAT(EST) PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME, and is there a Spiritualist in all this broad land who will deny this statement?

I take the following extract from a private letter:

"My wife and I have learned during the last three years to believe in Spiritualism, and since then we have been trying to investigate to our own satisfaction. At times we sat for development together, and sometimes I could not be there, as my work called me away, and then she sat alone; but about the fourth of July last she seemed to be highly pleased, as she thought Abraham Lincoln was her guide, and he talked with her freely, but the things that she said he told her DID NOT AGREE WITH THE CHARACTER OF THE PERSON REPRESENTED.

"I tried to have her free herself from the influence, and the POOR GIRL DID TRY, and fought heroically; but it was of no avail, and she steadily grew worse and worse, until she was rendered insane—reason dethroned.

"Now, what I want to ask you personally is, Can obsession be cured? If so, WHEN, HOW AND WHERE? Not for God's sake, but for her sake and mine."

"OH, THE SUFFERING THAT SHE HAS ENDURED IN THIS TIME, AND IS STILL ENDURING.

"I hope this is not the reward that Spiritualism has in store for us. If it is, the sooner and farther we get away from it the better.

"Now I ask this of you, as one well versed in the mysteries, and one on whose advice I can rely."

Say what you will, ye wise ones of earth, here is the great(est) psychological crime—not on the part of the poor girl, but on the part of the infamous, ignorant and vicious spirit who has taken control of her organism. While, then, extrolling the beauty and grandeur of the spirit realms, DON'T FORGET SPIRITUALISTS, THE HEARTACHES, THE AGONY, THE TEARS, THE WAILS OF ANGUISH OF THIS POOR MAN FOR HIS DEAR WIFE, WHOSE REASON HAS BEEN DETHRONED BY A SPIRIT FALSELY PURPORTING TO BE ABRAHAM LINCOLN, and demonstrating that a "psychological crime" has been committed in her case.

Here is a pure, noble and aspiring woman, one against whom there has never been a breath of suspicion, seized by a wicked spirit, who has made a wreck of her, demonstrating conclusively and without a shadow of doubt, that a bad, wicked spirit can seize upon, hold and subjugate a person who is honest, pure and soul-aspiring. Spiritualists, here is an object lesson for you, and one that should be constantly kept before you, and ONE THAT WILL NOT DOWN, however much you may denounce the author of the book, "The Great Psychological Crime."

A DEVOTED SPIRITUALIST.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-Washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $9.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washing Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men. JOHN F. M.

Reports From the Field.

Late advices from Rockford, Ill., inform us that two Spiritualist societies have recently been formed in that city, one known as the Spiritual Science Society, with upward of 40 members, and Mr. Getchel as president. They are holding weekly meetings in the Knights of Pythias Hall, West State street, near the bridge, and give evidence of great zeal in advancing the cause of Spiritualism.

The other society has assumed the name of Psychic Research. It reports over fifty active members, with Mrs. H. H. Howe as president. The latter will hereafter hold its meetings in Woodman's Hall, nearly across the street from the former society. They were to hold a large meeting last Sunday, with several speakers from abroad, but of course we have no information of its success as we go to press.

Rockford should sustain two large Spiritualistic societies. It has the material for them, and all it needs is organization and good management. Forty years ago it boasted of a society with 500 members. A well-conducted spiritual paper was also published there; but discordant elements worked the dissolution of the large society. The majority of its members has passed to the great beyond. Probably the same disintegrating element is there, but wise leadership, and two societies whose only rivalry should be in doing good, will largely advance the common interest, and it is hoped avoid the rock on which so many other societies have been wrecked. We wish them both abundant success.

Good and Evil Mixed.

"The Twentyeth Century Tram Car and Ominus Scripture Text Mission," is the name of a society prevailing in London. Texts are selected from the Bible, while twelve persons by day, and six by night, are employed to carry these through the streets. Those exhibited at night are illuminated by electric lights.

No doubt many good thoughts are thus displayed, and persons judging from these suppose the whole book is glowing with similar ideas, while in fact there are hundreds of passages if thus displayed would land the bearers of the ensigns in the penitentiary for obscenity, as a party was convicted in Kansas a few years ago for copying some of them on a postal card, and mailing it.

Worthy passages can be selected from almost any book. The Vedas, and the Egyptian Book of the Dead abound in passages equal to any found in the Bible. They are all human productions whatever their pretensions, as are the vile passages in the Bible with which they are intermixed.

Really Discouraging.

Rev. W. A. Bartlett, of the First Congregationalist church of Chicago, is in real distress because of the low ebb of interest felt in regard to Sunday-schools. He says churches and Sunday-schools are weakened and decimated because of the critical and literary methods of Bible study.

It must be conceded that knowledge of the way the Bible was made has revolutionized respect for it. For ages priests taught the book was written by the finger of God; that it was in fact the Word of God. While the world so believed they almost worshiped the book. When criticism taught the fact that it is a compilation of ancient records, no more inspired by God than is any other collection of books, their superstition gave way to knowledge, hence the condition of which Rev. Bartlett complains.

Materialization of Thomas Paine.

Our highly esteemed Washington correspondent, Wm. H. Burr, Esq., wrote us, with no view to publication, an account of a materialization of Thomas Paine, the "author hero of the Revolution," at a seance given by Mr. Keeler. Mr. Burr had written us on a former occasion that the minstrel, George Christy, in spirit life, had promised a materialization from Mr. Paine at this seance. Quoting Mr. Burr:

"Last evening, pursuant to promise by George Christy, verbally made, Thomas Paine called me to the cabinet. Back of Mr. Keeler and the lady sitter stood a figure some 5 feet 9 inches in height. At first view the white, fluffy front somewhat resembled a woman's dress, but closer inspection showed it was a sort of ruffled shirt bosom, commonly worn by gentry a hundred years ago. It did not appear exactly like the ruffled shirt front in Paine's portrait. The face was not unlike the portraits of Paine; but I could not see the features very distinctly with my imperfect vision. Perfect likenesses are very rare in materializations. But this was as distinct as any I ever saw. In a low voice the figure said:

"'I want to say, it is false that I recanted on my death-bed. I died as I lived—in belief.'

"I interrupted him by asking if I should take down his words. He answered, 'No.'

"Mr. Keim, a visitor present, who had received several communications from Paine in writing, with his characteristic signature, stepped forward. I said to Paine: 'You are as tall as I or Mr. Keim; and you are not a 'filthy little Atheist,' as a prominent government official said of him in one of his publications. He replied, 'I hope not.'

"All this was dignified, and then he said: 'Next Friday evening I will speak more fully, and you may take down my words.' This I promised to do.

"Paine fulfilled the promise made to Christy to the letter, save he did not have me report his words. This was reserved for one week.

"It seems to me folly for anyone, especially a professed Spiritualist, to deny the phenomena of Spiritualism. Materialists dogmatically declare, when this earthly body dies it stays dead; that without material organization there can be no force, no voice, no human expression. But if I and some twenty others did not hear the words I have written purporting to be spoken by the spirit of Thomas Paine, then we are all idiots. Anyone who denies the evidence of his own senses stultifies himself."

It will be remembered Mr. Burr was one of the first shorthand reporters of Congress. He traveled with Kossuth when he visited America, and reported his speeches which were collected and published in book form. Later Mr. Burr is an author of prominence. With a critical mind, and a cool head, it would seem to be an impossibility to deceive him when investigating a subject in which all humanity is so profoundly interested. We shall wait with anxiety his further report.

Curing a Hypochondriac.

An odd story of a hypochondriac and the amusing manner of his cure is credited to the late Dr. Emily P. Robbins, who was the first woman physician in this country.

"At Fort Madison, where I first practiced," she said, "there was a hypochondriac of great wealth, whom a friend of mine, a Dr. Gray, attended.

"Some days this hypochondriac would think himself a teapot. Again he would be a kettle, or his legs would be turning into glass. He was, altogether, a trying subject for old Dr. Gray to deal with, but one morning the limit was reached, for when the doctor asked him how he felt he said gruffly:

"'How do I feel? Why, I don't feel at all. I'm dead. I have been dead for several hours. How can a dead man feel?'

"Dr. Gray determined for once, to humor him. He said:

"'Yes, you are dead, sure enough. Come upstairs and be laid out. We'll send for the undertaker to measure you for your coffin.'

"The patient consented to this, though with a rather uneasy look, and got into bed and stretched himself out in a stiff, corpse-like attitude.

"They dressed him in grave clothes; they put him in a coffin; they placed flowers in the dim room and then they admitted, two or three at a time, his best and oldest friends.

"These friends, having been well coached, gazed at the corpse and shook their heads sadly.

"'Ah,' one would say, 'so he is dead at last, eh? Well, a greater villain never lived.'

"'He must have died hard,' another would murmur. 'They say the wicked die hard always.'

"A third friend exclaimed: 'He cheated me once out of $2,000. I loaned the money to him without security, and he pretended that he had never received it.'

"At this the hypochondriac sat up in his coffin.

"'You lie, George,' he said, bitterly.

"But Dr. Gray pushed him back, whispering to him to remember he was dead, and he subsided again.

"But when an old and trusted servant said of him in a loud voice:

"Well, the old curmudgeon is gone and I am glad of it,' the hypochondriac could contain himself no longer. He leaped out of the coffin and seized the servant by the throat.

"'You scoundrel!' he exclaimed, 'I—' But a great shout of laughter went up; the patient seemed to realize for the first time his folly; he turned and went out for a walk and never again did he permit his hypochondria to make a fool of him."—Chicago Chronicle.

There is in this incident a lesson in psychology, and its application in the cure of abnormal states induced by perverted auto-suggestion, which is the ruling factor in the production of hypochondria.

No doubt many cases of hypochondria could be cured by the reversive psychological effect produced by taking the patient at his word and treating him accordingly, after the manner indicated in the instance above mentioned. The reversive awakening effect of wisely "answering a fool according to his folly" might often be exemplified in cases of mental aberration.

Clergyman Is Sarcastic.

A Connecticut clergyman, according to the New Haven News, recently gave out the following notice:

"The regular session of the Donkey Club will be held, as usual, at the close of this service. Members will line up just outside the church door, make remarks, and stare at the women who pass, as is their custom. Any member known to escort a young woman to church like a man and sit with her like a gentleman, will be promptly expelled from membership."

Hudson Tuttle's Questions Answered.

Distance often magnifies the worth of men and unfamiliarity exaggerates the importance of their endeavors. In nature what to the far-away view appears a frowning mountain frequently dwindles down to a modest foot-hill on near approach.

Hudson Tuttle, our alert Editor-at-large, in The Progressive Thinker of Nov. 28, dignifies with undeserved attention W. E. Shepard's attack upon Spiritualism. He found it in an insignificant periodical styled the Burning Bush. It was originally made at Handel Hall, Chicago, and listened to by a large number of Spiritualists then in attendance upon their Illinois Mass Meeting.

Brother Tuttle almost rises to the point of indignation as he asks: "Why did not some delegate denounce the arrogant slanderer and his falsehoods then and there?" "Is it believable that the delegates quietly received his castigation?" Yes, fully answers the second question, while the first calls for a more extended reply. When the hall was engaged for a mass-meeting it was expressly stipulated that a religious body which had occupied it for a year should be allowed to worship in it from noon to one o'clock p. m. each day. Spiritualists then had no rights to the room for the period named. Courtesy of a very common kind required them to respect the privileges of others with a silence as expressionless as their enjoyment of the extremely ludicrous would permit, unless they were invited to reply. Shepard carefully avoided placing himself in the latter predicament. He promptly seated a strange gentleman, who rose to voice an exception to statements made, with the words, "We pay the rent of this room," while a representative of the hall armed with police power, persuaded the interrupter to subside. Spiritualists by their course escaped a similar humiliation.

In the second place, the latter were not conscious of the necessity of a reply to Shepard, but were under great obligation for an enjoyment which far outranked that afforded by any minstrel or vaudeville entertainment.

I was seated within easy reach of Shepard, intently listening to his statements and studying his temperament and magnetic power. I do not hesitate to predict that his vanity will feast upon the fact that he has drawn to himself Brother Tuttle's fire and his followers, to whom he seemed superior, will be thereby impressed with exalted ideas of his personal power.

This Holiness Band is so conducted as to earn for its members a greater reputation for sincerity than sanity, for muscle than mind, for emotion than reason, while its ritualistic ceremonials are wholly dependent upon lungs and legs. Their services are a hideous travesty upon the word worship.

At the close of Shepard's meeting, many of the Spiritualists hastened to belated lunches, but a few, among them the veteran worker, Dr. Robert Greer, gathered some of the score of this evangelistic band about them in friendly discussion. During the past fortnight a prominent female worker of the band has been adjudged insane by the Cook County Court. I am told relatives of other young women have had to use strenuous measures to save the latter from reaching the same goal.

In The Progressive Thinker of May 16, the president of the Illinois State Association said: "A gentleman connected with the management of Handel Hall complimented the Spiritualists for the self-control they displayed in listening without reply to the frenzied prayers made for them and attack upon their cause by the Farson Holiness people at the noon hour. Their wild, but vain pleadings with the Lord for the conversion of just one of these servants of the devil made the taunt of Elijah applicable to the petitioners: "Either your God is musing, or is gone aside, or he is on a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth and must be awakened." He is not censurable for getting out of hearing, filling his ears with cotton, or sending word, "Not at home." Dr. Wilkins' muse describes the antics of this sect very fittingly in these words:

"With their screaming, shouting, yelling, and their roaring like all mad,
With their praying and their singing to the Great Jehovah fad,
Till the walls were made discordant with their hallelujah joys,
And the world seemed but created for their holiness and noise.
Such a racket, such a clanging, such religious jamboree,
Such a wild and weird-like worship civil people seldom see.
Oh, how glad we were religion was beneath these ravings wild,
And we hope that all good mediums are to silence reconciled."

We hope Brother Tuttle will not miss any opportunity to book this Band for appearance at the town hall of Berlin Heights, and attend with the buttons of his clothing made doubly secure, an inexhaustible fund of laughter and a measureless supply of pity.

There are other and greater cranks than the Spiritualists. As we move onward they fall into the places once popularly assigned us.

An Act which is an Abomination and Disgrace.

QUEER LEGISLATION.

Specimens of the Work of the Ohio Legislature.

To the Editor:—I herewith present a copy of an act passed by the Ohio Legislature April 16, 1900, which I presume will be of interest to your readers:

SENATE BILL NO. 162.

An Act

making it a misdemeanor for one to represent himself as an astrologer, a fortune-teller, a clairvoyant, or a palmister.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Ohio:

Section 1. That whoever shall represent himself to be an astrologer, a fortune-teller, a clairvoyant or palmister, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall for each and every offense be fined not more than one hundred dollars, and not less than twenty-five dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail for a period not longer than three months nor shorter than thirty days, or shall within the discretion of the trial court, be both so fined and imprisoned.

Section 2. Nothing in this act contained shall apply to any astrologer, fortune-teller, clairvoyant, or palmister to whom a license to practice has been legally granted.

Section 3. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage. A. G. REYNOLDS, Speaker of House of Representatives.

JOHN A. CALDWELL,

President of the Senate.

Passed April 16, 1900. 236 G.

Published in volume XCIV of General and Local Acts Passed and Joint Resolutions Adopted by the Seventy-fourth General Assembly at its Regular Session, Begun and Held in the City of Columbus, Ohio, January 1, 1900. Columbus, Ohio. Published by the State Printer 1900.

It will be seen that the practice of these gifts is not forbidden. It is a law forbidding anyone to "represent" himself to be an astrologer, a fortune-teller, a clairvoyant, or a palmister.

After condemning the one who "represents" himself as being a clairvoyant, etc., and providing punishment for the crime, by fine and imprisonment these law makers make provisions for laws already enacted in the state, licensing the practice of these same powers, gifts and practices, by adding Section 2 of this bill, which we repeat: "Nothing in this Act contained shall apply to any astrologer, fortune-teller, clairvoyant or palmister to whom a license to practice has been legally granted."

According to this the great state of Ohio grants license to commit crime. Such wisdom as is wrapped up in this Senate Bill No. 162 (???)

This legislature evidently felt the power and were certainly influenced by organized Spiritualism, as the Ohio State Spiritualist Association is legally chartered under the laws of Ohio and has power to ordain or license those who "represent" themselves as clairvoyants, platform test mediums and speakers this legislature could not legally pass an act to punish its legally licensed clairvoyants. The clairvoyant is one of the principal teachers of our religion and if, as per the constitution of the United States, we are allowed to worship according to the dictates of our conscience, and if the state of Ohio grants a license to our teachers, all of which is true, then this Ohio legislature overstepped its legal rights when it passed that vicious and unjust Act.

This Act is an abomination and a disgrace to the men that originated it and to those who voted to make it a law.

Senate Bill No. 162 makes it a crime for anyone to represent himself as a clairvoyant, etc., unless licensed to commit the crime?

What a travesty on the dignity of that great body of law-makers of Ohio.

The lesson to Spiritualists is plain. Organization gives protection to our mediums, therefore every medium and speaker should unite with some organization and assist in teaching such men as voted for this infamous law that clairvoyance and fortune-telling do not deserve to be classed together.

Let the Spiritualists of every state organize and stand for their rights, that our mediums may be recognized and protected, and our beloved cause upheld and advanced.

We are busy at work in Indiana, organizing new societies and visiting those already established. We hope to create interest and receive assistance to organize a fine state association here.

We desire to hear from every Spiritualist in Indiana who is interested in our work. Address for the present, Rochester, Ind.

Papal Comedy.

On November 12, the new pope held his first public consistory, and put the red hat on the heads of five new cardinals. The people of Rome turned out as to a circus, and every available space where the pageant could be seen was occupied.

The pope, hale and robust, quite in contrast to the pale and attenuated Leo, was clothed in full pontifical robes, with mitre, and an immense emerald ring on his finger. It was on the hand he raised to bless the people as he passed! He was preceded and followed by the celebrated Swiss Guards. After these came a train of bishops, priests, monks and court laymen all in the blazon habiliments of robes, caps and symbols of their office. The procession was closed by another detachment of Swiss Guards. After all had been seated, the cardinals came and knelt before the pope, who conferred the red hat on each "with real emotion." The pope then blessed all present and withdrew, amidst the most prolonged and enthusiastic applause. The pageant was one of the most gorgeous Rome ever beheld. The cardinals were not to go forth to preach the gospel as the disciples of old were commissioned. They are to wear "red hats," and splendid robes, and add festivity to the papal court.

Why should a peaceful religious body maintain a guard of soldiers? Why in its processions should a body of soldiers be first and last? Cannot the pope trust himself with his people? Must he keep a foreign guard to protect him? Or is it a part of the show—of the flummery and display by which the people are deceived?

Think of Jesus whom the pope represents, who complained that he was not as well cared for as the foxes, wearing a gorgeous robe, a hat as high as a bushel basket, and an "enormous emerald" on his finger, to flash on the gaping crowd when he blessed them!

A Fool and His Money.

It is reported Dowie's wild goose chase to New York and return, cost half a million dollars, and chagrin was the only reward for the expenditure. The age is too intelligent to be humbugged by such silly procedure.

A Prediction.

"In the twentieth century war will be dead, the scaffold will be dead, royalty will be dead, and [religious] dogmas will be dead; but man will live. For all, there will be but one country—that country the whole earth; for all, there will be but one hope—that hope the whole heaven."—Victor Hugo, a modern prophet, born in 1820.

MRS. LAURA G. FIXEN.

Mrs. Fixen will start for Australia from San Francisco, Dec. 12. She will travel through all the cities of that extensive country, and wherever Spiritualists are of sufficient number she will lecture. Mrs. Fixen is held in high esteem in Chicago as exceptionally efficient in all reform work, and we are sure she will prove very acceptable to any society that will engage her services in that far-off clime. Her lectures are practical, forceful and logical.

SAR'GIS' CRITICISM.

knowledge as to a spirit world, and the fact that spirits are but transferred human beings, was never known, taught or understood until the advent of Modern Spiritualism—and through mediumship. Destroy or banish that and the race is back again in the dark ages—with devils and hells, heavens and angels, witches, ghosts, priests and fakirs—the halcyon days of mystics, pretenders, deputy gods, goddesses and their progeny.

Even this India cult has to invoke mediumship to bolster up its pretensions. To see spirits, to talk with them, to communicate with the spirit world, is mediumship though the possessor of these powers never heard the word, or is a "Master" or a Hottentot. The thing, not the pretense or the verbiage, is the substantial fact. It has been the mission of Modern Spiritualism to tell the world there is such a thing as a medium. The woman of Endor, if in Chicago to-day, would not advertise as one "having a familiar spirit," but would be a clairvoyant, trance, materializing, or a business "medium."

And so when the boasted Indo cult is put to it, they have to appeal to mediumship to support even their attacks upon it. For example. Annie Besant, at one of her lectures in England, was asked where she found proof of a life beyond the grave, and promptly answered: "In Spiritualism." And the Countess Wachtmeister, a noted disciple and for years the companion of Madame Blavatsky, in a meeting at which the writer was present, was asked a like question and gave the same reply. So we have Theosophy—which is this same Indo-Chicago cult—dependent upon mediumship for the basis of all they have to teach or say about a continuous life.

All that students need do to realize the new world of the present from what it was prior to 1848, is to go back to the record up to that time on the problem of immortality, and ignore all since. Such a nightmare as would settle down upon human aspiration would indeed be akin to the annihilation which this blasphemous propaganda would install for its non-acceptors. This new doctrine of annihilation of the "soul" is the most hideous spectre ever born of debauched metaphysics.

Before closing will you pardon one reference to the pro side of the hypnotic symposium. It is to the story of the Methodist lady, whose name gallantry must omit. It is enough to excite humor in a statue to read it and note the gravity with which it is presented. Such cases are common and include a large percentage of revival conversions. Camp-meetings converts are proverbially temporary, and give rise to the Methodist doctrine of backsliding. To read the ingenuous story of being hypnotized by the evangelist, and then that of her redemption by the stronger hypnotic power of the author-Master and the society of Nature Science is one of the rare gems of innocence that is sometimes met in the desert of practical life. How long before some other operator will show her the way out of this second captivity? The funny thing is the grave face the Nature School puts on in introducing such a case in such a discussion. The soothsayers no doubt still smile when they meet. But to sum up:

There is, Mr. Editor, a spirit world or there is not. Spirits return and make themselves known or they do not. If there is such a world and they do return it is not of our doing nor can we change it, any more than we can control a comet or smother an earthquake. And when any man, or set of men, assume to prescribe or proscribe in regard to the fact, it is like the ancient undertaking of whipping a dog to scare away an eclipse.

One thing that somewhat frets the "spiritual movement" is that there are so many people who think they have something to do with it. But lest the subscriber be put in that list, it is better to stop here with the good news that Spiritualism still lives and its mediums are still on duty. SAR'GIS.

Col. Ingersoll Did Not Commit Suicide.

Let me say for the benefit of Rev. F. A. Strough, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who recently charged that the late Robert G. Ingersoll committed suicide, that this distiguished man passed from this life peacefully, but suddenly, while in conversation with his wife, at his summer home, Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., on the morning of July 21, 1899.

His life had been such a magnificent example of pure morals, freedom of thought and noble conduct, and all the higher ethics to which a humble mortal may aspire, that it seems like diverging from a straight and narrow path to risk sullying so great a name by noticing a charge so utterly preposterous and devoid of truth.

Suicide invariably involves some desperate situation in the life of the individual. Lost hope, disappointed ambitions, remorse and compunction over an ill-spent life are some of the reasons prompting this act.

Considering every phase and failing of human nature, there is absolutely nothing in the life of Col. Ingersoll which the speculative fancy of the human brain can construe into any approximation of a cause for the taking of human life.

He had friends and money, and was capable of employing honest means in making money. He was a lawyer of international fame. He was the greatest orator of his time. His friends and intimates were the greatest minds in the professional, political and mercantile world, and his name was one of reverence with millions in the humbler walks of life.

His charity was lavish. No appeal was ever made to him in vain. He took personal pride in responding to every communication addressed to him, especially to those more unfortunate in the acquisition of this world's goods than he. The even tenor of his life was in no way marred by any untoward incident or situation.

His ideal domestic life compelled the admiration of his most bitter critics who sought advantage in his every act. It was the theme of his friends, and frequently the subject of current newspaper comment.

He rested on a pinnacle, in the estimation of his fellow-men, reached by few of his contemporaries.

It was a privilege to know this ideal man whose work and manner of life were lessons to the rising generation.

Robert G. Ingersoll died as he lived: In the full possession of his mental faculties and with no remorse or recantation upon his lips. In the calm conviction of a life well-spent, and in the love and bosom of his family, and the admiration of all lovers of truth.

It is the irony of fate that any of his admirers should feel called upon to defend such a splendid character against the malicious calumny of irresponsible bigotry. CHARLES W. KLEE.

Emma Booth-Tucker.

The tragic death of this leader in one of the great religious movements of the time, recalls circumstances in her life from which a profound civic lesson may be drawn.

Her charms of wifehood and motherhood are the cherished remembrances of her immediate friends. Her devotion to the Salvation Army is the pardonable pride of her associates in that organization.

Everyone should have a direct and deep personal interest in the fact that Mrs. Booth-Tucker's service and her devotion to an exacting public service did not interfere with the fulfillment of her duties as a wife nor the performance of her obligations as a mother. On the contrary, she was doubtless all the better and stronger as wife and mother for being also a tireless leader among right-minded men and women.

There is a superstition that the good wife will have no inclination to participate in public affairs, and that the good mother will have no time for it. So wives and mothers among the poor let their brains run fallow while they bend over washtubs, and wives and mothers among the rich allow theirs to run fallow while they minister to family pride at social functions. With unconscious irony all this is called "making the home."

Women must not vote. That onerous burden would break in upon the marital and maternal duties of the washtub and the afternoon tea and so destroy the home! They must not hold public office, no matter how crying the need in our public service for feminine thought and feminine action. For with women in politics our children would be neglected, and our husbands would go unkempt and unloved, while the home would disappear from our civilization!

Against this barbaric superstition Mrs. Booth-Tucker's busy and useful life was a daily protest.

No possible public service in civic affairs could be more exacting in its demands upon a woman's time and energy, or more disturbing to wifely and motherly duties, than the public religious work which Mrs. Booth-Tucker did perform so long and so successfully. Yet she leaves seven children, who have never lacked their mother's love and care.

May we not point to her career as another notable demonstration of the intimate relationship of wifely and motherly functions with the functions of citizenship, of the perfect compatibility of home-making with community-building—Editorial in Chicago Public.

The Catholic Church and Our Public Schools.

The article upon the above subject in a late issue of The Progressive Thinker, reminds me of what happened in the office of the Journal News of this city.

Wherever I have lived during the last forty years, I have always taken an interest in our public schools and when an open or concealed enemy assailed them I would defend the schools.

In June, 1902, the editor of the Journal News published a most uncalled for attack on our public schools. The article was taken from a Terre Haute daily and written by a most spiteful Irish Catholic. Why a Protestant editor, Mr. Ross, should go out of his way and publish this infamous article in a Republican paper, I could not understand, so on Sunday afternoon I wrote an answer (the editor would not publish it), believing I should have no trouble whatever to have it published. Line for line, sentence for sentence, I refuted the attack, and asked the writer why Catholic France, Spain, Austria and Italy had no public schools; yes, and why Cuba and Porto Rico had none, and as for morality these Catholic countries stood way below Protestant states; in point of intelligence the people of the above-mentioned countries stood no comparison whatever. I also cited Porto Rico particularly, because Father Thomas Sherman, of New York, after the last-named island was taken from the Spaniards, made an extensive journey in that country and found no education whatever among its people, and what was worse, three-fourths of the children born upon the island were bastards, and most of them did not know who their fathers were.

Father Thomas Sherman, the son of the Protestant General Tecumseh Sherman, became a priest because his mother was a Catholic; he seems to have had Protestant honesty enough in him, that upon his return to New York he published under his name, the moral, financial and social condition of the people of the island.

THE BANNER OF PEACE.

(Suggested by a vision which A. C. Doane, of Summerland, Cal., says has been given to him three times, as described in The Progressive Thinker.)

All hail to the banner of Peace and Love!
Unfurl it on land and sea,
Till "wars and rumors of wars shall cease,"
And the nations of earth are free.

"War is hell" has been wisely said;
Why, then, its power prolong?
Have all the arts of peace been tried
In our contest with the wrong?

"The pen is mightier than the sword,"
And Love, than Hate or Scorn,
For Love is Life, and "God is Love,"
And heaven of truth is born.

We are told of an age that must surely come,
In the aeons yet to be,
When the balance of Justice shall move for all,
Till the toilers of earth are free.

Free in the manhood that "makes for peace,"
And the womanhood fair to see,
With equal rights in the world of work,
And a love that the "Truth sets free."

God speed the right, and hail, all hail!
To our banner of new device,
And hasten the day when the olive branch
Finds freedom above all price.

All hail to the beautiful Banner of Peace,
Unfurl it on land and sea.
Till "wars and rumors of wars shall cease,"
And the nations of earth are free.

DR. PEEBLES DANGEROUSLY SICK.

Dr. Peebles reached San Diego, Cal., some ten days ago, to spend the winter, and I must now write you the unpleasant news that the dear old Doctor is seriously ill from the effects of a cold contracted at a large public meeting. Two doctors are in attendance. Inflammation of the lungs and a disturbed circulation are the most apparent symptoms. I will write you again should more serious symptoms appear.

INTERESTING INCIDENTS.

Progression in Spirit Life, Illustrating What Some Spirits Have to Pass Through in Order to Advance.

At a meeting held by the First Society of Spiritualists of Washington, D. C., at the home of Mrs. Willis, 1411 N street N. W., I read an article dictated by one of my guides. It spoke of Christ's endeavor to lead men to an understanding of God through nature's laws, and the oneness of all created life with God.

As I finished, Dr. Willis, a well-known speaker, expressed himself as in sympathy with the sentiment given. In an entranced condition he spoke for ten or fifteen minutes very beautifully. After he sat down a lady, Mrs. Congdon, a clairvoyant, arose and said she wished to tell what she had seen:

"While Dr. Willis was talking a form of a man lay at his feet, dwarfed, shriveled, horrible to gaze at, a being debased in nature—a very worm crawling in the dust. He seemed to be looking at the Doctor and listening more from curiosity than interest; but as the Doctor proceeded to speak he seemed to rise, to expand, to lift his body up and develop into a magnificent form of a physical being. He seemed to imbibe the truth as it came from the Doctor's lips and grow manly and noble."

She was told that he was a man who had been a slave, and was almost white. He had gone from mortal life revengeful, hating all mankind because of his degraded position in life. She said the physical condition as it had been given to her, illustrated the spiritual condition. He had grown in the few moments the Doctor spoke from his former condition to a fully developed nature of wonderful beauty. He stated he would ever be with Dr. Willis and be one of his friends to welcome him to spirit life.

I asked my spirit friends if such a person was really there. They said: "She saw the clairvoyant vision of his spiritual condition illustrated, but did not get just the meaning he wished to convey. The man is standing before you now and wishes to tell you something, as you can hear him speak. "I wish to tell you," a voice just in front of me said, "that the lady did not understand all the revelation. I did not come her to-night as she thought and suddenly grow as the Doctor spoke, but I came to him when he was a child. I am, as she said, almost white. I was a slave. I belonged to the ancestors of Dr. Willis a few generations back, who lived in Virginia. I went out of mortal life as she said, revengeful, hating all mankind, and I would have revenged my life's conditions by injuring all mankind if I had been enabled to do so. I was a Willis. I stayed in the Willis family because I belonged there, I came down the line till I reached this man's life when he was a child. Some influence drew me to him. He gave me new thought. I stayed beside the child, for I was curious to see what he would grow into. It was a curiosity to watch a child that presented such beautiful conceptions of life. It was a new revelation to me of man's higher nature.

"I have dwelt with this human life from boyhood to manhood, and to advanced age. I learned life's lessons with his life. I drew from the same source of instructions that taught him. His school years were education to me. I studied all he studied. I lived his life, was one of the many spirit influences around him. I will ever be with him till he reaches our condition of immortal life."

I cannot give you all he said or the exact language, for he spoke for some moments, and the language was both grand and poetic in expression beyond anything I ever heard from mortal lips.

Those who have heard Dr. Willis speak under control can form some idea of the beautiful language of this spirit, for I would have thought it the Doctor speaking had I not known whence the voice came.

He asked if I would explain to the Doctor just who he was, and that it had been through the years of his life that he (the spirit) had gained his spiritual unfoldment, and now was able to recognize God's oneness with all lives, and reverently acknowledged the supreme wisdom of God's laws in all conditions of life, but regretted man's inability to transmit the knowledge of higher laws in time to save the errors of mortal life.

I asked the Doctor if his ancestors had lived in Virginia? He said his father had cousins who came from Virginia, and I know that his father's grandfather was also grandfather to the Virginia cousins. I then gave him the message from the spirit.

THE LIVING NOW.

To dream of a far-away home "over there,"
Forgetting our duties one to the other,
In helping humanity their burdens to bear
With kindness as unto a brother;
To dream of a home in some beautiful clime,
And shirk from our duties here,
Lessens the glory that on us would shine
In this our earthly sphere.

The secret of living is only in doing,
Of working in the present hour,
In the good acts performed and in wooing
The sunshine, God's sacred dower,
And I swear that each one may be a god,
The evils of Fate to bar,
If the scepter of Justice be only his rod
And Love his guiding star.

If each would make this life divine,
In works of kindly deeds,
And shed from their hearts love's sunshine
To grow life's golden seeds;
If each would make life's object here,
The good from day to day,
Then this world's poor troubled sphere
Would feel its genial sway.

Of all the dark foes that our lives beset,
None greater has ever been,
Than the little faults that goad and fret,
And mar the now and then.
When the finite and infinite shall meet
In the souls of mortal men,
The foes of progression will then retreat,
In the path of human ken.

Rational Spiritualism.

Important Facts Presented.

A Lecture delivered by Mrs. Adelaide K. Brooks, before the Englewood Spiritual Union, at Hopkins, Hall, 528 West 63d street, Chicago, in which are many practical lessons presented that tend toward elevating mankind to a higher plane.

We who are living our human life and treading earth's stormy paths to find the truth, to learn the purposes of life, to scan the pages of nature and learn the lessons of eternity, we joy to feel the nearness of spirit. We know that the weaknesses of the human hearts will not deter our spirit loved ones in their blessed work of love and wisdom, of ever sowing the seeds of truth in this world, our birthplace, and so forever dear. When we are tempted, we know that loved spirits draw near unto us and hold us in a safe path. In our discouragement, in seasons of sickness and mortal agony, we know that we have received the light of their love urging upon us, the truth of immortality, implanting in our bosoms those blessed thoughts that make us strong and brave to meet whatever trial comes. We know that you in spirit people our solitude with blessed thoughts and dear companionship, and as the knowledge which we have received concerning the life beyond inspires us to stronger and higher endeavors, you with us are happy; so you with us step forth to purify, beautify and keep sacred these teachings of spirit return.

For many years we have been reaping the harvest of spiritual growth, without even stopping to winnow the crop gathered, and it does appear to me that though the reapers continue in their work the crop should be carefully investigated that we may learn how much SOUND GRAIN we shall find before we so loudly proclaim that we outnumber all other sects in the land, and claim to be doing more good than all others put together.

When half a dozen are converted to Methodism or any kindred ism, they at once organize and commence the effort to build a home or church in which to meet, relying upon earnest effort and the promise that "where two or three are met together for good the spirit of the Master will be among them"; and a church home is soon built.

It is a very common thing to hear our speakers pour out the vials of their wrath upon churches and the doctrines taught from their pulpits with very little regard for the truth; their statements apply to the church in the past without recognizing the truth taught there to-day; they are coming to the front with very much of the truth given by the spirit world.

It is not well to deceive ourselves with the idea that those outside the church have a monopoly of spirit inspiration.

Until we of the spiritual household can point to our temples where the truths of immortality, morality and spirit return can be listened to, we had better boast less of our numbers in the land.

We claim millions, but where are our places of meeting?

This religion is the outgrowth of a longing for some knowledge of the real life in the beyond, which the churches have utterly failed to provide until it became necessary for those in the spirit world to come to the rescue in order to prevent humanity from becoming completely lost in the dismal cloud of materialism that had settled upon mankind years ago. The quicker we learn that it is not all of Spiritualism to know that there is a life beyond the grave; that our loved ones can return to tell the story of immortality and the life there—the quicker we learn that a life of purity and honest endeavor in earth life tends to prepare us for the real life over the river, and that we will be known there by the deeds done in mortal life, the sooner we will find ourselves in the pathway leading heavenward.

It is no avail to scold about the dim and uncertain light hung out by our neighbors.

Let them care for their own light in all things, while we keep our own ever shining the more brightly, that those who are seeking the truth may be led into paths leading to the knowledge of the true life of the spirit.

Free love and foolishness have been separated from the good and true followers of this grand religion of Spiritualism.

The angels in heaven as well as in earth life have no use for those who teach immorality and intemperance of any kind.

Spiritualism teaches purity of life at all times. We are looking for sudden and quick methods of success, and continually throw away our mental forces in frivolous and non-focused thoughts.

The man who is in earnest not only brings the full powers of his own mind and soul to bear upon his project, but he draws about him the influences of invisible intelligences which people space and come to the aid of the deserving. This law holds good in the spirit life. We find many who are shilly-shallying along life there, just the same as when here. They are simply waiting for something to come their way, and they are still waiting and will be until they stir themselves, get to work in earnest to bring about the desired results.

We must of necessity get from humanity what we give it. If we question our ability to win out, people will question it. If we distrust every person we meet we at once create an unwholesome and most unfortunate atmosphere about ourselves. Believe in yourself; believe in others, and through this right thinking you have a clearer conception of how to live the life. Rational Spiritualism teaches, speak gently.

It is better far to rule by love than fear. Let no harsh word mar the good we may do here. We will learn the law of kindness in utterance so perfectly that it will be second nature to us, and make more music in our life than all the songs the sweetest voice has ever sung.

Spiritualism teaches us that a loving thought is as palpable to the senses as a loving word or tender caress. The spirit at the time of passing out should, therefore, be followed by thoughts of quiet and peace.

Many remain in the intermediate state longer than they otherwise would, for we in our grief hold them in thought which prevents them from passing through the first condition which blends so perfectly with this. They are through this uncontrolled grief on our part made to suffer what they would otherwise escape, and just a little later return to us full of love, hope and strength and thankfulness.

This change called death brings with it added responsibilities for those who pass on are living in a thought world, and a thought reaches them oftentimes clearer than a spoken word.

We must be of constant assistance to one another in small ways as well as great. It is for us to cheer, stimulate and encourage, but not to do the work given to another to perform. There is no such thing as a separate life; we are all one. If we send our thoughts of despondency, hate and envy, we are interfering with the harmony of the universe.

Spiritualism teaches this, and more than this. Are we following these lessons in our daily life? What are we individually doing to assist this great and grand movement along? What is life? Life is self-change, to meet environments. Liberty is self-exertion, to unfold the soul. Oh! that we could arrive at a better understanding of these simple truths that mean so much to us now and hereafter.

HE WHO KNOWS ONLY HOW TO ENJOY AND NOT TO ENDURE, IS ILL FITTED TO GO DOWN THE STREAM OF LIFE IN SUCH A WORLD AS THIS.

Spirits return and tell us that as living beings we are part of a universe of life. As intelligent beings we are in connection with a great circle of conscious intelligences. As spiritual beings we have our place in a moral world, controlled and governed by the Supreme Spirit. The assurance of immortality alone is not enough. We want to know all there is, and all that can be given pertaining to life everlasting.

There is no gate into heaven except at the end of duty.

Real life means faith, hope and love. We are not saved through law. We are saved through life. Life does not mean outward obedience; that is only the shell of life. There is no better land than this in which we are now unfolding realization. We do not have to die to escape suffering. We do not escape suffering by dying.

Often we hear people say, "Oh, how glad I will be to get out of this world." The real facts are, we do not get out of this world. When we pass out into spirit, we are simply more cognizant of each, spirit and material. The only change in us is the stepping out of this body for another.

It cannot be denied that the supreme event in life IS DEATH; it marks the greatest definite crisis. Death is an event in life which closes one phase of its experiences; it is sacred, but ought not to be sad.

Our investigation leads us to believe that this next life is a most practical one in every way. It is not a dream life, thank God, but a reality.

Never has there been a time when character and conduct counted for more than they do to-day.

It is the greatest study of the world to increase the harvest of joy, and lessen that of sorrow. Every new thought, every new theory or invention brought to light with this end in view, is gratefully received by us all.

We are continually beating our wings against the wall of circumstances. We are constantly crying out for freedom. When we get a little better insight into our possibilities we will be in a better condition to receive the many good things that are rightfully ours.

If the kingdom of heaven were waiting for us just the other side of death's door—if we knew this to be so we would lose the incentive for working out our own destiny; but knowing that the kingdom is within us we work unceasingly to bring forth all the truths hidden there.

The world sadly needs leaders. Leaders are thinkers; thinkers are workers.

Every effort must be made to stand alone. It is only by facing trials that we can become masters of circumstances.

Our present strivings for happiness are the creative energies which shall evolve in due time the celestial immortal realm your souls long for.

God's greatest gift to man is the power to reason. Many people make the mistake of regarding the spiritual side of life as all there is to religion, but I believe if God's kingdom is ever to be realized on ths earth of ours, we must put the proper valuation on the material side of life. Religion must be practical, or it is nothing. Our effort should be to see things in their true relation.

No genuine and earnest seeker after truth will allow prejudice or bigotry to stand in the way of carefully and thoughtfully investigating any subject; no truth can be said to be seen as it is until it is viewed in its relation to all other truths.

We prepare ourselves for eternity by doing our day's work while it is day.

What the world needs is more kindness more gentleness towards our fellow-men. Our good impulses are oftimes the best part of us, but we fail in action. There is no defeat for a man with courage. A new door is open when you go out to hunt for something and discover it with your own eyes. That is why our home circles are of so great a benefit, for at such times where perfect harmony abides your unfoldment is far greater than at any other place or time. At these home circles we have learned not only that we keep in tune with these finer forces, but the atmosphere to be found in the home at that time gives forth a strength that spirits find so essential in their effort to teach us that which will be of lasting good. Still further than that our spirit friends love to know that we have set a night or day for the purpose of communing with them, and they prepare for these meetings with as great an interest as they would have done when in the material, I think a greater interest, knowing that we are anxious to learn all we can pertaining to this other life and what they in spirit are passing through. We have positive proof that those who pass on do not in any respect lose interest in us who at the present time are not permitted to go with them as many we meet wish to do.

It is our duty to keep our minds pure that we may at all times be receptive to their teachings. If we do not investigate along progressive lines, which is strictly the Spiritualistic teachings, we, when our spirit friends wish to convey some idea or thought to us, will be in much the same position as the college graduate. The lad finds upon his return home that much he wishes his friends to understand, they cannot because they have been satisfied with the A B C of life.

It is not wise to be satisfied with the first step in the spiritual unfoldment. We need this first step; that is true, but let us go on still further, and unless we furnish a proper condition from an intellectual point, we will not receive the advanced teachings that Spiritualism has to give us.

We frequently hear people in spirit say, "We cannot convey our meaning to you for the lack of words." This being the case, to all who are interested in their loved ones in the beyond, it is reasonable to at once say, "I will put myself in such close touch with these higher forces through which you work, that we can reach each other intelligently."

I have found wherever I go that people are not only ready to listen to a word we can give them in explanation of the truth as we view it, but they are hungry for it. They know that in the religious teachings there is something lacking, and when grief knocks at the door of their hearts, the soul demands relief, asks for an explanation. So we go forth out of the old long-trodden paths seeking for a something that will give us relief in this our great sorrow. The very fact that we go forth to find that support is a positive proof that there is a supply somewhere. We can receive it if we trust and look for it, and once received, it heals the wound so perfectly that smiles, and not tears, are to be seen on the faces of those who know what it is to pass through the valley into the light. There are those here to-night who are in the light. There are those here who are in the dark.

We must remember that we are all one large family; looking for the best there is. Let us, then, consider the conditions we find surrounding all phases of life that we may not grow out of the path of usefulness into one of quiet idleness—let us strive to lead a pure, simple life—when I say simple I mean a natural, lovable, hopeful life—not making one day better than another, but see to it, that each day is a blessed day—remembering that we personally have it in our power to do, or not to do that which mars or beautifies this life of ours. Not only this, but the life we call the higher—higher not of location, for we know that the spirit world interpenetrates this so perfectly that many question their having made any change at all for a time, there being such a close similarity between the two. When I use the term higher, I mean from a spiritual and intellectual point of consideration.

The best there is in us responds more quickly when in spirit than in the material, therefore we term it the higher life. Again from another point we think of spirit as being in a higher condition, from the fact that so many of our demonstrations come to us from spirits who seem to descend to reach us. We are intuitively led to look up in place of down for our inspirations when we do not look within. There are, we all know, many who live a very beautiful life right here in this world, and to all such I would class their life the higher life.

The change called death does not always bring with it a higher condition—not for a time at least. This we know to be the truth. The old teachings as once taught and to-day are still advanced by a few, that one can lead an impure life and at the last moment go straight to heaven if he repent, will one day learn their mistake. Those who believe that we Spiritualists do not recognize God will be enlightened if they take the trouble to look into the spiritual philosophy as we Spiritualists teach it. God to us is an over-ruling force of love, strength and wisdom. This force is to be found in all things. God speaks to us at all times. We find God in everything that prompts us to do good and be good. In the magazine called "Mind," I read this interpretation of God. I think it beautiful:

"The longer I live and the more I see of the struggles of souls towards the heights above, the stronger the thought comes home to me that the universe rests on the shoulders of love—a love so limitless, deep and broad that men have renamed it, and call it God."

I think it time to cease following after strange Gods. As men move upward on the path, they see more and further, and life continually takes on a new and enlarged meaning, and as words express their understanding of what they see, it is manifest, that the language must evolute with the man. When he sees what appears like a new thing, he invents a new word, but habitually he sees not new things, but a new side of an old thing, and then the old word comes to take on for him a new meaning. Thus have all the old words changed form and complexion with time, and thus will they continue to do so long as the old facts stand and grow before us, and this is particularly true of the greater words God, religion, truth, love, marriage and others that hold on mystery; and so I could go on, but it is time to close, and in closing let me say to those who are interested in this great liberal movement, push to the front. Let us who stand at the helm of Spiritualism direct its course ever onward, keeping the banner of purity and truth ever waving in the breeze, that it may lead souls out of the darkness into the light. Self is the only angel who can bid the gates unroll, and when he comes to call you, arise and follow fast. His way may lie through darkness, but it leads to light at last.

THE STRANGER WE TOOK NOT IN.

She dwelt among us for a year;
Scarce thought we gave her, but a tear
Dropped down from many a wistful eye
The day that she lay down and die.
Alone, neglected, friendless, drear,
She turned to God for help and cheer,
Then sank amid the city's din—
The stranger whom we took not in.

Until she died we never knew
How grand the work she lived to do,
And died in doing; nor how faint
She was who uttered no complaint.
She did her duty, sought no praise,
Through weary nights and painful days,
Each day she grew more pale and thin—
The stranger whom we took not in.

But when she died we knew her worth,
And how her life had sweetened earth;
We learned how she for love had longed,
We guessed how greatly we had wronged
The heart that hungered for our care,
And sighed our weary load to share;
But hardly kindness could she win—
The stranger whom we took not in.

So wrapt were we in our own ways,
Our busy round of pleasant days,
We let her struggle all alone,
Uncheered by tender look or tone.
We did not mean thus cold to be,
But, ah, we "never thought," you see.
May God forgive our cruel sin—
The stranger whom we took not in.

SECTARIAN BITTERNESS.

Some Ways in Which It May Be Manifested.

Sectarian bitterness is a bad thing, a very bad thing. We are often told that it is, and that it flourishes among our brethren of the Christian and other religious faiths. It does, but that need not so particularly concern us except when we are the objects towards which it is directed. Then we think we have a right to kick, and no doubt we have if we have done nothing on our part to invite it. This must be left to the decision of the Spiritualist conscience as an aggregation of the consciences of Spiritualists. Anyway, this kind of bitterness appears to be diminishing. May its shadow ever grow less until it disappears entirely!

There is bitterness in another place which touches us more nearly, does our cause many hundred times more harm and which it ought to be in our power to eradicate. It is the bitterness some of us exhibit towards the rest of us. This manifests in various forms, like disease. Just now we have one of these forms appearing in certain spots on the body of Spiritualism. It is not a new disorder by any means. Modern Spiritualism, if not born with it, contracted it in early infancy, probably through inoculation. Certain occasions irritate it from time to time and then it gives trouble. But we may feel assured that it is only an error of mortal mind. The excitation it is displaying may be the crisis previous to its sloughing off.

The medical faculty consider they have made progress when they have named a malady. The next step is to search for its cause. After that, a very long time after in some cases, they discover that with a little wholesome encouragement it will cure itself. It is matter for congratulation that we have taken the first important step in the treatment of an epidemic or endemic, whichever it may be. We have a name for it. It is a very excellent, appropriate, descriptive name. To Daniel Hull belongs the honor and to the English language the glory of the new name. "Ecclesia-phobia."

The symptoms of ecclesia-phobia appear in the mouth, which at the mention of certain words, such as church or Bible, will emit the sectarian bitterness which lies within and is at the root of the disorder. Frequently it affects the hand also which then seizes a pen and deposits its bitterness upon paper.

There is sectarian bitterness which Christians display against fellow Christians of a different opinion, and which both will unite in displaying against non-christians. Let them settle these matters among themselves when they get ready. It would be more profitable for us to attend to our own affairs. The practical acceptance of a few broad principles might help us to do so.

A truth is neither more nor less a truth because some religion or philosophy other than our own has held it or not held it. A practice is neither good nor bad because others have practiced it. A truth, or what claims to be such, must be judged by its evidences. A practice which serves our purpose well and is otherwise unobjectionable, should not be rejected merely on account of its having been utilized elsewhere.

If we object to responsive readings, forms of ordination, baptism, etc., only because churches have them, we are displaying sectarian bitterness. We are Bigots with a big B and may as well own it and drop all talk of liberality. There is no fault to be found with any form or ceremony for being a form or ceremony. The fault, and no doubt it is a common one, is in using the form without reference to its spiritual signification. But though it be true that the spirit often remains undiscovered or unheeded in the letter, the spirit without the letter has no means of organic expression. It may dwell within the soul as the soul dwells within the body, but without form the soul cannot express itself in outer life. Without ceremony, form or ritual of some kind the soul of an organization cannot perform the external work for which it exists.

It is a strange inconsistency that the spiritist who wishes his departed friend to appear in the well-known shape, with old familiar habits and words of former use, and who is even more interested in the name of an inspiring intelligence than in the matter given, and who recognizes spirit only through form, wants his religion without form that it may be more spiritual. The soul takes on a body that it may work in the earth life. The thought is clothed in form of words that it may be understood by others than the thinker. Ideas are symbolically represented that they may be preserved, "hidden that they may be made known." In solitude we may commune with spirit direct, but in our labors among our fellow men we are not yet so developed that we can dispense with form.

Those who perceive this and act accordingly are not necessarily trying to win favor from the churches or the members thereof. If they cared much for these matters they would probably have remained church members. They could do that in this day and their openly professed belief in a knowledge of spirit phenomena would not close the doors of many churches against them. When they are accused of such time-serving hypocrisy, may there not be in the accusation a little taint of sectarian bitterness?

THE PREACHER AND THE CRITIC.

"The truth is mine, and those who see it not
With my clear vision possess but faulty sight;
Who is not Christian doth of virtue lack;
His ills are many, for his heart is black;
Though high ideals serve his constant aim,
All things are naught without Christ's holy name!

"When cruel death tore from its mother's arms
The joyous babe and sent it straight to heaven,
The Christian faith brought peace sublime
To anguished hearts"—there was no stain of crime;
But when the shrouded messenger calls on the wayward son,
What blessed comfort then hath Christian mother won
From page of sacred book and brave interpreters?
A mother's love doth follow e'en to the lowest depths;
Since God is boundless love, can human love transcend?
The thought brings tearless grief that may in madness end.

RELIGION, SCIENCE, AND SPIRITUALISM.

Theism and Science Are in Positive Conflict.

In reading the N. S. A. President's report, under the head of "Some Special Needs," I ran upon an item that produced considerable mental agitation, in these words: "This convention should declare to the world the religious side of Spiritualism and place it squarely and reverently upon the basis of Scientific Theism." This is a new idea for progressive thinkers; for it is notorious that Theism and science are in conflict, and if Theism can be sustained by science it must be an unknown science. Theism is belief in a god or gods. Does he mean to say a god can be demonstrated by science? If so, what science? Will he be good enough to give us an example of Scientific Theism? Or does he mean that belief in gods is proven by science? This is a self-evident fact that needs no proof.

Theism ignores all sciences and attributes all natural causes and effects to a god or "the gods." Theism is made up of faith, creed, theory, dogma, error, superstition—not a thing to be demonstrated or known, but a doctrine to be believed. It is faith in a god, and the dictionary definition of god is Jehovah, and Mythology teaches that Jehovah is god of wrath, blood, war. Here we have it "in a nutshell."

There is no Theism in pure Spiritualism, which is truth, science, knowledge, spirit communion. It is true some Spiritualists hold theistic beliefs, but these belong to them individually. The convention may declare to the world something on the subject of religion according to their views, but will never show "the religious side of Spiritualism by placing it reverently upon the basis of scientific Theism." We get some idea of "the religious side of Spiritualism" in this paragraph of Special Needs in which the president recommends "the establishment of pastorates for our ministry—a plan by which our young people may be induced to enter our ministry—a more devotional, religious spirit in public meetings—a more dignified method of presenting phenomena sacredly consecrated to angels—a division between reverence and irreverence, between instruction and amusement."

This appears like a backward movement into old religious faith, method, ceremony. The principles of awe, fear, solemnity, adoration, devotion, sanctity, reverence belong to Theism and are not popular with us; for we like a reasonable amount of joy, pleasure, cheerfulness, entertainment, amusement. We reverence nothing.

If our religion is to be "placed upon the basis of Scientific Theism" we are anxious to learn what that is. We make a great mistake in trying to place Spiritualism on the same basis and equality with other religious bodies, which would place it in a false attitude; because it is not a religion in the same sense—in the old definition and understanding of the word religion. It has been the opponent of all religious denominations and they stand in antagonism to it. Therefore, Spiritualism is not a religion within the meaning of the civil law.

Mrs. Wilters and Mrs. Vogt report a delightful trip on the Clyde steamer, Comanche, which sailed Oct. 28. They went up the St. John's river. They have taken rooms in the Budington cottage.

Geo. P. Colby is very busy conducting his farm work.

Geo. W. Nickerson will not go South this winter. He has taken a wife and she will keep him safely at Onset.

We are pained to note the transition to spirit life of Henry C. Fogle.

Mrs. Philbrooks new cottage is materializing under the magic hand of Dr. Webster.

E. W. Bond is making thousands of boxes, which are needed for oranges, etc. Oranges are now selling at Lake Helen for 5 cents a dozen. Grape fruit, 60 cents a dozen.

Mrs. Emma Huff, Mrs. Murphy and Mrs. Hardenburg are all going to California this season. It is rumored that Mrs. Huff goes as a bride.

Clerk H. S. Twing and wife expect to go to Lake Helen early in December. Mr. Twing's grape crop was light this year but the prices are heavy enough.

On Nov. 24 A. W. Carrigue and wife, A. S. Wneeler and wife, Chas R. Warren and wife, G. C. Lower and wife, Arthur C. Simaneau, S. A. Littlefield and wife, Master Littlefield, and H. M. Clark sailed on the Arapahoe of the Clyde Line for Lake Helen. Most of them go by way of St. Johns river—that charming route.

My next excursions will sail from New York City December 8 and December 22.

My last excursions sail January 5 and 19, 1904. I shall go with the one for January 19.

Those who intend to join them should write me early, to secure the best state rooms. Enclose 4 cents in stamps for postage on Clyde folders, etc. Full information as to prices, etc., (very low) will be given.

A Constipation Cure That Actually Cures

is Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine. It is not merely a relief. It permanently cures any kind of a case of constipation, no matter of how long standing. It is not a purgative nor an irritant cathartic. These simply lash and hurt the bowels and bring but temporary relief. The condition left behind is worse than the first. Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine does just the opposite. It is a tonic laxative of the highest order. It tones, strengthens and gives new life and vigor to the bowels. Only one small dose a day removes all the causes of the trouble, and leaves the bowels well and able to move themselves without the aid of medicines. It cures dyspepsia, kidney and liver troubles, indigestion, headaches, catarrh of the stomach, and all other diseases and conditions growing out of a clogged condition of the system. Try it free. A sample bottle for the asking. Vernal Remedy Co., 166 Seneca Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

"ETERNITY."

And the Immortality of the Soul.

That cry of anguish, sent vibrating from time to time by John T. Dow through the columns of The Progressive Thinker, has long ago enlisted my sisterly sympathies, but I kept quiet so far, expecting "brothers" to be able to soothe him.

He scorns continuity of life after death, unless eternity is warranted to his individuality. Alas! Will he ever be comforted? I offer my mite in doubtful spirit.

The fact, that nothing existing can ever be annihilated, only disintegrated, counts for nothing with Mr. Dow. He does not care to go down the ages in molecules, to say nothing of atoms; neither does he fancy fragments. I cannot blame him. It is individuality we went to perpetuate, when hoping for immortality. Anything short of it would be as good as annihilation. And yet how small is the number of those who develop real individuality! The majority of what we call individuals are only casts from certain molds, and still they hope for eternal preservation of those precious casts.

If their intuitions are right, how much more stronger must be the assurance of eternal persistency in true individuals, built up by the force of circumstances to a certain degree, but largely by their own faithful endeavor and unswerving aspirations. Should nature's plan permit that these special evolutions from the common sea of humanity be doomed to annihilation? No, it cannot be! A thousand voices shout: "It cannot be! the human ego is capable of working out its own salvation—its own individual immortality."

And yet, where is the proof?

We "feel" the truth, but can we call it "proof"? This is one of many questions, where faith has a legitimate place; where we may feel convinced, without being able to demonstrate undoubtful facts.

Inspirationally, the writer of this obtained no positive answers to similar questions. She was told: "Nothing is perfect even here; few facts are indisputable. We progress from sphere to sphere, but none ever saw the top of the ladder; none ever ceased to strive and aspire; none ever grasped the whole of truth. Whether there is an end of any of us during our march through eternity—we cannot know, neither do we worry about. Who can measure the unmeasurable? Who can prove the unprovable?

To wind up what might seem, perhaps, too much already, let me ask Brother Dow the permission to venture some friendly bit of advice:

Summon the courage to chase away that nightmare of possible annihilation in future aeons, and rock your fears to sleep with cheery songs of hope and faith; and—last, not least—do not forget, that the chances awaiting even the best of humanity, might after all be good enough for you and me.

ITEMS FROM OHIO.

A charter for a new Spiritualist church, the Church of Unity, has recently been applied for by the West End Spiritualists of Canton. It is their intention, we understand, to raise a sufficient sum of money with which to purchase a lot and put down the foundation upon which Judge J. W. Underhill has promised to erect a $3,000 church.

Ernest Stephens, trumpet medium of Columbus, Ohio, held a series of seances in Canton week before last, the circles being large and results good.

Mr. D. A. Herrick and wife of Grand Rapids, Mich., called on a number of their Canton friends last week. Mr. Herrick is preaching for the Alliance Spiritualists in the Independent Church, a church owned and controlled by the Spiritualists of that city.

Mrs. St. Omer Briggs formerly of Canton accepted a call from the Spiritualists of Beaver Falls, Pa., and is at present, we understand, serving them in the capacity of speaker.

An active male member of the Salvation Army of Canton, attended a trumpet seance held in Canton recently, and received such convincing evidence of spirit return and communion and further evidence that the doctrine he preached had but little or no foundation, outside of reforming the drunkard, he discarded his cap and coat and since has been attending Spiritualists' meetings.

A lady (French Catholic) who came to Canton from the east a year or so ago, and whose husband disappeared suddenly and mysteriously last spring, and she fearing he might have met with foul play was advised a while back by a lady friend, to consult a medium, she saying to her, "in case your husband has been murdered, or died from some other cause, his spirit might return and talk to you." She having an opportunity to attend a trumpet seance not long since, took advantage of it, but instead of her husband coming to her there came the spirit of her little girl, who died in infancy, and before she (her mother) came to America. In answer to her mother's question, "What is your name?" the child said, "I was not named before I came to the spirit world." This her mother acknowledged to be true, the child being but a few days old, and not having been christened nor baptised before it died. This spirit child told its mother that it was with her every day, and knew what she did, and to prove its assertion it made mention of a number of things done and tasks performed by its mother, she being employed at one of the leading hotels in Canton. It is unnecessary to say a new world was opened up to her.

A good trumpet medium, lady or gentleman, who can come well recommended, would do well to locate in Canton.

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. C. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all afflictions of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists, and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of "Actina" is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eyes from an operation."

Mr. F. W. Harwood, Springfield, Mass., says that "Actina" cured him of deafness of nine years' standing.

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old.

Robert Baker, Ocean Park, Cal., writes: "I should have been blind had I Not used "Actina."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial, prepaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T. B., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

THE DESCENT OF MAN.

By Charles Darwin. Cloth, gilt top, 75 cents. On its appearance it aroused at once a storm of mingled wrath, wonder and admiration. In elegance of style, charm of manner and deep knowledge of natural history, it stands almost without a rival among scientific works.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Max Gentzke has removed from West Point, Neb., to Cincinnati, Ohio. His address there is No. 13 Sliker avenue, Price Hill, W. Cincinnati. He publishes a German Spiritualist paper, "Lichtstrahlen," and will continue it there. He is doing a splendid work among the Germans.

Rev. Harry J. Moore, of Chicago, the Spiritualist who has been holding meetings in the Woodman hall, Ottumwa, Iowa, on West Second street, for the past several Sundays, performed a christening service. The two children, Ethel Pauline and John Leonard, of Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Wilson, 347 North Clay street, were christened into the belief. In this service, flowers were used instead of the customary water. Rev. Moore delivered an excellent lecture and Miss Eva Mc-Coy gave the usual readings. The meeting was attended by over 200 people.

Mrs. J. E. Waldron writes from Chesaning, Mich.: "The Chesaning Spiritual Society was served the 19th and 20th of November by Mrs. Margaret Lagrange, of Detroit, who gave us two eloquent lectures and one afternoon talk. Too much praise cannot be given her, and we hope to have her with us again in the near future. Surely the world would be better if it had more like her to spread the truth of our philosophy."

Dr. Beverly writes: "Sunday evening at Lakeside Hall, we had a double treat. Dr. Gibbons of Minneapolis, and Dr. Lucas of Denver, gave us some of the rich thoughts of the New Thought Convention. Both speakers are finely developed psychics, and are inspirational lecturers. We shall have the best talent that can be procured all winter. Mrs. Dr. See continues to draw. Everyone attending in the afternoon is guaranteed a test. A gentleman came 90 miles and remained all day and his burden that had weighed him down so long rolled away and he departed light as a feather. Come and bring your lunch. I furnish free tea and coffee. Fine music and entertainment between the meetings. I have a fine meeting in South Chicago, at Tinsley's Hall, every Friday evening, 9251 South Chicago avenue. All are invited to come and help. The platform is free to all advanced speakers and mediums. Mrs. McMenamin, a resident medium, is interested in the work and will do her best to entertain and instruct."

Mrs. A. Vanover, of Greenup, Ill., writes that her many friends will be glad to hear that after two years or more of severe suffering from inflammatory rheumatism, she is almost restored again to health. She would be glad to hear from any of the old friends or new ones, as she needs their cheering letters and healthful thoughts to help brighten and cheer her up after her long siege of sickness.

Frank T. Ripley has had good success at Peoria, Ill. His discourses and spirit messages were well received. He goes to Anderson, Ind., to serve the Temple Society for the Sundays of December. He has January, February and March open for engagement. Address all letters to Anderson, Ind., General Delivery.

M. R. Alter writes from Watseka, Ill.: "Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague have delivered three lectures for our society, ably representing the National Spiritualists' Association to which they are accredited. Good attendance and increasing interest was manifest at each succeeding meeting. We feel thankful as a society and as individuals to have been brought in closer contact with these noble and fearless workers in our cause."

Emma M. Nutt-Moore writes from Mitchell, S. D.: "The meetings here are very well attended—hall full every Sunday; not of Spiritualists simply; out of curiosity some come. A stranger came last Sunday and laid a knife among the articles to be read. In taking it up, I got peculiar conditions, and also an odd way of walking. After I was through I asked if it was right. The man responded, 'Yes, it belongs to a prisoner in one of the penitentiaries east of here, the walk being that of a prisoner.'"

Anne E. Baird of Elyria, Ohio writes: "I wish to call the attention of every Spiritualist society in the state of Ohio to the great need of hearty co-operation with the president and members of the board in their efforts to establish a system whereby every society in the state in need of assistance may be served regularly at small expense. Missionaries are to be appointed by our state president who are willing to go out for a very small sum and work for the good of the cause. To reorganize and organize societies in any locality in the state is our object, or to give assistance where needed. Any society in need of assistance, or any society not at the present time in working order, anyone desirous of organizing, or having meetings in their vicinity, who will write to me at Elyria, Ohio, will be given immediate attention. Carrie F. Curran, of Toledo, and I held a very successful meeting in Lorain, Ohio, Nov. 8. Mrs. Curran gave a very interesting discourse of the 'Science of Spiritualism,' followed with messages by both. Mrs. Curran gave very fine psychometric readings."

Mrs. M. Lang writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "Harmony Circle Spiritual Society is doing a splendid work for the cause of Spiritualism, and attracting many investigators, some of whom join the society. Its Sunday meetings at Sterling's Hall, 344 Connecticut street, are well attended. Chas S. Hulbert, our speaker and medium, is doing a grand work. His wonderful inspirational lectures hold his audience spellbound to the very last word. His messages and descriptions are attracting wide attention, as they are invariably recognized. We give an entertainment on the evening of December 8, consisting of progressive pedro, dance of the old-fashioned kind, and a New England supper, with plenty to eat, to which all our friends are invited."

Mrs. H. J. Eligh writes: "Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly has been in Bay City, Mich., for the past month, giving two lectures each Sunday in the G. A. R. hall. The Spiritualists of this city have not been favored with such intellectual feasts for a number of years. Mr. Edgerly is a refined gentleman, and his guides are of the best. The tests and messages given at these meetings were such that brought comfort and gladness to all who were reached, each being fully recognized and understood, and his coming among us has been a blessing to all who were fortunate enough to listen to the soul-inspiring thoughts expressed through his lips. Miss Mattie Woodbury is once again among us giving readings and holding seances. A spirit came to one of the ladies present at one of her seances, giving his name and place of residence before passing out. The lady did not know of his death, but received a letter the next day from friends announcing his recent death. Her readings are giving much satisfaction among those who have met her."

Surrounded by a number of spiritual friends at the new home of the contracting parties, Edward J. Black and Sarah B. Hipple, both of Allegheny, Pa., were united in marriage, November 18, 1903. Rev. L. M. Oles officiating, spoke of the angel friends: "We could almost feel the rustling of their invisible dresses, which betokened the fact that they are ever near. May life's journey be sweet. May your pleasures be numberless as the sands of the sea, and may trouble be a rare visitor in the home."

Mrs. M. S. Corselius writes from Spokane, Wash.: "Spokane has recently been highly favored, and all thinking people have enjoyed a rare intellectual feast, by listening to several profound lectures delivered by Dr. Temple Duchesne, of India, who is a member of the London Society for Psychical Research. Dr. Duchesne also taught two different classes in psychology. Dr. Duchesne left Monday for Seattle to engage in similar work there. He made many warm, true friends while in Spokane, who will be glad to welcome him back again after the holidays. He was urged to return and organize a society for psychical research which he has agreed to do, and also to remain some time in our city and deliver a course of lectures and work in the interest of the society."

T. F. Lee, of Lakeport, Cal., writes: "The symposium has been read to a letter. It strikes the well-springs of consciousness. It opens man's being unto himself. It touches the mainspring of life and opens the door of self. It dissects and analyzes self. It calls aloud unto self and asks the question, 'What art thou?' One feels as though self has been under review, which is of much more importance than the book, The Great Psychological Crime. You have opened a new era unto man and showed him what the twentieth century expects of him."

G. H. Brooks lectures the first two Sundays in December, in Conneaut, O.; the last two in Ashtabula, O. His address while in Conneaut will be South Harbor street; While in Astabula, he cannot tell at the present writing, but all mail and telegrams should be sent to South Harbor street, Conneaut, Ohio. He will respond to calls for funerals.

Harry J. Moore has the months of December, January, February and March open for engagements. Mr. Moore during the summer refused to make engagements with societies, as it was his purpose at that time to go to Colorado Springs, Colo., and spend the winter with his wife. Societies will make no mistake in employing Mr. Moore, as his work in the past speaks for itself. Address all letters for Mr. Moore to this office.

Josephine Morris writes: "The Progressive Thinker is conducted in a spirit of toleration and fairness that appeals to my sense of justice and right. It sets an example which all would do well to imitate who desire the triumph of truth."

A. W. Phillips writes: "On Thanksgiving Day, Prof. and Mrs. R. S. Ray, of 207 Lincoln avenue, were very pleasantly surprised by a large number of their friends who came laden with large expansive smiles and good cheer. The Professor and his wife bore themselves graciously while the ladies of the party presented them with a mass of cut flowers and deftly decorated the dining-room with ferns and chrysanthemums, not forgetting the 'Turk' and fixings. A photographer 'took' the party in different posings. After properly separating and masticating the turkey and galaxy of side dishes, under which the table groaned, the time was pleasantly passed with vocal and instrumental selections, recitations, and concluding with dancing in the evening, not till the 'wee sma' hours' did the last guests depart, wishing the Professor and wife many more returns and the best of everything."

Mrs. E. C. Burgess writes from California: "You have my best thoughts for your welfare and the welfare of The Progressive Thinker. I have been very much interested in the recent symposium, 'The Great Psychological Crime,' and feel that it will do the cause of Spiritualism great good."

W. C. Mann writes from Louisville, Ky.: "The Progressive Thinker is always a welcome guest at my home, and should be the pride of all true Spiritualists."

Mrs. Emma Greene writes from Topeka, Kansas: "We are enjoying the expressions in regard to The Great Psychological Crime, and hope to learn much from the discussion just begun."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in the columns of The Progressive Thinker are for sale at this office. Bear this in mind.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

Aug. Rechet writes: "The Society of Spiritual Truth which meets at Crosby Hall, 423 Classon avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., had a large and intelligent audience Nov. 22. The platform was occupied by Mr. Deleree, whose subject was 'Can Spirits Return?' Mr. Rasmussen then gave a number of tests."

Judd M. Covey writes from Oskaloosa, Iowa: "Many thanks, Mr. Editor, for the pamphlet entitled Tricks and Traps of Bogus Mediums. I consider it a book that all Spiritualists should possess." The above pamphlet is for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

C. H. Toler writes: "After reading the splendid symposium, it is remarked by materialists, agnostics and all classes of intelligent people that Spiritualists are not afraid to have Spiritualism freely examined and criticised. In this regard the same class of people mention with emphasis as being in marked contrast with the orthodox churches—Catholicism especially. The Progressive Thinker is appreciated as a fair and fearless champion of genuine Spiritualism."

George Hamilton Brooks writes: "If there is any one thing more than any other that should make The Progressive Thinker a particularly bright light, it will come to us from the path you have entered as indicated by your many practical, sound, common-sense editorials. Your sound perception and reasoning cannot help but reach the thinking people. Your rational statements, backed up by correct judgment makes your editorials alone worth the subscription paid, and that is saying much when I consider the many bright minds that are contributing their efforts weekly. I consider The Progressive Thinker the best spiritual paper ever published."

W. C. Mann writes from Louisville, Ky.: "Services are still being conducted at the home of Bro. Val Speed. One Sunday lately we had quite an interesting meeting, christening of the children by the Rev. Mary Mann. Lecture by Sister Gunewald, who handled the subject well. The test seance was conducted by Mrs. Mann. Many beautiful messages were received. The ladies held a fair at Sister David Cohn's, November 19. We hope soon to be able to build a church for the good of Spiritualism."

Mrs. C. W. Slawson writes: "We are among those who are glad to know of such a book as The Great Psychological Crime, as we believe the world will grow better more quickly and surely when each one looks to the God within, who will surely answer from the Silence those who live in a recognition of their oneness with him. This comes from the country where we have none of the pleasures of the social and religious communion with others, but where we are each day working out our own salvation the best we are able, with The Progressive Thinker."

Judd M. Covey writes from Oskaloosa, Iowa: "We have at last succeeded in organizing a little society here, which we have christened The First Spiritualists Society of Oskaloosa. Our valued friends, Harry J. Moore and Mrs. Eva McCoy, came especially from Ottumwa to assist us. We met at the pleasant and comfortable home of Mrs. Geo. Newbrand, on South Market street. A charter with the state association was promptly signed and forwarded. Below are the officers elected by acclamation: Mr. J. B. Adlon, president; Judd M. Covey, vice-president; Miss Idella Larkin, secretary; Mrs. Philip Herbig, treasurer; trustees, Mrs. Jessie McEwen, Dr. P. J. Elsworth, Simon Covey. All good, reliable mediums and lecturers are invited to correspond with our secretary."

Oscar A. Edgerly writes: "During the month of November I have filled a very pleasant and I believe successful engagement with the First Spiritualist Society of Bay City, Mich. I find a very earnest band of workers here, largely made up of the members of the ladies' aid society, known locally as the Willing Workers. They are indeed well named, for while they have many difficulties to contend with their work is doing much to advance our cause in this community. On Tuesday, Nov. 24, I lectured and gave tests for the society at Chesaning, Mich. I found there a very finely organized society of which Mrs. W. E. Waldron is president. In concluding my work (for a time) in this part of the country, I shall speak on the evening of Sunday, Nov. 29, for the society at Saginaw, Mich. For the month of December, I am engaged to serve the First Temple Society of Spiritualists of Newport, Ky., and I anticipate remaining south at least until the first of February. I am at present open for engagement for the months of February and March. I noticed in the last Progressive Thinker the reference to the illness of Brother Moses Hull, also of Mrs. A. E. Sheets. I sincerely hope that in the near future they both may be blessed by the return of full measure of health, for we can but illy spare such able workers from the field of labor. I think The Progressive Thinker is MORE INTERESTING THAN EVER. I can hardly wait from week to week for "Thinker Day to come around; to us workers in the field it is as good as a letter from home."

J. C. F. Grumbine is located in Boston at the head of the First Society of Universal Religion, which is devoted to "The System of Philosophy Concerning Divinity," and pure old-fashioned Spiritualism. The hall is packed each Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m., in lecture room 29, Pierce Building, Copley Square. His classes are held at his residence, 1285 Commonwealth avenue. See his advertisement on last page for special book bargains.

Mrs. Flora L. Furse writes from Mitchell, S. D.: "The Spiritualists here under the guidance of Emma M. Nutt-Moore, met Nov. 23, and organized the First Progressive Spiritualist Society of Mitchell. The president, Mrs. C. V. Priest, and secretary, Mrs. Flora L. Furse, would like to correspond with mediums in regard to securing a trumpet or materializing medium. Mrs. Emma M. Nutt-Moore has done a grand work in organizing a society here. Her lectures have been inspiring and she has made many converts and innumerable friends. She is capable of organizing societies successfully, and any community in need of a number one medium and speaker will do well to secure her services."

Mrs. Lilly LeSieur writes: "The Band of Harmony, auxiliary to the Church of the Soul, will hold its annual bazaar the third Thursday of December—the 17th, afternoon and evening. We wish to inform our many friends and patrons that it will be to their advantage to see what we have in the way of useful and ornamental articles, as we shall have just the very thing you will want to make Christmas presents with. We shall have a very unique variety of art specialities, first-class perfumes and toilet goods, fancy needle work, home-made candies, a large variety of ladies' aprons, both fancy and kitchen kind. A fish pond will be a special attraction for the children. We will serve a New England supper. A first-class palmist has been engaged for the occasion."

The subject of Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond's discourse next Sunday, December 6, by request, is as follows: "Is the Warfare Between Good and Evil to Last Always?" Masonic Temple, Room 309. Services commence promptly at 11 a. m.

Emma M. Nutt-Moore writes from Mitchell, S. D.: "We came to Mitchell, S. D., in September, and for the past two months have lectured and given spirit messages. The audiences have been fine. While there are not many Spiritualists here, there are quite a large number of inquirers. On last Monday evening a society was organized; will send for a charter from the N. S. A. The following officers were elected: President, C. V. Priest; vice-president, E. N. Norton; secretary, Mrs. F. L. Furse; treasurer, Mrs. C. Halfhill; trustees, Mesdames Cox, Priest, and Goodwin; organist, Miss Maud Snow; ushers, Messrs. Cox and Moore. The society will be known as the First Progressive Spiritual Society of Mitchell, S. D. South Dakota is coming into line in the progressive movement, and I feel well repaid for the long trip I made in order to reach the friends of Mitchell. The secretary's address is Mrs. F. L. Furse, Champany Block, Mitchell, S. D., who will be pleased to hear from speakers and mediums coming this way."

One who has watched her work, writes from Texas: "Mrs. Laura B. Payne is to begin a six months' engagement in Fort Worth, Texas, the first of January. Fort Worth and her people are to be favored with the helpful ministrations of a truly praiseworthy worker. Mrs. Payne is a woman who has come into the knowledge of Spiritualism through practical experience; has tried its applicability to the sad and sordid scenes in life. This has produced a vein of extremely sympathetic inspiration, and Mrs. Payne's heart is in her discourses; they not only please and instruct but they touch the better part of the listener and bring into activity the holier impulses of the nature. Her work in Texas in the various places where she has ministered, Houston, Dallas, San Antonio, Flatonia and several of the smaller places, has been of such an order as to attract the intelligent and refined class, and surely Fort Worth is fortunate to secure her services."

EXPLANATORY.

To the Editor:—Will you permit me to make a correction in The Progressive Thinker this week?

Since writing the article which appeared in the last issue of The Progressive Thinker, I have learned through a very kind private letter from our sister, Clara L. Stewart, that I was mistaken in my conclusions as to the action of the Wisconsin delegates, and also to our sister's own vote at the late convention, and while it is one of my principles to fearlessly speak the truth, I also believe in as fearlessly acknowledging an error if one has unconsciously been made, especially if by that error an act of injustice has been done to any individual. From our sister's letter I find, that the state of Wisconsin was not represented on the floor of the convention, and therefore could not have cast the vote charged to them in my article, and I gladly apologize and acknowledge the error.

Sister Stewart further explains, that as delegates both Mr. Hull and herself stood as representatives of the school, and not of the state, and kindly chides me for taking it for granted that her vote was cast against the petition. The inference was a natural one on my part, for which probably Mr. Hull's "we" was mainly responsible, but as Mrs. Stewart now explains, her vote was cast for "every officer that was elected," she had a right to feel that an injustice had been done her by this inference, and I hasten to make this correction, since I should deeply regret any unkind act of mine to so grand and noble a worker.

Thanking you for the space in which to make this correction, I remain,

Yours Fraternally,
CAROLINE CATLIN.

Mass-meeting at Rockford, Ill.

The mass-meeting held in M. W. A. hall, Nov. 15, at Rockford, Ill., was largely attended and greatly enjoyed by all. Delegations were present from many neighboring towns. Mrs. Alice Silvia Barry gave in her pleasing manner many beautiful thoughts in the afternoon lecture, followed by spirit messages through Mrs. D. L. West, of Elgin, and Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom, of Chicago.

A business meeting was then held and a circuit formed of societies of northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin. Mr. Orrin Merritt, of Genoa, was elected president; Dr. Wilber E. Hammond, of Rockford, secretary; Mr. Robert Schmus, of Rockford assistant secretary, and Hattie Hollister Howe, of Rockford, treasurer. It was decided to hold a grove meeting in June, for which the best talent will be secured.

Refreshments were then served in the hall and all enjoyed a social hour. A circle was then formed, and many young mediums gave expressions of spirit power. The lecture of the evening was given by Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, of Whitewater, Wis. She gave us inspiring spiritual truths we will long remember, and wish for more. Mr. Daniel McDougall then gave us a few well-chosen remarks, and Mrs. Bloom followed with messages. Several spiritual songs were rendered throughout the programme by the Psychic Research Society choir. We feel that in meeting with other workers we have broadened our field and furnished food for the soul.

POST OBITUM, EXTRA MUROS.

We, the immortal Egos, rise and stand
Clear-eyed beyond the tumult of the earth,
Knowing at last life's meaning and its worth,
Seeing the rainbow o'er the tempest spanned,
And reading, now, the mystery of Pain,
Teacher divine whose hand we touched with tears;
Angel of light who led us through the years
And changed our broken toys to golden gain.

From the pure heights of perfect peace at last
Beyond the power of time, secure above
Its changes, unto Time in deathless love
The radiant souls look down in pity vast.
For blinded eyes are clear and hard hearts just.
Soul speaks to soul alone, and gladly turns
In deeds of kindness. Each immortal yearns
Back to the brother-souls enshrined in dust.

We are not dumb. Nay, listen; you shall hear
The old glad words of greeting. You shall hold
The hands death's pressure left so icy cold
And know us as we are—not far, but near.
Closer than life can hold its loved, are we.
We breathe about you, loving and as fond
As once you knew us, and no dim "Beyond"
Debars your presence. Lift our eyes and see.

You hold us by the bonds of loving thought
And heavenly aspirations. Life, the dream
Breaking, has set us in the morning gleam,
And this is all; no other change is wrought.
The tomb? It cannot hide us if your will
Is yet to see our faces. Dust and clay
May only shut the earthly clod away.
Soul speaks to soul, spirit to spirit still.

Lift up your eyes, beloved, for we are here,
Your tears still hide us from you though we stand
Waiting the welcome greeting of your hand—
Your own who love you and who linger near.
Death is the master key to life's vast store,
Whose treasures are man's heritage. Oh, friend,
We pass to Life's beginning, not its end!
We only rise above the fretful roar

Of angry waters. From the troubled foam,
The tempest's rage, the terrors of the night
Into a haven of divinest light
We pass, and know its holy name is Home.
And that home still our earth. We are not changed—
Nor is earth altered save in this—above
Its soil our spirits tread its paths in love
From none removed, from naught we loved estranged.

Look not upon the grave. How should it hold
That essence, pure, eternal and divine?
Lift not your gaze beyond the stars that shine
Far in the cloudless blue, serenely cold.
Picture no mighty throne of majesty
Lit with the dreadful glories of a god.
Our feet beside you on the familiar sod
Yet hold their place—if you but will to see.

Close not your hearts to us when we are come
Glad-eyed to bless and comfort. Bid us stay.
Only your will can blot us from the day,
Only your will can strike our voices dumb.
Open your homes and hearts, for we are free
As love shall welcome, or forbid to pass,
We hold our arms to you and cry, "Alas!
Poor, loving, blinded eyes that will not see."

POWER OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM

Startling Secrets Laid Bare by an Adept in This Mystic Art.

How Men and Women Are Fascinated and Held Spell-Bound by This Strange, Mysterious Force.

The Long-Lost Secrets of the Magic Power of the Wise Men of Old Fully and Completely Revealed at Last.

Prof. Robertson, President of the Columbia Scientific Academy of the city of New York, is an adept in the science of personal magnetism. He probably knows more about the subtle art of personal influence than any living man. He has just written a new book, entitled the "Secret of Power," the copyright of which he has given away on condition that 25,000 copies of the first edition be distributed to the public absolutely free of charge. Within recent years hundreds of persons have purchased advertised courses in hypnotism for the purpose of learning how to influence others and get along in life. Hypnotism is not personal magnetism. Prof. Robertson has determined to put a stop to what he considers a gross imposition on the public by having his new book distributed throughout the country absolutely free of charge, thus giving all persons who really want to master the real secrets of personal magnetism an opportunity to do so.

Prof. Robertson's book covers the power of personal magnetism, the art of fascination, magnetic healing, the wonders of scientific character reading, from the hand, face, head and hand-writing, scientific second sight, the development of the mysterious X-ray faculty, and Prof. Robertson's original secret method of quick physical development. It is the most comprehensive and exhaustive work on personal influence that has ever been published. It is the only book that we have ever seen that really starts the student out on a scientific basis, that puts him on the right road. Prof. Robertson's methods require no subjects on which to practice, no long weary hours of study in which to learn. The moment you read his instructions you can apply them, you can wield a wonderful influence over a man even a thousand miles away. This may seem incredible, but we have tested it for ourselves and can vouch for its truthfulness. You can read the secret natures of people at a glance; you can cure diseases and bad habits without drugs or medicines; you win and hold friends as if by some magic, irresistible force; gain the love and affections of others; become a great social or business leader; you can acquire wealth and influence if you will but develop your hidden powers and master nature's secret laws. But do not confound Prof. Robertson's great work with advertised courses on hypnotism. Prof. Robertson can tell you all about hypnotic power. He knows it from A to Z. But what you want is something that you can use without the knowledge of anyone else; something that you can learn without a lot of subjects on which to practice; something that will develop in you that subtle, unseen force that controls, charms and fascinates, that makes you supreme master of every situation. Prof. Robertson's free book describes your wants better than you know them yourself. It is highly endorsed by prominent ministers of the gospel, lawyers and business men. It is intensely interesting from start to finish.

If you want a copy, write at once to the Columbia Scientific Academy, Dept. 242A, 1941 Broadway, New York. The books are going very rapidly. A cablegram has just been received from Russia asking for one of these great works; so highly are they prized by scientists all over the world.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin, Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. Student: Q. What authority is there in the so-called sentence of Pontius Pilate?

A. Perhaps the reader will be interested in this somewhat famous "sentence" and it is here introduced in full.

Sentence pronounced by Pontius Pilate intendent of the province of Lower Galilee, that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death by the cross. In the seventeenth year of the reign of the Emperor Tiberius and on the 25th of the month of March, in the most holy city of Jerusalem, during the pontificate of Annas and Caiaphas, Pontius Pilate, intendent of the province of Lower Galilee, sitting in judgment in the presidential seat of the Praetors, sentences Jesus Christ of Nazareth to death on a cross between two robbers, as the numerous and notorious testimonials of the people prove: I. Jesus is a misleader. 2. He has excited the people to sedition. 3. He is an enemy of the laws. 4. He calls himself the son of God. 5. He calls himself falsely the King of Israel. 6. He went into the temple followed by a multitude carrying palms in their hands. Orders: The first centurion, Quintus Cornelius, to bring him to the place of execution, forbids all persons, rich or poor, to prevent the execution of Jesus. The witnesses who have signed the execution against Jesus are: 1. Daniel Robani, Pharisee; 2. John Zorobabel; 3. Raphael Robani; 4. Capet. Jesus to be taken out of Jerusalem through the gate of Tournea.

The discovery of this precious "historical evidence" is given with minuteness. In searching for Roman antiquities in Naples in 1280, a plate of brass was found on which in Hebrew language it was engraved. It was preserved in the sacristy of the Certini siang until the French army occupied Italy when it was transfered to the chapel of Caserta.

Now there is not a single fact in support of this story. The whole is one of the most bungling of the countless forgeries of ancient manuscripts, with which the priests in the seclusion of the monasteries proved their doctrines.

The advocates of Christianity must be hard pushed when they bring forward such a barefaced deception as proving their claims.

The "sentence" was written by one who was so ignorant of the history of the time, that he awakens pity mingled with contempt for his rascality.

The story of Pontius Pilate is a myth, for it could not have been an account of actual occurrences.

A Roman governor never passed judgment on the religion of a province. Rome received all religions of the subject nations on equal footing, and had a temple where all deities, little and great confronted each other. Hence the claims that anyone might set up, of being a Messiah to the Jews, calling himself son of God, or going through the streets with palm branches, were not crimes punishable by Roman laws, and a Roman consul had no jurisdiction. There was no occasion for engraving this sentence on a brass plate, for at the time, had the sentence been made by Pilate, for it at the time had no significance more than occurrences of everyday. There was no cause for its being signed by witnesses. The names of these witnesses not taken from the Bible, have an unmistakable modern sound. Robani and Capet are almost as modern as Jones and Smith, and such names appearing in the beginning of the first century are as incongruous and reveal the fraud.

WISHING.

Do you wish the world were better?
Let me tell you what to do:
Set a watch upon your actions,
Keep them always straight and true.
Rid your mind of selfish motives,
Let your thoughts be clean and high,
You can make a little Eden
Of the sphere you occupy.

Do you wish the world were wiser?
Well, suppose you make a start
By accumulating wisdom
In the scrap book of your heart.
Do not waste one page on folly,
Live to learn, and learn to live,
If you want to give men knowledge
You must get it ere you kive.

Do you wish the world were happy?
Then remember day by day
Just to scatter seeds of kindness
As you pass along the way;
For the pleasures of the many
May be ofttimes traced on one,
As the hand that plants an acorn
Shelters armies from the sun.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

No one will dare maintain that it is better to do injustice than to bear it.—Aristotle.

HYPNOTISM ANALYZED.

Different persons carry on their analysis of hypnotism from different standpoints, one arriving at the conclusion that its practice is wonderfully good, while another assumes that its influence is dangerous and wholly evil.

HYPNOTISM.

Its Many Blessings Are Pointed Out.

Effect follows cause unerringly, and itself becomes a cause. Every act is the effect of a prior cause. This law was first discovered in physics, but is equally true of morals. A machine or instrument constructed for a special purpose will perform the kind of work intended by its designer if it is properly constructed.

Man is a very complex machine or instrument through which thought or action may be produced or transmitted by another man, and the quality of the thought or action may be good or bad according to the degree of excellence of the instrument. Every man is capable of influencing some other man, and when that capability is exerted in an unusual degree, we call it hypnotism. This power is universal among living men. It is the power of mind over mind, but we have discovered that the so-called dead are able to exert this power over living men, and control them in their actions and thoughts, and these persons are called mediums, and may be rendered unconscious of their actions. Poets, musicians and inventors bow before the inspiration of the movement and consciously or unconsciously receive the thought or impression transmitted. But not alone to these. It is precipitated upon all humanity and is the greatest guiding influence which blesses the human race. It is the medium of communication between the physical and the spiritual worlds; without it mankind would have no guiding counselors but the animal senses.

Scientists find that a suggestion may eradicate bodily disease and banish an unworthy purpose from the mind and divert it from criminal intent. It has already become the central idea of mind cure, faith cure, Christian science and all new thought and progressive therapeutics.

But on the other hand if a man's moral nature is sordid and selfish, he is likely to be influenced by like suggestions from both mortals and spirits, and perhaps becomes a criminal—not because of evil suggestions, but because a selfish organization is unable to resist them. If an instrument, for instance a piano, is faulty in its construction, it will give forth discordant notes. It is not the fault of the musician but of the imperfection of the piano.

Hypnotism affords a solution of the question, How to prevent crime. Surround the subject with pure suggestions and influences and abandon the idea of punishment. Hypnotism thus becomes a beneficent force instead of an engine of destruction.

Mediumship is universal. We find it among the medicine men of the savage tribes, and it has been the inspiration of the prophets and seers of all the ages.

Let not the selfish man attribute the desire to do wrong to the suggestions of evil spirits and wicked associates. The trouble is with himself, and like the badly constructed piano, inharmony is the result of his own sordid nature.

We now ask the question, What is hypnotism? The materialist cannot fathom it. He calls it intuition, inspiration, and is unable to define the terms—thinks vaguely that it is electric or magnetic, and regards it as a malignant force. But the definition lies deeper. Hypnotism is soul-force. It is projected by the very heart of the universe, and employed by angelic agencies for the good of humanity. Hypnotism and love walk side by side, and are destined to be the power that will eliminate disease and crime and unite mankind into one brotherhood.

Hypnotism an Exceptionally Dangerous Influence, Producing Untold Evils.

To the Editor:—I send herewith a clipping from the Leavenworth Times, to show what is going on, and how a hypnotist is allowed to escape the punishment which he deserves.

Lansing, Kans. C. W. CARR.

Arthur Moorehead, a young man 20 years of age, a resident of High Prairie township, came to the city Friday with a load of honey which he disposed of and then thought he would have "his fortune told." He had recently met a friend of his in High Prairie township who had his future revealed to him so the young man called on Prof. H. Best, No 518 Walnut street Friday afternoon. What really happened there is not known, but the young man has a story to tell which is interesting and which he says cost him just $165 to hear. True, he received in return an "electric" belt, and yesterday morning through the assistance of Officer Clark and Chief Taylor got his $165 from Best.

He Made a Few Passes.

Moorehead says he called on Professor Best and that the man made a few passes in front of his face much in the manner that hypnotists do and then rubbed the palms of his hands over his forehead. He remembers rather hazily what followed which he told Officer Clark and Chief Taylor and it was repeated to a Times representative.

The officers state that Best first told Moorehead that he was on the verge of insanity and would surely be insane within two days, but that he could save him by his treatment. He then asked Moorehead how much money he had on him and the young man replied that he had $15 and some money in the bank. Then, as Moorhead tells it, Best made the passes in front of his face, told him to go to the Manufacturer's National bank and draw $150 and bring it to him. This Moorehead is said to have done and the young man states that after he had done this the hypnotist put the bank book into an envelope, addressed it to Moorehead, care general delivery, and told him to leave the book in the postoffice for ten days when he should return and be treated. The book was obtained at the postoffice yesterday by Moorehead.

Best Returned the Money.

Moorehead, it is said, went to his home in High Prairie township Friday evening, but says he did not go to sleep during the night knowing that he had done something he should not have done, but says he was unable to come out from under the influence of the susceptible something until yesterday morning. Then he realized what he had done and immediately came to the city and called on Officer Clark. The officer took him to Chief Taylor and the three went to Best's rooms. There Chief Taylor placed the reader of futures under arrest and took him to the police station. He at first concluded to place Best in the city jail, but afterwards told him he could be released under a bond of $200. Best asked to have the matter settled, promising to return the money to the young man if he would not be prosecuted. This was agreed to and Best turned over to Chief Taylor $165 which the chief in turn gave to Officer Clark and he to the young man.

THAT WONDERFUL STORY.

Part One.

Last Sunday we heard of the preacher,
An orthodox preacher was he;
He preached us a doctrinal sermon,
Which startles such sinners as we.

He told us about Father Adam,
And also about Mother Eve;
All about that old serpent
That came to beguile and deceive.

And, while the good preacher was preaching,
The bones in my body did quake,
To think, that the "Belle" of fair Eden
Would sit down and talk with a snake.

O, wonderful, wonderful story;
I wonder how long it did take,
For Satan to compass our ruin
By the aid of that wonderful snake?

O, why didn't old Father Adam
Come out with his gun and his knife,
And boldly defend the fair creature
That soon was to be his good wife?

With even a spade or a shovel,
He could the vile monster have slain
And saved the defeat of Jehovah,
And the race of sorrow and pain.

But, the strangest part of the story,
Minerva in sorrow doth tell;
"All mortals who cannot believe it Must suffer forever in hell!"

Part Two.

Now listen how God, the Almighty,
When Satan the victory had won,
Determined the fate of poor Jesus,
His only begotten, dear son.

It seems that the wrath of the Father,
When he learned what the Devil had done,
Could only be silenced by shedding
The blood of his innocent son.

Then went the decree forth from heaven,
Proclaimed by Jehovah, most High;
"My innocent son, not the Devil,
Nor either the serpent, shall die!"

Then meekly to earth on his mission,
Fulfilling the will of his God,
He laid down his life for the people,
And poured out his most precious blood;

And thus was the wrath of Jehovah—
According to heaven's decree—
All turned upon innocent Jesus,
The snake and the Devil go free!

Incredible, pitiful story—
It saddens the poet's poor heart—
O! why didn't God slay the Devil,
And clean up the snakes at the start?

But harken! and hear the conclusion,
For more would the preacher deceive,
"All mortals are booked for damnation
Who cannot this story believe!"
—Minerva.

Items From California.

W. J. Colville is now very busily engaged in California lecturing daily in San Francisco and vicinity. Sunday afternoon lectures in Flood Building, 809 Market street, draw audiences too large for the hall. On Sunday, Nov. 8, the topic discussed was "Ben Hur," the dramatic version of which has recently attracted immense crowds to the opera house. On Sundays at 7:30 p. m., Mr. Colville lectures to almost equally large audiences in Loring Hall, 11th and Clay streets, Oakland. During the week lectures are given in Flood Building, San Francisco, on Tuesdays, Thursday and Saturday at 8. p. m., on all sorts of topics connected chiefly with what is popularly designated New Thought Philosophy, and a class for special instruction in Suggestive Therapeutics is conducted in same place on same days at 3 p. m.; also in Loring Hall, Oakland, on Mondays and Wednesdays at 3 p. m. In Alameda, at Mr. Colville's residence, Knaresborough House, Clinton avenue, he is conducting very interesting meetings on Wednesdays at 8 p. m., and Fridays at 3 p. m.

At that address Chas. J. Anderson, favorably known as "the boy orator," is now successfully functioning. Many visitors make appointments with him and get most satisfactory psychometric readings. Mr. Anderson is a fine inspirational speaker and is now lecturing in the various halls in Oakland and elsewhere with marked success and his meetings in Alameda on Saturdays at 3 p. m., in Knaresborough House, are awakening much intelligent interest. This young man who is now just 20 years of age is a valuable acquisition on any platform, as his talent is versatile, his language excellent, and his general demeanor such as to insure him a sustained welcome from the cultured elements of any population.

California is now very much to the front as an active center for dissemination of spiritual philosophy. Mr. Leadbeater's lectures in San Francisco and Oakland have proved a brilliant success; he is now on his way to San Diego, Los Angeles and other southerly points.

Weather has been extremely propitious on the whole though some rain has fallen.

The Philosophical Journal, under the able management of the energetic Mr. Chase, its present editor, is making forward strides, and literature of a progressive spiritual character is selling rapidly. X.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

THE IMPUDENCE OF IT.

What this retrograde Romish Church would do for the children of America is seen from what she has already done for the countries where her rule has been undisputed. Just read carefully the ratio of illiteracy in nations ruled by the Catholics, and you can form a good idea of their baneful influence.

In the Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, last week, was another one of its strong editorials on papal politics, under the heading, "The Impudence of it!" The editorial quotes this recent utterance of Cardinal Gibbons:

"The system of public education in this country is imperfect and vicious, and undermines the religion of our youth. We want our children to receive an education that will not only make them learned, but pious men and women. We want them to be not only polished members of society, but also conscientious Christians. We desire for them a training that will form their hearts as well as their minds. We wish them to be not only men of the world, but, above all, men of God.....

"The remedy for these defects would be supplied if the denominational system which now obtains in Canada were applied in our public schools."

The Christian Standard then says:

"There is little doubt that the present public attack of Romanists on this American institution is largely due to the recognition and encouragement given them by the present administration. President Roosevelt's presumptuous message of condolence to the Vatican on the death of Leo XIII., and his letter to the Federation of Catholic Societies, expressing sympathy in their work, delighted every faithful subject of the pope throughout the world. High government officials in Roman Catholic countries expressed surprise, and even amazement, that the President of the United States should recognize the papacy in such a significant way as he has. Then, when this convention of the Federation of Catholic Societies, to whom the President addressed such a cordial and sympathetic letter, declared for the restoration of the temporal power of the pope and in favor of the Romanizing of the public schools in the Philippines, and when the secular press of the country, Republican and Democratic, raised no word of protest against the anti-American course of the President and Secretary of State, is it any wonder that the Roman hierarchy in America judged that the time was ripe for a concerted attack on our public schools?

"But even with the encouragement they have received, the cool impudence of the Cardinal and his echoes in sitting in judgment on the imperfections and shortcomings of our school system is almost beyond belief. Their utterances can be explained only on the ground that they are writing mainly to hold their own enslaved and superstitious church members. Certainly they can not think that their utterances will be taken seriously by any person well informed on the subject of Roman Catholic education, for intelligent people know that these priests and bishops should be the last people in the world to bring their own system into comparison with our public school system in the matter of intellectual, social and moral results.

"The nations where general ignorance prevails, where social sins are most prevalent, where criminals are most numerous, are predominantly Roman Catholic. Spain and Italy and the South and Central American republics and Mexico tell the story of the inevitable fruitage of the Roman Catholic system of education, as contrasted with the public school system of Anglo-Saxon and Germanic people."

The above is literally true. The Standard then gives this convincing illustration of Rome's methods of "educating":

"In the summer of 1901 Cincinnati entertained the International Endeavor Society and the Catholic Knights of St. John. If a single saloon had the hardihood to show a bit of color or print a word of welcome to the Endeavor Society, we did not discover it. If they had done so, the Endeavorers would have regarded their welcome as an insult. Outside of their regular customers, the saloons were quiet as a funeral when the great throng of Christian Endeavorers were in the city. Following the Endeavor Convention, the Catholic Knights made their appearance, and, as a matter of course, they were welcomed by the church authorities. As we recall, they went in a body to the cathedral and listened to a sermon from a high church dignitary. But the most spectacular part of their welcome was from the majority of the saloons of the city. Everywhere over drinking places were profuse decorations and banners hung out with the inscription, "Welcome, Knights of St. John." The appearance of the great majority of these religious Knights indicated that the saloons made no mistake in their cordial welcome. The contrast between the general appearance of the Endeavorers and the Knights was well reflected in the attitude of the saloons toward the two representative bodies. These two incidents are a demonstration which render vain and hypocritical the pretentious statements of the Cardinal and of his subject bishops and archbishops about the comparative defects of public school education. These Endeavorers were educated in the public schools, and received their religious instruction in churches that foster patriotism along with religion. The Knights were reared under influences hostile to our public school system, and listened to religious teachers who taught them that their first allegiance is to a foreigner—a would-be temporal ruler on the banks of the Tiber.

"Results everywhere stamp the Roman system of education with moral, social and intellectual inferiority. By decrying our public schools the Roman hierarchy would rob the children of the Roman Catholic church in America of their American birthright, and doom them to an inferior position among their fellows.

"But let no one suppose that the parochial schools of the Roman Catholic church in the United States, inferior as they are, are fair representatives of Roman Catholic inefficiency and superstition in matters of education. Under the influence of our public schools these church schools have been compelled to adopt some of the features of our modern free school education. What a Roman Catholic school is, and especially what it is not, will be seen in countries where Rome has complete control. Thanks to the influence of Protestant civilizaton and of free American institutions, Roman Catholic schools in this country are something of an improvement over the educational system, or lack of system, which prevails in Roman Catholic countries.

"What this retrograde church would do for the children of America is seen from what she has already done for the countries where her rule has been undisputed. The ratio of illeteracy in per cent; in Italy, 38 per cent; while in the United States the illiteracy of the white population is 7.7 per cent—of the whole population, about 13 per cent. But a large part of this 7.7 per cent is to be credited to ignorant Roman Catholic immigrants from southern and southeastern Europe.

"We have not pretended to say that the public school system is perfect; but results demonstrate that, compared with the sectarian system of Romanism, it is an ideal scheme of education. The truth is, it is the superiority of the state-supported institution over their own system that leads Rome to seek to destroy our public schools. An institution which has been and is a chief glory of American civilization she would drag down to her own inferior, unpatriotic and immoral level. She would change the states of the American Union into new Spains and Italys and Ecuadors. She would turn back the dial of human progress to the time of the Inquisition, and make the pope of Rome the political as well as the religious head of a stagnant nation and an enslaved people.

"The impudence of the Cardinal's proposal is only overshadowed by its hypocrisy and its utter disregard of the accomplished results of our Anglo-Saxon civilization made free by the Protestant reformers from the curse and blight of a religious despotism that flourishes only amid general ignorance and superstition."

Passing of Dr. George Dutton.

I was saddened to read in a recent Progressive Thinker that Dr. George Dutton had passed from the mortal plane. At the time of his transition and for some weeks thereafter I was in Michigan and did not see weekly numbers of the paper named, so the tidings although belated some three months or more, struck me with the force of freshness. On Sunday, November 1, while Mrs. Amidon, a medium of Flint, Mich., was deeply entranced, a message came from Mrs. Warne, saying a physician we used to know had come to the spirit spheres, but no name could be given. I ran over in my mind the professional colleagues and eminent specialists who had added their efforts to the struggles to keep her in the body and wondered if I would find some one of them gone to the thither shore on my return home. Until the trance state passed off the medium did not learn my identity, although she was an old friend of Mrs. Warne. Seven or eight months before, after a sitting with her the same medium had detected my profession and asked my name. I answered her by writing an assumed one, partly under a spirit of fun but more in anticipation of future visits to her. Her control said the medium had often looked at that slip and said "that was not his name." Arriving home I seemed to find confirmation of the message in the tidings of Dr. Dutton's death.

Earth not only misses one more upright citizen, devoted husband, loyal friend and worker for the betterment of humanity, but a physician who was a teacher by temperament and the right of great natural endowments supplemented by painstaking preparations therefor. He simplified whatever he wrote upon. More than once I have advised students who in the class room of medical college, were bewildered by the mass of detail given in the technical and pretentious works on the structure of the human body to use Dutton's Anatomy as a guide out of their perplexities. It is an excellent work for reading and study by non-professional people because it omits non-essentials and defines all professional terms it uses. Mrs. Dutton, whose temporary address is the Oakland Hotel, Chicago, is prepared to fill all orders for the Anatomy, and also her husband's works on consumption and rheumatism, medical notes, Etiopathy, or Way of Life, and twenty-three numbers, twelve bound in cloth, of his Health Journals.

Carlyle has said "only the spirit thou workest in can have worth, or continuance"—that test should ensure a long continued demand for the above fruitage of Dr. Dutton's conscientious labors and earnest convictions.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Within the past four weeks the writer has officiated at the funeral service of four of the tried and true ones in our ranks: Mrs. Delia Clark, of Cherry Creek, and Mrs. E. Leonard, of Limestone, N. Y., Mrs. A. Mosley, of Little Cooly, and Mrs. Clark Cole, of Erie, Pa. All were splendid types of noble womanhood, weaving the grand principles of Spiritualism into every fiber of their being; each beloved, esteemed and respected by a large circle of friends. Mrs. Leonard had rounded out her earth life with very near 94 years. The others nearer the meridian of the mortal state. Through their transition earth is the loser and the spirit world the gainer. RENDING THE VAIL

A Most Remarkable Book Concerning the Existence of Man, and All Things, and All Being

It Was Written by Materialized Forms at the House of J. H. Pratt, Spring Hill, Kansas, William W. Aber Being the Medium.

"Rending the Vail" is pronounced by Col. R. T. Van Horn, of Kansas City, Mo., as a most remarkable work. That Col. Van Horn is fully competent to judge, we will say that he has been a member of congress for four sessions, an editor of a leading daily, and a profound thinker along scientific lines. He says:

"The principal contributors to the book are four in number: Dr. W. H. Reed, who is called the chemical control of the medium; William Denton, Thomas Paine and Michael Faraday. There are numerous others giving a few incidental and mostly personal messages or dissertations on scientific, philosophic, religious, theologic and occult topics—from world-building, the origin of life, or religions, of scientific discovery, and the laws of cosmos or nature—in fact the entire field of human thought. The limitation seemed to be only that of the spectators to ask questions.

"In addition to this mass of messages, there are in the book about sixty illustrations—44 of them portraits. These were drawn by a form standing out in the room at a desk, the form or personality to be sketched at the doorway of the cabinet and the finished picture handed to one of the circle and filed away by the secreetary.

"What will attract the attention of even the non-Spiritualist reader is that the topics treated by Prof. Denton, Thomas Paine and Prof. Faraday, are in kind, in thought and style with those to which their active lives in this world were devoted—in literary character as different here as in their works extant on our book-shelves.

"The Spiritualist press and its contributors are just now discussing a number of questions as to the nature of spirit, of spirit return; the want of agreement between those returning as to conditions in their present world; the limitations—that the organism of the medium imposes upon communication, Also phenomena, inspiration and such, to many, knotty subjects, are freely and fully discussed.

"The work is not written by the medium nor by any one connected with the society or circle. All was delivered by personalities distinct from either, written down by the secretary as spoken, or if in writing, filed away. At the next meeting the minutes in full were read, corrected, or criticised by those present and by the authors, and when approved by both laid away for the book.

"The work is unique in the history of spirit communication. Swedenborg, Andrew Jackson Davis, and Maria King wrote under inspiration. Newbrough wrote Oahspe automatically by typewriter. "Rending the Vail" was written and spoken by full-form personalities and is printed as given. One remarkable thing about the writing may not be amiss here. As high as 1,200 words a minute were written by actual timing by the watch.

"It is but just to the secretary to say that his work has been admirably done—not only faithfully and efficiently, but with excellent taste. There are no dogmatic parentheses, no interpolations or ipse dixits of the scribe. He simply states that "a form purporting to be" So-and-So, "appeared and delivered the following"—stating whether it was oral or in writing.

"In reading the book, and I have read it all, this modest, self-retiring, literal rendering of these extraordinary happenings by the secretary has been a source of constant admiration. It adds character to the book and inspires constant confidence in the integrity that from the first page to the last enhances the respect and interest of the reader."

This remarkable book, "Rending the Vail," is for sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker. Price $1.75.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,
(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. "THE UNKNOWN"

-BY-

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

CRIME, ITS CAUSE AND REMOVAL.

Crime is the doing of an act contrary to human law. Thousands of crimes are committed against natural law of which human law takes no cognizance. Natural law means cause and its natural effect; human law stands for an arbitrary effect of an assumed or artificial cause. In this article I will review briefly two aspects of crime. First, its primary cause; second, the rights of criminals and the duty of the community toward them.

Wherever human law contravenes the principles of natural law it is unjust and unrighteous and will surely bring forth its own quality of fruitage. We need not pass beyond modern history to find the cause of nine-tenths of the crime which has hung as a dark pall over our planet for ages and with increasing blackness and horror winds its putrid folds around and amidst each avenue of industrial life, paralyzing the energies that tend toward progress and a higher civilization. When Pizarro entered South America he found many of its inhabitants enjoying in most respects a higher civilization than we have to-day; crime was of very rare occurrence, the land and most of the wealth was held in common, the sexes mated at twenty and were given enough to equip a home and assigned a piece of land sufficient for their support, and wherever these conditions were found to exist in the new world harmony, happiness and contentment resulted as the natural fruit of an industrial system in harmony with the higher principles and spirit of natural law. There were no special privileges, no poverty, no tyrannical corporations or trusts, no governments operated by a few, in the interest of the few, under the false pretense of serving the many.

So right here we have found the cause of crime; "Special privilege" is its name, granted by the community for filthy lucre; and the community is the criminal; not the individual.

It is puerile and childish to say that man is naturally disposed to crime. What is nature but cause? and causes make conditions and environment, and of these are made up the woof, warp, and web of human life. Greed and Selfishness beget and multiply themselves an hundred fold, therefore crime cannot be cured; its cause must be removed. You can never pump the water from a well which has an inflow greater than you can discharge with any force at your command, your only hope is to stop the flow; if men are too cowardly to attack the flow when found, then blame yourselves for your cowardice, not the water or the cause of its flow, for it exists only by your permission. Because special privilege is hoary with age and has been an active agent in the growth of trade, commerce, education and general progress, is no reason for its continuance, any more than should a false, soul-enslaving theology claim perpetuity for similar alleged reasons, for special privilege has also been the principal agent as I have shown in the production of 90 per cent of all crime and the waste of millions annually in the vain attempt at suppression; and its garments are saturated and dripping with the heart-blood of humanity! Yea, the shrieks of innocent children, the moans and groans of the helpless and the aged, give forth a torrent of discordant, soul-chilling vibrations from every fibre and pore of its polluted shroud.

A glance now at the second aspect of crime under any human environment.

Man is a finite creature with a divine nature, prophetic of infinite possibilities; no two beings are alike, hence each can at best only know himself or herself; you cannot know the weaknesses, the temptations and intricacies of an ego other than your own; hence Jesus said, "Judge not, lest ye be judged; for whatsoever ye mete unto others shall be measured to you again." Jesus appealed to their sense of selfishness, but I appeal to a higher sense and say, judge not, for ye can judge no one righteously. There is plainly an occult meaning in this command of Jesus, for no one could consistently expect to be judged by any other form or method than his fellow-man; so he evidently meant as I do, that all human judgment is finite and imperfect, consequently unjust; I do not quote Jesus as authority, but because his assertions in this case are in strict harmony with nature—in other words, they accord with all the facts bearing upon the relationship between man and man and between the community and the individual.

Saint Paul writes in the same strain to the Romans: "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man! whosoever thou art that judgest, for wherein thou judgest another thou condemnest thyself, for thou that judgest doeth the same things." In its true sense there is no crime save that which is intended as such by the actor, and nature rewards all moral or immoral action strictly upon this basis; outside of this however, the effects of actions are alike, whether intentional or otherwise. "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." One of the old prophets was inspired to say this; it means just what I am asserting, that the divine ego, the spirit within, is the only one having the right to judge itself, and this it must do, sooner or later the divine spark will assert itself and pronounce judgment upon every action, motive and thought of its own selfhood.

What presumption, yea, what blasphemy, then for finite man to attempt to do that which nature has so abundantly provided for. Every penalty meted to man by man is construed as revenge, hence begets revenge in return; our penal institutions are like a putrid sore where the mucous overflow constantly enlarges the area of disease and corruption. Our duty to the criminal is to avoid every pretense of punishment, that all discipline should be merciful and manifestly for his good. He should be shown that he is deprived of his liberty for the sole purpose of protecting the community and for his reformation; no time sentence should be passed, only so long as a reformation was effected, to be decided by a competent commission. We have discovered the bacilli and microbes which cause physical plagues and premature death; how strange it seems that so few great and noble minds are probing in search of the deadly microbes a thousand times more destructive of human happiness and progress than those affecting merely physical life; those which affect the moral, mental, and spiritual life of every son and daughter of humanity.

As commercial interests have stood in the way to prevent the destruction of a false and enslaving theology, so the same hydra-headed monster stands athwart the golden path that leads to equality of opportunity, to man's spiritual progress, and to the gates of the New Jerusalem. B. F. FRENCH.

LIVING IN SPIRIT.

Dwelling Here and Now in the Spiritual Realm.

It is not necessary to be out of the body to be a denizen of the spirit world. Every medium, clairvoyant, intuitionist or sensitive is a partial dweller in that realm; for a consciousness of causal vibrations intimates that he or she is more or less detached from the body to be able to sense that which is not strictly material; as heat, cold, pain, etc. If not incorporeally, at least, so far as certain life principles or forces are concerned that have a higher spiritual than material vibration.

The spirit body is composed of living forces or principles, which express themselves through the physical body as senses, feelings, desires, impulses, tastes, and operating in conjunction with the organs.

The so-called sense of taste, for example, connects with the stomach; and though a life-principle of the spirit body, operates for a material effect until it assumes a higher vibration, when it becomes more choice in its demands—the first intimation that it is outgrowing its animalism.

As this continues it also manifests a higher sensibility (unless perverted by epicureanism), which often comes en rapport with the food before touching it, and thereby makes known its good or bad quality to the possessor. If permitted to unfold or grow by following its dictates for temperate eating, instead of stimulating an appetite as erroneously believed to be a duty (for nature will not allow the body to starve), it not only becomes an acute analyzer of food, but can immediately sense if begrudgingly given, if prepared by an unclean cook, if it contains healthy or unhealthy magnetism, and frequently extract some of its nutritive qualities to its possessor by mere rapport, just as the spiritual-minded attract thought or inspiration by virtue of a higher mental vibration.

That such have attracted to themselves the extract of drugs needed for little ailments by simply entering a pharmacy, is well known, and may be attributed to this higher vibration of the sense of taste. It is prophetic of its operation in spirit—provided it has been spiritualized or made positive to this degree, or overcome as a controlling physical passion.

In like manner every physical sense or other material longings, desires, impulses, etc., are subject to spiritualization, and largely aided by our own will towards that end—each of which has its compatible reward for something higher than that sacrificed materially or controlled animalistically, just as the joys of love are felt as selfishness or hatred is controlled.

Coming en rapport with causes in this manner is living in spirit to the extent that the sense or qualification is enabled to vibrate superior to its antithetical desire or impulse. And when all have been thus spiritualized we will have no further use for a physical body.

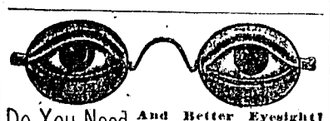
TESTIMONIALS OF CURE.

My Dear Mrs. Dobson-Barker:—I want to say, I have been ailing for thirty years and you are the only one that has done me any good.

MARY JANE PEARCE.

Perris, Riverside Co., Cal., Feb. 21, 1903.

Mrs. Dobson-Barker—Kind Friend:—As I tried your treatment four years ago, and it helped me so much, I will write to you again to see if you are still practicing, and if you are I want to send to you for another month's treatment, for I can safely say that you did more for me than all the doctors on earth, and I hope you are well and still practicing. May the good angels bless you, is my prayer. Respectfully,



MINA M. YANG.

CLAIRVOYANCE.

J. C. F. GRUMBINE'S Great Book can be had in the NEXT TEN DAYS ONLY for $1.00; reduced from $2.00. NOW IS YOUR CHANCE. Send $1.00 at once. It was the first and best book ever published on the subject of Clairvoyance. Teaches you how to lift the veil of sense and matter, see spirits, find lost treasures, read crystals, locate mines, read the future and past without losing your consciousness.

READ THESE PRESS NOTICES:

Mr. Grumbine has clearly and logically presented his subject in a manner at once simple and profound. "Suggestion."

"Your work is marvelous, epoch-making." —Lillian Whiting, Boston Correspondent to Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Admirably unfolds the law and nature of Clairvoyance." —Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"A remarkable book. Originality and depth of thought, combined with perspicacity, characterize every page. It is evident in every sentence that this volume is the offspring of inspiration."—The Progressive Thinker.

"I consider the book on Clairvoyance a most remarkable and practical work on development. It harmonizes well with the Hermetic Schools of Philosophy, in which I learned the mysteries of adeptship." Prof. Geo. W. Walrond, Astrologer.

"It is the best work on the subject of Clairvoyance thus far, and points out an alluring goal of true spiritual development." Mind, New York City.

"It is a revelation." —Light, London, Eng.

THE GOSPEL OF NATURE

Is a most excellent work by Dr. M. L. Sherman, assisted by Prof. W. F. Lyon. Heretofore it has been sold for $2, but the price now has been reduced to $1. It is a book that will interest and instruct. It contains 280 pages, and is full of suggestive thoughts. Dr. Sherman was a medium of rare qualities, and his work is a reflection from the celestial spheres.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,

Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crockee. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

Historical and critical review, with replies to an objection. By G. W. Brown, M. D. Price, 15c.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE.

By the Editor of the National, with Preface and Notes by Peter Eckler. Illustrated with views of the old Paine Homestead and Paine Monument, at New Rochelle; also portraits of Thomas Clio Rickman, Joel Barlow, Mary Wolstonecraft, Madame Roland, Condorce, Brissot, and the most prominent of Paine's friends in Europe and America. Cloth, 75 cents.

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A VERY SUGGESTIVE WORK.

It Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The Process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is Unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1. For sale at this office.

WISDOM OF THE AGES.

Revelations from Zertoulem, the Prophet of Tlaskanata.

A Mine of Valuable Reflections and Suggestions.

This work was automatically transcribed by George A. Fuller, M. D., a gentleman who stands high as a lecturer and medium. It is a mine of valuable reflections and suggestions. The paragraphs are short, suggestive and inspiring. Every one of them leads to something higher, grander, nobler. Price $1.00.

DEATH ITS MEANING and Results.

By J K Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting narrative relating a series of wonderful psychic manifestations occurring in the writer's experience. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

BODY AND SOUL.

BY J. CLEGG WRIGHT.

This volume consists of a course of lectures delivered in the trance state, and is certainly no small contribution to the study of the soul. It is a good work to open the eyes to the difference between the deductive and inductive process of mind. Bound in cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

BAD STOMACHS CURED.

We Can Positively Cure Any Case of Stomach Trouble Not Caused by Cancer. Do Not Take Our Word. TEST IT YOURSELF.

FREE TEST TREATMENT. Do you suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or stomach trouble in any form? If you do why not let us cure you? We do not mean HELP you by giving you a Soda Compound Tablet or some of the other patent "Dyspepsia Cures." We will positively and permanently cure you. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble; will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the stomach, and make you strong and healthy as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousands of those we have cured of stomach trouble in all its forms and stages; but they would not be facts or proof to you—only words of thanks and praise. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself. And believing that a practical test would be more convincing to sufferers than all the testimonials we could print and absolutely prove its great merits, we will send anyone desiring it a full two weeks' trial treatment absolutely free.

If you have stomach trouble and have failed to get relief, write us at once and learn by practical test what we can do for you. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, Ltd., 23 Main Street, Battle Creek, Mich.

ISA THE PROPHET AND JESUS THE GOD.

BY WILLIAM HENRY BURR.

The Mohammedan Review recently announced a most important discovery, namely, the tomb of Jesus Christ at Bringar, Cashmere, in the upper Punjab. He was an Israelite named Isa Sahib and Shada-Nabi (Prince Prophet). The Review is responsible for translating Isa Sahib Jesus Christ. That person, says the Review, did not die upon the cross, but, being taken down, recovered and fled, traveling eastward to India.

The story of Isa the Masich (healer), as recorded in the Chronicle of Al Tabari, conflicted about A. D. 900, was printed in The Progressive Thinker several years ago. And I contend that the Moslem Scriptures antedate both the Christian and the Hebrew Scriptures. I now submit a parallel of the two legends:

Isa the masich (healer) was the son of Mariam, a young maiden of the temple, whose chief priest was Zachariah, her uncle.

Isa was begotten by Gabriel in the guise of her young cousin Yussuf, a choreboy in the temple, the son of a deceased carpenter.

Mariam and her child fled to Egypt, escorted by Yussuf, who was not her husband.

They fled to escape a slaughter of infants, ordered by King Herod.

Mariam and Isa remained in Egypt thirty years.

They returned to their own country.

Herod was dead. So was Zachariah, having been slain for alleged adultery with his niece Mariam.

Zachariah's son Yahya, a little older than Isa, became Isa's first disciple.

They were cousins.

Isa wrought miracles in Egypt in his boyhood, beginning at twelve years of age.

He made a bird from clay which flew into the air.

In Judea he restored sight to the blind, cured leprosy, raised the dead, and wrought other miracles.

In spite of these miracles the people remained infidel and said he was only a magician.

He claimed to be the apostle of Allah, sent to confirm the law, and to call the people to Allah.

He announced the coming of Ahmed (Mohammed).

The ministry of Isa was two or three years.

He had twelve disciples, who went about with him.

The people sought his life.

One of his disciples betrayed him for thirty dihrems.

Another, Simeon, declared he had forsaken Isa.

He was accused of being a magician and a deceiver.

King Herod (Archelaus) gave the accusers orders to slay him.

The people seized Isa and bound him hand and feet.

His disciples forsook him and fled.

The people dragged him to a place where they had ready a stake to crucify him.

When they would bind him to the stake Allah removed him from their sight and gave the form and aspect of Isa to their leader Isoua.

Isoua remained on the cross seven days.

Mariam came to the cross every night and wept for her supposed departed lord.

After seven days Allah caused Isa to come down from heaven to his mother. Then her heart was comforted.

The same night Isa came to his mother's house and caused Yahya to be called.

There remained only ten disciples. Simeon, who had denied his master, was no longer a disciple; another, not named, had betrayed him, and had slain himself.

Seven of the disciples met their master.

Isa sent forth the seven disciples to preach. To Greece and Rome he sent Paul and Peter (not Simeon or Simon who had denied him, but another disciple named Peter), to Babylon he sent Thomas, to Kairouan Philip, to Ephesus John, and to the Hedjaz Bartholomew. James and Yahya were to remain at Allia.—Aelia Capitolina of the Romans.

Yahya, the son of Zachariah, was beheaded by King Herod after the translation of Isa to heaven.

Jesus the meshiba (anointed) was the son of Mary, a young maiden of the temple, whose chief priest was Zacharias.

Jesus was begotten by the Holy Ghost, as announced by Gabriel, and his mother was espoused to an aged carpenter named Joseph.

Mary and her child fled to Egypt, with her husband Joseph, a "holy family."

They fled to escape a slaughter of infants, ordered by King Herod.

The holy family remained in Egypt three years.

They returned to their own country.

Herod was dead. So probably was Zacharias; we hear no more of him, and he was very aged.

Zacharias's son John, a little older than Jesus, proclaimed the coming of the latter.

They were cousins.

Jesus, on his journey to Egypt, wrought miracles, as recorded in the apocryphal gospels.

He made birds from clay, when a boy, which flew.

In Judea he restored sight to the blind, cured leprosy, raised the dead, and wrought other miracles.

In spite of these miracles the people remained skeptical and said he cast out devils by Beelzebub.

He claimed to be the Son of God, sent to fulfill the law, and to set up the kingdom of heaven.

He announced his second coming, to judge the world.

The ministry of Jesus was three years, more or less.

He had twelve disciples, who went about with him.

The people sought his life.

One of his disciples betrayed him for thirty pieces of silver.

Another, Simon, denied that he knew him.

He was accused of calling himself the Son of God.

The chief priests, elders and captains of the temple arrested him.

They brought him before Pilate for condemnation.

His disciples forsook him and fled.

Pilate reluctantly condemned him to be scourged by his soldiers and then crucified.

He was affixed to the cross and crucified between two thieves. After two hours he bowed his head and gave up the ghost.

Jesus was on the cross about seven hours.

Mary, with two other Marys, stood by the cross at the crucifixion.—John xix:25.

After two nights Jesus rose from his tomb, and was first seen by Mary Magdalene and other women.

The same night Jesus appeared to his disciples assembled with closed doors.

One disciple, Thomas, was absent. Simon, who had denied his master, was yet the chief disciple, but Judas had betrayed him and had hanged himself.

Eleven of the disciples met their master.

Jesus sent forth the eleven disciples to preach. From the canonical and apocryphal gospels it appears that Simon Peter went to Rome, Thomas to India, Philip and Bartholomew to Lydia and Greece, John to Ephesus, while James remained at Jerusalem. As for Paul, he was a later convert who visited various countries and ended his days at Rome.

John the Baptist, the son of Zacharias, was beheaded by King Herod before the ascension of Jesus.

These parallels could be multiplied and their variations tend to favor the priority of the Arabian or Moslem story. How much of either is credible, or whether any part thereof is historically true, let the reader judge. But assuming the existence of such a person as Isa or Jesus, which or what was his true phonetic name?

The vernacular of Judea and adjacent lands 1900 years ago was Aramaic or Syriac. The ancient Syriac alphabet was phonetically the same as the Hebrew, though the shape of the letters was very different. In Murdock's Pishito version of the New Testament, claimed to be as ancient as either the Greek or Latin codex, and written in the very language spoken in Palestine at the beginning of the Christian era, the name of Jesus is spelt with four Syriac letters, namely, Jud, Shin, Vau and Ee, answering to Y, SH, W or V, and the Hebrew Ain, to the Greek Omikron, or short O. The nearest conjecture I can make as to the sound of the name is ISHUA.

So, then, the name of man may have been, Isa, Ishua, Iesha, Ieshua, Iosha, Ioshua, Issa, or what not. Anyway, it was not Iesus or Iesous, for neither Latin nor Greek was spoken in Judea or its adjacent territory.

And now comes the alleged discovery of the tomb of Isa Sabib in the Punjab, and the Mohammedan Review declares that he was Jesus Christ. Credat Christianus!

THE SNOW.

We live in a land of sunshine,
So, when our darling died,
We simply pushed away the flowers
That littered the green hillside
And made her a bed of blossoms,
This dear little child of ours,
And covered with sweet, from head to feet,
We left her asleep with the flowers.

And all through the balmy winter
I think how the pine trees fling
Their green embraces above her—
The dear little sleeping thing!
And all through the spring and summer,
Such blossomy, golden hours,
I think of her still, asleep on the hill,
With her little friends, the flowers.

In the tender southern autumn
My fond heart feels the same;
I know the woods are burning
With rare, exquisite flame.
The wondrous, brilliant torches,
Of shining goldenrod,
Light up wild ways, through dreamy haze,
For the little maid and God.

But last night, in the silence,
A something white and chill,
Came and sighed at my window:
"I've been on the churchyard hill."
I started up on my pillow,
I shook in a storm of woe;
I gave her to God and the flowers,
And not to the night and the snow.

Oh, baby! Poor little baby!
Chained to the churchyard hill;
Come back! come back to your mother,
Her heart can shelter you still!
There was only a sobbing silence,
Bitterly soft and low;
I felt for God in the darkness,
But found the night and the snow.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

One day as Martha and her mother were at work in the kitchen Martha suddenly asked, "Mother does God change?"

"Certainy not. He's the same to-day he always was."

"Well, he used to have his people go into a country and kill everybody, babies and all, but people would think it dreadful to do such a thing now. What made God do so?"

"The people were wicked, and he wanted them destroyed, I suppose."

"The babies were not wicked, and if God wanted the people killed, why did he not kill them himself instead of making other people murder them?"

"I don't know. I wish you would 'tend to your dishes and stop askin' questions."

"But I want to know," persisted Martha.

"Well, you never will. The Bible don't tell us much about some things, but it tells us all we ought to know. Elder Reams says that God never intended us to know about some things, and only a fool will try. You want to stop thinkin' about such things, or you'll be an Infidel next. Why, I could reason myself into infidelity any time, but I won't. I jest make myself stop. Elder Reams says that God permitted many things in those days just to furnish us with warnin's and examples."

"Well," said Martha stoutly, "I don't believe Elder Reams knows any more about it than I do. I can read the Bible and that is all he can do."

"Marthy Janet Weston!" said her mother, lifting the broom with which she was sweeping, threateningly, "If you talk in that way I will knock you down if you are as big as the side of the barn," with which dire threat Mrs. Weston usually concluded every argument wherein her daughter got the best of her.

September came and brought the annual camp-meeting, which to the Weston's was a most importont event, for it was the one break in the monotony of their existence. At camp-meeting Mrs. Weston found staid and gloomy-faced women who had renounced the fashions of the age, and with them she could talk over old times and bewail the broadness and frivolity of latter-day religion. As for Martha she enjoyed the companionship of young girls who did not deride her parents' religion nor make cutting remarks about her style of dress, for Mrs. Weston sternly forbid the wearing of feathers, flowers, jewelry or in fact anything that cost a little extra money. This year Mr. and Mrs. Weston were full of excitement for the noted Elder Reams had promised to honor the encampment with his sanctified presence.

It was a pleasant afternoon near the close of the camp-meeting week, and the cold-hearted had become warm, and the faltering filled with zeal. Religious fervor was running high and many wild and foolish things were being passed for truth every day. A soft golden light bathed the rock-strewn hills and flickered through the leaves of the stately sugar maples and beeches that formed the grove. Upon rough board, backless seats, were crowded some three thousand people. Among those on the front seats sat the Westons, listening to a slender, well-dressed man a little past middle age. It was apparent from his speech that he was well educated—an unusual thing for the clergy of his denomination—and it was also apparent that at some period of his life he had been accustomed to good society, for he had the manner and bearing of a gentleman. His voice was clear and penetrating and he spoke with the earnestness of strong conviction, and he had deep magnetic eyes that seemed to compel the attention of his audience. He announced his text: "To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord and the day of vengeance of our God." As he talked he walked to and fro upon the rude platform which served for a pulpit. Behind him hung a large chart upon which appeared many strange and terrible beasts, which looked as if they had been conceived by the brain of a savage or a madman.

Elder Reams was certainly an orator after a sort, and he quoted Bible texts with surprising fluency. From the chart and the Bible he quoted, he gave the history of the world from the creation of Adam six thousand years before, up to that present moment, and proved conclusively from the prophecies that the end of the world was at hand. Every statement he made he clinched with a "thus saith the Lord," and his assertions were greeted with loud "Amens!" "Praise the Lord!" "Glory to God, I believe it!"

After he had finished an argument, proving that the trumpet might sound and the dead arise before the next morning, he began a passionate appeal to the sinner to make his peace with God before it was too late. The deaf and lame and aged who had gathered upon the front seats were hurried away and a general stir now ran through the audience as the elder in soft, appealing tones began to call upon the unsaved to come forward and seek salvation.

Many of the more zealous clergymen began walking up and down the narrow aisles between the rows of seats, pleading with those they were especially interested in to come forward and seek the Lord. The singers began to sing, "'Tis the last call of mercy that lingers for thee!"

Martha felt a strange throbbing of the heart and her sensitive face flushed and paled. A strong power seemed drawing her toward the mourner's bench. She tried in vain to recall the doubts of the past months. As she tried to close her ears to the hymn and the elder's pleading voice, her mother grasped her arm and said: "Marthy, do you go with the rest now."

Martha did not move.

"Marthy Weston," said her mother sternly, "it is nothing but your pride that keeps you from startin'. Do you go along! Do you s'pose I want to see my own daughter burned up?"

Martha felt a touch upon her shoulder and looking up saw her father bending over her, with tears streaming down his cheeks. "Go, Mardie," he said, brokenly. "Go, my child."

As trembling and faint Martha half rose to go she felt a firm clasp upon her wrist and looked up into the dark, magnetic eyes of a handsome young minister. "Come," he said, authoritatively, and his fingers closed still more closely around the slender white wrist. Without a word Martha followed him and passively knelt beside him at the mourner's bench. She had a dim idea that she ought to have new and strange sensations—strong feelings which would incline her to weep and pray, but instead a strange calmness took possession of her and the odd idea that an unseen being was standing close beside her. She heard as if in a dream the sobs and shouts of her companions, and the elder's voice calling upon the Lord to save, and she wondered vaguely what it all meant. Then it was over and she stood with the rest waiting for the various preachers, of whom Elder Reams was foremost, to come and shake hands with her and offer her words of counsel. The young preacher still stood by her side with one slender white hand resting lightly upon her arm. Then the voice of Elder Reams sounded close beside her, and his hand clasped hers as he kindly inquired as to the state of her feelings.

"I do not know," said Martha, as she looked about her in a bewildered way.

"You are tired," said the elder. "Go home and take a good night's rest, and in the morning you will know whether you have salvation or not."

Perhaps the elder never gave any more sensible advice, but he proved a false prophet, for in the morning Martha did not know. She performed the usual household duties, and then once more accompanied by her father, sought the encampment. She felt restless and dissatisfied as the day wore on, and when the young preacher appeared, who the day before had led her to the mourner's seat, she confided to him her perplexity and doubt. While thus engaged her parents came and bade her good-bye promising to return the following morning. After their departure the young parson invited her to go to his tent, telling her that his wife and a few sisters whom he mentioned, would be pleased to join them in prayer.

"There is something I want to tell you first," said Martha; "something strange happened this morning and I want you to explain it to me."

"I will explain anything I can for you," he said gently.

Martha hesitated and then began timidly: "I was awakened ths morning by hearing my name called three times. I started up in bed, wide awake. I did not know the voice, and I did not see nor hear anyone in the chamber. Just as I was going to get up a voice began to sing. The voice was just outside my open door and I could plainly see there was no one there. I never heard such singing before, so clear and sweet and strong. The hymn was 'The reapers of life's harvest,' only the words were changed some, and I felt that they were meant for me. Oh! I shall never forget it."

The young man smiled with gentle superiority. "You were dreaming, little one," he said.

"Oh, no," said Martha earnestly. "You are mistaken. I was wide awake. I heard my father clattering the milk pails and wondered what time it was while the voice was singing. Besides, Charlie heard it, too, and told me at the breakfast table that he never knew I could sing so well before."

The young man made no reply, but as they had reached the tent, he pushed back the curtain which served as front door, and the two entered. The tent was empty. "All gone," said the preacher cheerily. "Well, it does not matter. 'Where two or three are gathered in my name,' you know. Let us kneel down here by ourselves, and ask the Lord to give you a clearer understanding of his word and your duty as a Christian."

He took Martha's hand in his, and with simple confidence she knelt beside him. The young parson prayed earnestly, even eloquently, and Martha listening intently to his words did not notice that he had drawn closely to her until she felt the clasp of his arm about her waist. With a feeling of alarm she looked around into the dark, handsome face which bent dangerously near her own. The parson stopped his praying and for an instant their eyes met, and then with a cry of terror, Martha threw aside the restraining arm and leaping to her feet stood with white face and wild eyes staring at the man before her who, to his credit be it said, hung his head with shame. Then Martha sprang through the tent door and fairly flew to her own apartments, where she fastened the curtains closely down, and throwing herself across the bed, burst into wild sobbing. After a short time she grew calmer. She heard the bell ring for evening service, and the women in the adjoining room preparing to attend the meeting. Martha listened until she knew they had all gone but one old woman left to guard the tent; then she arose and drawing aside the curtain from the one little window, which was open, looked out into the darkness. Lights were shining from tents and cottages and the air was filled with the hum of many voices. Several large lamps fastened to tall trees threw long shafts of light across the encampment, making the darkness seem more intense where no light fell. From her post of observation Martha could see, dimly outlined, the forms of the dark trees, and moving figures which for a moment would be clearly revealed in the bright light of the lamps and then swallowed up in darkness. The air was heavy with the odor of rich woods earth, leaves and fragile ferns. A strange lonesome feeling came over Martha, a sense of desolation.

"I have no part nor portion with them," she muttered; then started, for it seemed to her that another than she had uttered the words. Then the gathered congregation began to sing, "The glorious day is coming; the hour is rolling on." More and more voices joined in the strain until the grand old hills piled with great rocks telling their story of eons past, echoed and re-echoed the voices of the singers as they sang:

"Then fire from God descending,
Shall sweep this wide earth o'er,
And nations loud lamenting,
Shall sink to rise no more.
Though tears and groans are blended,
Yet all in vain they cry,
The day of hope is ended,
And sinners now must die."

(To be continued.)

ROME ATTACKING OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

HOW THEY PLAN IT.

The Boston Citizen has frequently referred to the apparently concerted action of the Roman hierarchy to force a division of the public school fund, in the interest of their parochial schools. That this action is carefully planned to be put into effect just before the presidential campaign, there can be little doubt. Rome is skilled in politics, and knows where she can get the most from "the powers that be"—the political powers—who are hungry for votes.

How does Rome propose to enforce her demands upon the politicians? (By Rome, we mean the hierarchy, for the Roman Catholic people, if left to themselves, would stand loyally by the American public school system—but the people are simply sheep who blindly follow their leaders, the priests.)

In the Catholic Citizen, of Milwaukee, Nov. 14, was a letter written by "Father P. F. Judge, of the Sacred Heart Church, Omaha, Neb."—a letter which doubtless voices the sentiment of the priests generally. In this letter Priest Judge says:

"With the advance of enlightenment and religious toleration and the disappearance of sectarian bitterness and bigotry, the day is fast coming when the people and therefore the government of this country will endorse the position of the Catholic church, not only by words, but in act, according to her schools as well as to similar schools of other denominations, their pro rata share of the taxes to which they are entitled.

"Short as is the time since I gave expression to that view, a good many things have happened to make me still more sanguine than I then was. Both within the church and in small part outside of it, much discussion has been going on since which seems to indicate that some kind of crisis is coming. The Catholic Federated Societies in convention in Atlantic City last July, passed a most important resolution on the question. Only last month the German Catholic societies of New Jersey decided to apply to the legislature for state support for their parochial schools. The New York Sun opened its columns to a discussion of the subject by which much light has been given. The Rev. Dr. Montague Geer, of the Protestant Episcopal church, contributed two important articles which, if they voice any large body of opinion in his denomination, are of great moment, as showing the trend of sentiment in that quarter. The Rev. John Talbot Smith and the Rev. Michael Clune gave each an able and unanswerable contribution to the discussion. At the conference of Catholic colleges held in Philadelphia last week a timely paper on the matter was read by Rev. Benedict Guilder, S. J., Boston college. Moreover, the Most Rev. Bishops McFaul and Messmer, and His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons gave expression to their views, and very much to the point, quite recently."

How unanimous is the expression on the part of the hierarchy, is clearly shown by the above.

The priest then proceeds:

"A famous advice once given in Ireland is the wise and practical course for us to adopt in the present circumstances: 'Agitate, agitate, agitate.' Ireland has struggled and fought against darker and more merciless tyranny, and she has won by peaceable means and parliamentary procedure.

"Can we not, in an official and representative way, bring our case before the state, before the legislatures and before the limelight of the public opinion of the nation? We can hardly expect the state to come to us and ask us what we want, or, in fact, consider the matter at all until we become more practical by making out our case and bring it before them in a business-like way and emphatic manner. How may this be done? One way that suggests itself to me is this:

"Suppose, for instance, that to-morrow our official and natural leaders, which, of course, would mean our bishops, educators and representative laymen, should confer together at a kind of round table conference and agree on a plan of campaign. Suppose they were to agree upon presenting to every legislature of the whole union, and to the government of the United States, an immense, mammoth memorial, or petition, couched, of course, in the most respectful, temperate and argumentative language, setting forth our grievances and demands, demonstrating how these might be granted not only without detriment, but to the entire enhancement and advantage of the present public school system of the land.

"Let this be signed at every church door, in every town and village in the country. Numberless signers, too, doubtless, could be obtained from the members of other denominations, Lutherans, Episcopalians and others. Because the Catholic church should in this case make common cause with other denominations feeling the like grievances, and make no claims for herself that she does not desire for others. Each denomination should get a fair field, but no favor to impart their own religious teaching to their own subjects. It would be well in this connection of church and state to adopt the suggestion of Rev. Dr. Geer. Let the word 'church' stand for every religious body which is working in the field of ethics in any large organized way. The Catholic church might do that without any sacrifice of principle.

"Now let such an enormous petition be presented in a formal way to each and every legislature in the land and the federal government as simultaneously as possible. It would have the signatures of millions. And at the same time let all the representative bodies in the church throughout the land pass resolutions praying the government for action on the petition.

"How would such a proceeding not awake up the whole national conscience, how would it not command the attention of the whole press of the country, and thus bring up the matter at one bound into the limelight of public opinion and into the forefront of practical questions? In the discussion that would follow our position on religious education in the public schools could be made as clear as the noonday sun to every thinking mind in the whole country, the ranting of imported bigots to the contrary notwithstanding. Thus the first battle would be won.

"The government would have to ask itself, 'What am I going to do about it?' It would find itself face to face with a condition, not a theory, and should act. What would it do about it? Well, the very least it could do to begin with would be to appoint a governmental commission to look into the matter. The scope of that commission might include a visit to other countries, such as Canada, Great Britain, Ireland and Germany, where, like our own, there is not a union of church and state, and yet they have come to a harmonious arrangement for imparting in the elementary schools, both secular and religious education, and where, too, there are as many different denominations as here. No doubt it would be a matter of great difficulty to please all concerned, but if the statesmen and churchmen of other countries were able to arrive at a harmonious working basis, surely those of this great country of ours can do better."

The Citizen here presents what will be, without doubt, the papal plan of campaign. "To be forewarned is to be forearmed." To thwart the schemes of the enemy it is absolutely necessary to organize—and to elect to congress and to state legislatures the best men—men of American convictions and of genuine courage.

Now that we have the plan of campaign before us, there is no possible excuse for being caught napping.

IMPORTANT QUESTIONS.

Who Am I?—Whence Came I?—Whither Am I Bound?

These are the questions the thoughtful minds are asking and have been since the human race began the existence of time. These questions come echoing down the corridors of the ages, and are as interesting a study as when first whispered into the thoughtful intellect of man in the early dawn of civilization.

Who shall rise to the height of the Infinite horizon, to probe to the depths the dark gloom of mental doubts, and give to the world the satisfying message enough to answer the skeptic and the soul's hungering thirst for spiritual knowledge.

Man has sought light from the prophets and seers of the past, and worshiped at the shrine of Buddha and Jesus, but the great truths and soul mysteries of being, sphinx-like remain hidden from the world's thinkers.

That there are psychic phenomena and spiritual illuminations of minds given here and there along the pathway of human experiences running like a thread of gold impinging upon the mortal plane of life impalpable to the finite senses, yet with all these evidences the world still lingers in doubt and waits the coming of the Messiah. These answers must be sought not from without, in books of learned minds, nor yet from the chosen leaders of religious sects, but deep down within one's own inner individual consciousness, the soul itself.

Everything points in the direction of man's will power, the soul's attributes in the concentration of one's own mental faculties unhampered by the psychological influences of dogmatic control either from excarnate or decarnate minds, for the higher and better unfoldment of spiritual and intellectual growth.

Time and space melt before this soul-power with its marvelous energy quickening into new life, mind and will, making the body subservient to its divine sway, and points unerringly to a possible answer to these world-wide questions when man shall fully awake from the lethargy of mere sense knowledge and become one with his own soul.

Recent experiments in the psychic and occult phenomena of mind over mind psychologically proves conclusively that the inner consciousness of man is the subjective will or mind in perfect harmony with the soul where fluid-like all intelligences are operative and governed by the law of divine unity.

Man is a soul now as much as he ever will be when divested of his mortal body and the fact of his inner powers related to the subliminal self or soul where under its benign sway the future lies out before the seer like a written page to read the history of men and nations through that law of psychometry vested in the sensitive brain of every individual, shows the possibilities of the finite mind as related to the infinite co-eternal.

The awakened intellect to-day feels the near approach of wonderful powers where the intuitive faculties sense a new world, as it were, governed by laws not understood by the finite mind, yet in accord with the ripening intellect of spiritual progress that opens the vast storehouse of infinitude.

When it comes to the momentous question of where the spirit goes at the dissolution of the mortal body, I know of no one who can so correctly settle the question as the soul itself of the individual without the aid of intermediaries known as spirit mediums each person his own medium, looking across the boundaries of infinitude.

The signs of the times point to the near approach of selfhood, when leadership will be impossible, when the sovereign rights of an individual mind will be held sacred and each individual will be sphered in his own orbit, like the planets in space, moving, rhythmically vibrating the harmony of soul-music, chanting the progress of the ages.

The time has passed when investigations in psychic phenomena and kindred subjects excite ridicule; only in the most ignorant and illiterate minds does this occur. Granting that very few have yet risen to the lofty plane of soul-communion with the denizens of the unseen worlds those few are felt and have set in motion the vibratory waves of thought and their secret messages are molding anew the voice of truth and spiritual knowledge and the air is sweet with the fragrance of divine love and the upliftment of man.

MY MOTHER'S HANDS.

Such beautiful, beautiful hands!
They're neither white nor small;
And you, I know, would scarcely think
That they are fair at all.
I've looked on hands whose form and hue
A sculptor's dream might be;
Yet are these aged, wrinkled hands
Most beautiful to me.

Such beautiful, beautiful hands!
Though heart were weary and sad,
Those patient hands kept toiling on,
That the children might be glad.
I always weep, as, looking back
To childhood's distant day,
I think how those hands rested not,
When mine were at their play.

Such beautiful, beautiful hands!
They're growing feeble now,
For time and pain have left their mark
On hands and heart and brow.
Alas! Alas! the nearing time,
And the sad, sad day to me,
When 'neath the daisies, out of sight,
Those hands will folded be.

But, oh, beyond this shadow land,
Where all is bright and fair,
I know full well these dear old hands
Will palms of victory bear.
Where crystal streams through endless years
Flow over golden sands,
And where the old grow young again,
I'll clasp my mother's hands.

The World Advances Through a Conflict of Ideas. When That Is Not Allowed, as in the Catholic Church, then Stagnation Follows, and Progress Ceases. The Progressive Thinker Will Not Follow in the Rut Marked Out by the Catholic Church, and Suppress This Clash of Ideas, nor Bridle Human Reason.

THE CONFLICT GOES ON.

We Introduce to our Readers Mrs. Clara Watson, a prominent leader in the Ranks of Spiritualism, and one who wields a sharp pointed pen, and says what she thinks. She steps boldly to the front and attempts to annihilate The Great Psychological Crime. Thoughts emanating from such a source, from one who is so fearless, will be read and re-read, and make a deep impression. Spirit control is being analyzed as it never was before, and there is being brought to the front a vast amount of information of great value to those who have sufficient gray matter in their brain cells to comprehend the same.

The Symposium has been great, and The Great Psychological Crime has received a great dressing down surely, and all honor to the noble workers who have raised their voice in defense of mediumship—the cornerstone of Spiritualism—against the attack of the enemy, even though disguised as a friend. Judging from all accounts the great crime of the age is the putting forth of so slanderous, unjust and untruthful a production, so far as mediumship is concerned, as that which has called forth the present agitation.

Prior to the symposium I had not read the book, but now I am reading it, and my wonder increases how anyone possessing the qualities of true manhood or womanhood and claiming to be a friend to Spiritualism, could put into print such outrageous and false statements about those who have been the pillars of strength to the grand superstructure of Spiritualism, and if even there was a case of obsession or hypnotic control by an "earth bound" spirit, certainly the author of The Great Psychological Crime is the victim, and I do not wonder he or she hides in obscurity.

One would think from sheer shamefacedness there would be a desire to be nameless, and while she or he poses as a student in the school of "natural science," the claws of the Theosophical-Jesuitical monster are plainly visible.

The book starts out with the theosophical bug-bear of "magic," black magic and white magic, and then proceeds to charge upon mediums the devils of black magic. This has ever been the playground of theosophy.

The writer of these lines has had experience with devotees of this cult in the past. A society of this school was started in this city, and the members (about a dozen) at once pounced upon spiritualism and the city press was used to disseminate their antagonism to the same, and Dr. Buck of Cincinnati, one the endorsers of the book, happened along and helped explain the black magic business. The writer was in attendance at the meeting, and my indignation was kindled and soon the war was on. I had not been appointed by the N. S. A. to answer the base charges made against Spiritualism and Spiritualists, but I assumed the prerogative and battled them through the press single handed and alone, without fear or favor, without money and without price, for a number of years.

The society made a desperate struggle for existence, but after a few years went down, and now not a peep is heard about black magic, reincarnation, karma, astral shells, devachan, mahatmas, masters, divine wisdom, etc., etc.

The Crime book agrees with Spiritualism along certain lines, and contains some information to the novice regarding hypnotism, mesmerism, occultism, etc., but to intelligent Spiritualists, the instruction comes late in the day. Spiritualists have been posted along these lines many years; understanding THE DANGERS AND THE ABUSES as well as the grand, UPLIFTING AND HELPFUL uses thereof. The writer of this listened to a course of public lectures upon these and kindred subjects given by a Spiritualist thirty years ago, and there are many in our ranks who have been teachers in this department of learning for many years, and the points of agreement with Spiritualism and the claims of the author to be a friend thereto, forms the gilded coating under cover of which it is hoped to ensnare the unwary.

There are some statements of the Crime book that are amusing. For instance, it says: "If Spiritualism is to become a permanent, living factor in the moral and spiritual evolution of the race, Spiritualists must insist on the entire abandonment of every phase, form and degree of mediumship."

Now just note the sublime reasoning displayed. To build up securely and firmly the great structure of Spiritualism we must first destroy its foundation, knock out the underpinning that sustains it. Queer logic that, but this is quite on a par with a great deal more put forth as "divine wisdom."

In the years gone by when the local theosophists were making heroic efforts to hypnotise the whole city into their "brotherhood," they secured a number of noted speakers of the cult, among them Countess Wachtmeister, who, true to the tenets of the school, disparaged mediumship among Spiritualists, but upheld the kind they have in theosophy, citing the marvelous powers of the now lamented Madame Blavatsky, who, it is said, by wiggling her fingers in the air caused teacups and saucers to rain down upon the company when they needed utensils from which to sip the nectar of the gods.

The Countess was so anxious to induce people to throw "subjective" mediumship to the winds and come into the independent exercise of the 'spiritual sensory organism," where anybody would be able to manufacture tablewear out of the atmosphere, that right there in public speech she gave directions how to "unfold." She anticipated the unknown author's forthcoming book, and gave the secret away, and desiring to fix the process on the tablets of my memory, I made a note of the receipt, and now I think the many readers of The Progressive Thinker are entitled to the knowledge, and I propose to give it forth, thus obviating the necessity of buying the book to be, or of joining the author's "class." I am sure this recipe is the correct one in use in the "School of Natural Science" for a real, live Countess, straight from the Orient, would carry no spurious article. The process is so simple that a wayfaring man or woman, even though not as "intelligent" as the hidden author, can easily acquire the prize of independent seership. Here it is: The first step is to start a reflection of thought waves on the atmospheric ether of cosmic light and action: This is to be interpenetrated by the manas of individuality, blended with the ego of personality, and impressed upon the susceptibility of the ethereal subconsciousness of the sixth sub-race, and this in turn is to be united to the mental aura that oozes out of the loosely knit astral form and comes in contact with the seven conscious cast-off layers of the body of the sensation, that act as recording tablets upon the body of desire. Then the individual passes through the seven-fold principles of vital energy, ascends through the vibratory plane and finally feels the absorption of the universal will. And now the initiate has mastered the secrets of the soul powers and fathomed the deeps of the great ocean of Karma Loca, and consequently is ready to be disintegrated through the chemical action of the sublimated forces of the Devachanic condition, and through the transmigratory and re-incarnate process comes forth therefrom as a god Mahatma, and is now prepared to hide away in the mountains of the Orient. The initiate or Theosophical medium is now full-fledged to exercise his or her spiritual sensory organism, independently, with no "criminal" attachment.

How beautiful!

Now I do not suppose that the foregoing explanation is given in just the language of the Countess. Indeed, I AM SURE IT IS NOT, but such was the impression the vibrations made upon my sensorium while listening.

But seriously, the above jargon of words strung together convey about as much meaning as did the words of the speaker upon Theosophical mediumship.

But to return to the symposium. The Theosophical Side—the Crime book side—taking advantage of Editor Francis' impartial action, made haste to bring forth testimony for its side. But who are they who come forth from obscurity to defend the book? With a few exceptions, such as Dr. Buck, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Dr. Peebles and Prof. Loveland, the writers were people seemingly improvised for the occasion. Surely the Spiritualistic side, with its array of noted and almost world-wide known participants, does not suffer by comparison in the symposium. The bulk of evidence for the Crime book seems to come from a few persons who have been unfortunate in their attractions from the spirit realms, unfortunate in not possessing sufficient individuality to keep the grossest element of spirits at bay. But not one of the many noted mediums speaking for mediumship, as well as hundreds who have not spoken, have had any such trouble, because, forsooth, they were self-poised, fortified within, against the "black magic" influence.

In the symposium up to date, if correctly counted, there have been seventeen writers, exclusive of Dr. Peebles and Prof. Loveland, for the Crime book, and twenty-five against it, but, kind reader, just note the returns as results of the discussion. Evidently the weight of argument against the book has had its depreciating effect upon the same. The work has already been reduced in price. Before the heavy guns of Spiritualistic logic were turned upon it the price was two dollars; now its value has fallen twenty-five per cent; the book is now offered at $1.50.

Keep up the discussion.

Let the good work go on.

I would like here to endorse the suggestion of George A. Bacon of Washington, D. C., that the replies be published in book form. This certainly should be done and the book go forth as a "companion piece" to The Great Psychological Crime. The replies have all been able, and yet, of course, we could single out a few as leaders, and I cannot agree with E. D. Titus, who thinks they have "embodyed a display of rhetoric rather than scientific logic."

If scientific logic, sensible and deep reasoning has not been displayed in this discussion, I am sure I would not know where to look for it. The Crime book has been criticised from every point of view, Dr. Conger touching on a little different line than any of the others. His article was fine.

The Great Psychological Crime is simply a DAGGER THRUST AT SPIRITUALISM, and even though the keen and polished blade be sharpened to the hilt, the blow will be turned aside, as many another has been, without even wounding the sturdy, growing child—Spiritualism. It will come out of the affray unscathed.

Certainly the symposium will do good.

Indeed, The Progressive Thinker would have been recreant to its trust, had it not afforded opportunity to Spiritualists to down their adversary, and really, Brother Francis, your paper seems to be about the only one of a Spiritualist nature that isn't afraid of discussion, and I feel to say to you as a good Catholic friend said to me recently, He had been accustomed to the dry rot of Catholicsm, and it chanced that he attended a funeral where the writer officiated and at the close of the service at the grave he said to me: "Good woman, you ought always to live. People who talk that way ought never to die; the world needs them." And I say to you, Editor Francis, DON'T DIE. The world needs you.

For the life of me I cannot see why the phenomena in Spiritualism should be considered so criminal.

What is life anyway but one stupendous phenomena, manifested through the multiform processes of nature?

Theosophists and others may make light of the phenomena of Spiritualism, and yet there is no place in all the universe where phenomena do not exist.

The phenomena of the material universe are marvelous.

The phenomena of the human mind are marvelous.

The phenomena of the spirit are marvelous.

Anyone who can look out on the beauty and glory of nature and breathe in the freshness of life and not feel impressed by and through the wonderful phenomena of the forces of life must be blind to all the higher reasoning of the soul.

Anyone who meditates upon the wondrous powers of the mind and the subtile properties of spirit, and senses not the marvelous phenomena therein, or classes them as criminal, must be dead to all the quickening inspirations of life. No, it is not to the detriment of Spiritualism that it rests upon phenomena or fact.

And I wish to add my testimony to that of others of the manifold good that has come to me through coming in touch through mental mediumship, with the denizens of the spirit realm. IT HAS BROUGHT UNTO MY LIFE BLESSINGS UNTOLD, through which I know I am enabled to aid in blessing other lives, and I am not in the least concerned about the road before me "leading unto death."

The Crime book is simply the old worn-out cry dressed in more hideous garb, "It's all the devil."

Spiritualists do not claim perfection for their mediums; they are human, but they are not all devils, nor any of them all devil, notwithstanding the claims of the Crime book.

We do not claim perfection for mediumship. Indeed, perfection is found only in the "Schools of Natural Science."

Theosophy alone has a monopoly of perfection (?) in all spiritual things, and when perfection is reached, progress ceases.

CLARA WATSON.

THE CONFLICT CONTINUES.

This Conflict is simply a Process of Evolution whereby the TRUTH will become more prominent, and in connection therewith we introduce to our readers a charming character, Mrs. E. M. Hamsley. She is a brilliant little lady, one that would do you good to meet and hear in detail her remarkable experiences in subjective mediamship. As Chairman of this debate we take pleasure in placing these ladies side by side in The Progressive Thinker, each one writing independently of the other, and each one not knowing what the other has to say until the same is in print. Study carefully what both say, and you must reach a conclusion independent of the Chairman.

To the Editor:—May I ask of you the favor of announcing my address through the columns of your paper?

I would also be pleased if you will kindly state that the letters addressed to me in care of "The Progressive Thinker" have reached me.

Many of the letters of inquiry addressed to me have remained unanswered for some weeks owing to my time having been engrossed with other very important matters.

To those who have written me permit me to say that I hope the incoming week to be able to answer their letters personally.

Perhaps nothing has more fully convinced me of the great good the symposium has done, is doing and will do than the letters which have reached me from persons who are personally unknown to me, asking that "the better way" be opened to their understanding.

Several of these letters are from mediums, "developing" mediums and Spiritualists, and through them all runs the one plaint, "MEDIUMSHIP IS SO UNSATISFACTORY."

Right here I would like to say that I am not prepared to "open the way" to a development of the power of independent clairvoyance.

I am but a student myself and am unauthorized to outline for any individual any course of study or culture whereby they may attain this power.

Since coming into the light of this knowledge of independent self development the greater part of the past four years' experience and endeavor has been the undoing of the destructive effects of my mediumistic subjection, the growing from the condition of an instrument used by Spirit Intelligences for the transmission of messages, lectures, etc., into the full possession of all the capacities, faculties and powers with which God or Nature endowed me.

Capacities, faculties and powers which were, in a measure, paralyzed by my mediumistic work.

This I feel justified in saying that I have accomplished.

I am willing (I may say more than willing) to give to any one the full benefit of all the experiences I have had in this endeavor. I will gladly assist any man, woman or child who, through mediumship, has lost the power of independent self-control, to regain that highest and noblest of all powers.

This week's Thinker (Nov. 21) lies before me; there is a great deal I would like to say in regard to its many interesting articles and contributions; but I know that the symposium practically closes with the opening letter from Lyman C. Howe, and that your space is valuable.

I must say, however, that I was pleased with the candid, unprejudiced manner in which "The Veteran Spiritualist" opens the discussion. I look forward to an intellectual treat in the further development of this discussion between Mr. Howe and Mrs. Florence Huntley.

The lecture by W. F. Peck, as reported in this week's "Thinker" is timely and his statements should command the thoughtful consideration of all Spiritualists.

What more eloquent plea could be made for an independent, rational, self-conscious and self-controlled life than is embodied in this lecture of his in regard to the earth-bound spirit of Amelia Bauer?

To quote Brother Peck:

"All students of Spiritualism recognize that mortals may be hypnotized or psychologized by disembodied spirits and become what is known as prophets, seers, mediums, psychics, etc., but it is not so commonly known that mortals may also psychologize disembodied spirits almost as readily and bring them under their mental, moral and physical control. Yet there is much evidence to substantiate this fact.

"The subject of the hypnotist is, for the time being, merely the reflex of the controlling mind. He sees with the eyes of the operator, hears with his ears, thinks with his brain, knows only what he knows and believes only what he believes.

"MANY INSTANCES COULD BE CITED TO SHOW THAT SPIRITS DISEMBODIED HAVE BEEN SO COMPLETELY HYPNOTIZED BY THE EARTH CONDITIONS AND THE MINDS OF MORTALS THAT THEY REALIZE ONLY IN A VAGUE WAY THAT THEY ARE NO LONGER DWELLERS IN THE BODY AND SO LIVE LARGELY THE LIFE OF THE EARTH, SUBJECT TO ITS LIMITATIONS AND PARTICIPATING IN ITS AMUSEMENTS AND INTERESTS GENERALLY."

If what Brother Peck says is true (and I am in position to know that it is), what about those Spiritualists who regularly attend the seance room, carrying to their disembodied friends their own sins, sorrows, desires and earthly problems, drawing those disembodied friends into their own troubled and oftimes materialistic mental, moral and psychical atmosphere?

Is it fair or just to the liberated spirit to draw it into an environment in which it may become completely hypnotized by the earth conditions and the minds of mortals," and can "realize only in a vague way that" it is "no longer a dweller in the body," and so compel it to "live largely the life of earth, subject to its limitations," etc.?

And what of the prophets, seers, mediums, psychics, etc., of whom Brother Peck says, they are "for the time being, merely the reflex of the controlling mind? He (the medium) sees with the eyes of the operater, hears with his ears, thinks with his brain, knows only what he knows and believes only what he believes."

In a word, he is for the time being (that is, while under the control of another intelligence) robbed of his personality, deprived of his individuality and is become the automatic instrument of the will of another.

When one who is as well versed in the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism as Brother Peck admittedly is, makes such an unqualified statement in regard to the DESTRUCTIVE EFFECTS OF HYPNOTIC CONTROL, and identifies it with the mediumistic process ("All students of Spiritualism recognize that mortals may be hypnotized or psychologized by disembodied spirits and become what is known as prophets, seers, mediums, psychics, etc."), is it not time that mediums and Spiritualists generally were awakening to a like knowledge of the fundamental principle involved in hypnotic and mediumistic control of the human will?

There are several other articles in this week's Thinker of which I would like to speak, but I fear this letter is already too lengthy to gain admission to the columns of your paper.

I cannot, however, forbear to ask a few questions which the letter of George A. Bacon suggests:

First—Of what "CRIME" is the author of the "Great Psychological Crime" convicted?

I have carefully followed the articles written by the persons to whom he refers and have yet to be shown where they have in their respective, individual capacity, so cleverly and masterly laid bare the criminality of the author of that work.

Second—Is it a "CRIME" to give to one who is enslaved the directions and opportunity whereby he may escape slavery?

Again, isn't it a "CRIME" to point out to one who has been misled the right way?

And, is it a "CRIME" to endeavor to give to humanity the accumulated knowledge of twenty years' unremitting research into a definite field of scientific "study, personal experience and demonstrations," of psychological problems?

If so, then BLEST BE THE "CRIMINAL."

The whole work of progression, as we look back over the ages, as revealed by the light of sacred and profane history, seems to have been left in the hands of just such "CRIMINALS."

These are the men who, for Truth's sake, were willing to sacrifice their own personal pride, worldly ambitions and their preconceived ideas of truth, to spend their lives "unloved and alone," if need be, to give to humanity the truths which it at first spurned; then, after years, decades, centuries perhaps, accepted and endeavored to propagate by force.

The life and philosophy of Christ, his crucifixion, the subsequent history of the acceptance of his philosophy, its perversion and abuse, form one significant illustration, while the lives of men of science, who have walked by the light of a higher knowledge than is possessed by the ordinary mortal, have been one long story of misunderstanding and persecution. For centuries past these have verified this tendency in human nature to oppose truth when it comes into conflict with its established systems and with its preconceived ideas of truth.

It has been little more than half a century since Spiritualism had a hostile encounter with the orthodox idea of truth; unless I have been misinformed they were also unjustly accused.

I should have thought that from so recent an experience with the unreasoning opponents of that which has since been demonstrated beyond the possibility of doubt, namely, the possibility of communion between human and exhuman beings, that Spiritualists would have welcomed with open and avowed hospitality the entrance into their own field of one who has at his command more light to throw upon the subject for which they have labored and suffered.

Instead of so doing, some of the leading intelligences who are identified with the Spiritualistic movement have been most active in pronouncing this man (whose person and character they admit are unknown to them) "a Jesuit, a "pettifogging lawyer," an "egoist," an "ignoramus," a "medium" and a "criminal."

COULD THE UNREASONING, BIGOTED PREJUDICE OF THE MOST HOPELESSLY "CREED-BOUND" MORTALS SURPASS THIS IN INJUSTICE TO A FELLOW MAN?

It is one thing to make an assertion, another and wholly different thing to prove that assertion true.

In a careful reading of the articles, which according to Mr. Bacon's assertion, "have so cleverly and masterly laid bare the criminality of the author" of the Great Psychological Crime, I find many assertions which I KNOW THROUGH A PERSONAL ACQUAINTANCE WITH THIS AUTHOR TO BE UNTRUE.

I FIND MANY ASSERTIONS WHICH THE EXPERIENCES OF MYSELF, MY HUSBAND AND OUR INTIMATE FRIENDS PROVE TO BE UNTRUE.

Let us glance over the article written by Hudson Tuttle:

To quote Mr. Tuttle, in reference to the author of the book under discussion, he says:

"In plain words he is a medium, but it is by another process." I ask, how does Mr. Tuttle know this to be a fact? Has he had an opportunity of studying this man?

Again, to uqote Mr. Tuttle:

"Every medium arrives at the knowledge how by concentration of the mind to pass into this state (the superior or independent state). That this is preferable, there can be no doubt, for it enables the sensitive to command and not to implicitly obey like an automaton."

(This recalls to my mind a quotation from David Harum which seems to aptly illustrate and emphasize just what Mr. Tuttle here suggests: David Harum, in speaking of the "Golden Rule," says: "Do unto the other fellow what he intends to do unto you; AND DO IT FIRST.")

Evidently, Mr. Tuttle has not the exalted opinion of mediumship which a careless reading of his article seems to have impressed upon the mind of Mr. Bacon.

Again, to quote Mr. Tuttle:

"The medium is like the receiving instrument of the wireless telegraph, he must be in harmony with the transmitter. He is unlike in that it is within his own power to adjust himself to a certain range of transmitters."

I am a telegraph operator, have been a medium; am in position, therefore, to state as a matter of personal, definite knowledge and experience, that Mr. Tuttle's comparison is ill-founded.

As a matter of fact the medium is like the key by and with which an operator transmits messages (Morse System Telegraphy). He is simply AN INSTRUMENT OF EXPRESSION by which messages are transmitted from the world of physically disembodied to the world of physically embodied intelligences.

Mr. Tuttle bears me out in this statement when he says that mediums (sensitives) "IMPLICITLY OBEY LIKE AN AUTOMATON," and Brother Peck substantially endorses this statement of Mr. Tuttle's by saying, "HE (THE MEDIUM) SEES WITH THE EYES OF THE OPERATOR," ETC.

Here we have two who are supposed to be among the best posted men in Spiritualistic circles, agreed upon the relationship established under mediumistic control between the "intelligence controlled and the controlling intelligence, and both unite in specifically defining the position of the controlling intelligence as that of "OPERATOR," and the position of the intelligence controlled as that of "AN AUTOMATON."

Now for this very "offense," (i. e., that of defining the relationship which exists between the hypnotist and his subject, and between the "spirit control" and his medium, as being that of "An Operator" and "Instrument," and plainly and in an unmistakable manner pointing out to both the fact that this relationship between two intelligences is a violation of natural law), and for the further "offense" of suggesting that it was a relationship which was productive of only evil to both parties concerned in it, and was an unnecessary sacrifice on the part of the "subject" of "medium," and an unlawful usurpation of power on the part of the hypnotist, whether physically or spiritually embodied—for this "offense" a scholarly, unselfish and earnest master of the law of psychic phenomena, stands accused before the Spiritualistic public of being a "CRIMINAL."

Is it any wonder that I am moved to raise my voice in protest against this shameful injustice? Is it any wonder that I am impelled to say that IN THE EYES OF RIGHT-MINDED, LOGICALLY THINKING, HUMAN BEINGS, THOSE SPIRITUALISTS WHO HAVE BEEN GUILTY OF SO CONDEMNING ONE WHO HAS THUS LABORED IN THEIR BEHALF ARE CONVICTED OF THE SIN OF INGRATITUDE, AND STAND PUBLICLY COMMITTED TO A WILFUL MISREPRESENTATION OF A CO-WORKER IN THE INTERESTS OF "TRUTH AND HUMANITY?"

It is high time that these same "Spiritualists" begin to do a little thinking on their own account.

Now if we follow Mr. Tuttle's article, paragraph by paragraph, as I should enjoy doing, but my own time and your space forbid, we should find many such statements as these, following:

"He is said to be 'sublimely unselfish' and has written this book because he felt it was a duty to humanity. IT MAY BE SO, but the price is two dollars, and any printing house would make it for twenty cents or less."

If that is so, Mr. Tuttle, what about the great profit you make upon your own books, which are, if I mistake not, sold almost exclusively to Spiritualists? Do you also stand self-convicted of writing for the sake of mercenary gain ALONE?

Again, speaking of the author of "The Great Psychological Crime," Mr. Tuttle says:

"HE CLAIMS TO HAVE DISCOVERED A NEW KIND OF MEDIUMSHIP WHICH HE CAN IMPART TO ANYONE AS INTELLIGENT AS HIMSELF."

THAT THIS IS ABSOLUTELY FALSE ONE CAN EASILY PROVE TO HIS OWN SATISFACTION BY AN INTELLIGENT READING OF THE BOOK.

With this suggestion I must pass from my self-appointed task of reviewing Hudson Tuttle's article in which he has, according to Mr. Bacon's letter, "so cleverly and masterly laid bare the criminality of the author of that work."

Let us turn to Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's article:

To start with, Mrs. Richmond roundly berates the author of this book because he has chosen to withhold his name.

"No person has any right," says Mrs. Richmond, "to appear before the public anonymously, stating alleged facts solely upon his or her own authority, without enabling the people to know who the author is."

Again, "As an individual or personal expression of personal experiment, experience and opinion, it is only valuable in proportion as the person putting it forth is valuable, as his testimony is entitled to credence, as his authority is considered authority by those qualified to judge."

Since this is Mrs. Richmond's publicly expressed opinion, of what value are the teachings which have been given to her various audiences in "the course of fifty years of speaking and writing as a medium" from UNIDENTIFIED SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES?

She says that "no person has a right to appear before the public anonymously, stating as alleged facts solely upon his or her authority, without enabling the people to know who the author is."

WHAT OPPORTUNITY HAVE THOSE OF MRS. RICHMOND'S AUDIENCES WHO ARE NOT CLAIRVOYANT OF VERIFYING FOR THEMSELVES THE IDENTITY OF HER OWN "GUIDES AND CONTROLS?"

As a matter of fact the identity of some of Mrs. Richmond's controls are not known (in the sense of the word that she demands to know this author even) to herself.

How and by what process, for instance, could Mrs. Richmond satisfy an individual who was not a Spiritualist, neither clairvoyant, that a lecture which she delivered a short time after the death of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was really given by that spirit through the instrumentality of her mediumship?

We have only the word (given through her own entranced lips at the time by the spirit control), that such a lecture was given by the spirit of that remarkably brilliant orator.

What opportunity in this case (particularly as the style of delivery, language, mode of expression, etc., were radically different from that of the supposed control, and very much like that of her chief control, so I have been informed by those who were present at the time this lecture was delivered) did Mrs. Richmond give to those "qualified to judge" that the controlling intelligence was really that of Ingersoll and not of a sensation-seeking, impersonating spirit?

Is it not a fact that many of Mrs. Richmond's own congregation doubted the identity of the controlling intelligence, and that others questioned the wisdom of Mrs. Richmond's submitting to the control of this spirit (if it were really he) who had so recently passed into a world of which he had gained no previous knowledge?

Did not many Spiritualists suggest that it was neither possible nor probable that the "control" was really Ingersoll, basing their statement upon the assumption (which seems to me well founded) that Mr. Ingersoll could not possibly have learned so short a time after his transition the laws governing mediumistic control. Particularly as he was not a hypnotist and had never studied that "art?"

I do not mean to arouse unpleasant memories, nor yet to deal unkindly with any of the individuals who have taken upon themselves the responsibility of misquoting, misstating and vilifying the author of The Great Psychological Crime.

Personally I hold no malice against any one of them; feel no animosity, but "for truth and humanity" is my watchword, and inasmuch as I am qualified to see the truth in just so much is it my duty to give to humanity that which I know to be true.

As to the identity of the author, I think that Spiritualists generally are willing to waive that point as a relatively unimportant matter in view of the greater importance of the value of his teachings.

Not one individual, dominated wholly by the intelligence of this author, but many sane, well-known, responsible human beings, have publicly testified that he is known to them, and that his personal character is above reproach, and have placed themselves on record as having personally demonstrated the truths of the philosophy which he represents and teaches.

There are many paragraphs in Mrs. Richmond's article which I for want of space will be forced to pass over, but side by side are these two which interest and amuse me.

"ANY INTELLIGENT MIND WHO WAS NOT A SPIRITUALIST BEFORE WILL BE ONE AFTER READING THIS BOOK."

Think of a statement like that in the face of almost three columns preceding it, in which she has laboriously tried to show that the book is not worth consideration, is illogical, unfounded on fact and untrue.

Is this, then, the kind of reading matter which makes Spiritualists? Mrs. Richmond says, farther:

"THE WRITER COULD NOT HAVE DONE SPIRITUALISM GREATER SERVICE."

Greater service than what, may I ask, Mrs. Richmond? Writing a book that according to your own statement is a discord of untruths, a manifestation of egoism, assumptions, nonsense and lies?

Is that the food upon which Spiritualism thrives?

In regard to the identification of spirit controls I would suggest that Spiritualists read with unprejudiced minds Brother Jamieson's views as expressed in this week's Thinker.

I would also suggest that especial attention be paid to the article written by Mr. Titus. These paragraphs are suggestive if nothing more:

"After thirty-seven years of scientific investigation I am opposed to hypnotism in any form, WHETHER TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OR THE INFLUENCE OF MORTAL UPON MORTAL; IN THE LONG RUN THE EFFECT UPON THE SUBJECT CAN ONLY BE HARMFUL, EITHER PHYSICALLY OR MENTALLY, and especially so to persons not endowed with that peculiar mentality or gift."

Mr. Titus farther remarks:

"I NEVER KNEW A TRANCE MEDIUM THAT WAS NOT INFLUENCED AT TIMES WITH MANY SPIRITUALITIES BOTH GOOD AND BAD."

I wonder if Mr. Titus really meant to identify mediumistic and hypnotic control as "identical processes," and if he meant to practically admit and unqualifiedly endorse exactly what the author of The Great Psychological Crime had previously stated in the "Storm Center Book?"

Whether this was or was not the intention of Mr. Titus, he stands publicly committed in this paragraph to just such an admission and endorsement. I think that this writer in his "thirty-seven years scientific investigation" ought to be considered "qualified to judge" of the true worth of that which he has thus investigated.

Mr. Bacon may possibly, upon re-reading the articles in question, by the light of analytical, comparative, reasoning change his viewpoint; if not I think he will make no objection to my offering to the consideration of Mr. Francis an amendment of his suggestion "pro bono publico" (whatever that may mean), that instead of selecting "some half dozen of these worthy replies," that he publish in book form the Symposium complete.

It appeals to me rather in the light of an intellectual impossibility, that idea of Mr. Bacon's that only those replies be published which deal with ONE SIDE of the question; THE OTHER SIDE IS RIGHT THERE IN INFERENCE AT LEAST.

Another word to Mr. Francis: In the name of my husband and myself I ask you to accept our sincere congratulations upon the general spirit of fairness, which in the greater number of articles published on behalf of the representatives of both sides of this discussion has been manifested.

It should be a matter of personal pride to you to have been able to launch upon the world of thought and investigation this orderly, sequential symposium, dealing as it does with the most momentous question of the age.

The question of individual personal responsibility.

You have demonstrated, at least, that your paper is in the hands of thinkers, and I hope that they may, one and all, prove themselves worthy of the name of "Progressive Thinkers."

This tribute, from one so unimportant in the great world of thought, may be valueless, but be sure it comes from two very sincere admirers of your own courage and perseverance in thus conducting a discussion which may mean to many men and women the re-formation of their entire lives in conformance to their perception of truths which otherwise might not have reached them.

Spiritualists realize that a crisis has come; through each and every article written in defense of mediumship has been an open avowal or hidden suggestion that that method is not perfect; that it needs radical reformation, and that SPIRITUALISTS NEED MORE LIGHT FROM SOME SOURCE.

My earnest prayer is that they will accept the light which has been offered, and that ye who are and we who are not Spiritualists may meet upon a common ground of aspiration and in seeking the better way of life, may each and every one of us be guided aright.

Were not, as I have previously said, my own time and your space limited, Mr. Francis, I should like to review in routine the articles referred to by Mr. Bacon.

I feel, however, that enough has been done along this line to point the way to a more careful reading and thoughtful consideration of the matter which has through the columns of your paper been given to the Spiritualistic public.

I, who have so recently come out from among you, cannot but feel that my first duty in the endeavor to pass on the blessings which have been mine under the instruction of The School of Natural Science is to Spiritualists in general and to mediums in particular.

Meanwhile, I would suggest that the articles written by Lyman C. Howe and Mrs. Florence Huntley be given an unprejudiced hearing.

ECHOES OF THE SYMPOSIUM

LYMAN C. HOWE. MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

The Great Psychological Crime

A Comparison of Views and the Reasons Therefor.

Lyman C. Howe, the veteran Spiritualist Lecturer and Medium, a man well and favorably known as one of the foremost thinkers and writers in our ranks, will Champion the Cause of Truth as reflected in Spiritualism, while Mrs Florence Huntley, the well-known Author and Journalist, will defend all the statements in The Great Psychological Crime, which Mr. Howe will dare to assail, making a series of articles instructive, suggestive and inspiring, and which every Spiritualist should most carefully read.

MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY REPLIES TO LYMAN C. HOWE.

Mr. Lyman C. Howe: My Dear Sir:—Your second letter of the series is before me, and commands my interest and attention. I have to confess, however, that a careful and earnest reading of it twice, leaves me with an unmistakable feeling of uncertainty as to your real position.

Can it be possible that this is because of my inability to understand good English? Or, is it because you have not yet gotten far enough into your theme to make your position clear?

When I take up the pen to reply, the impulse is very strong to lay it down again and wait for your next letter, to see if that will clear away the mists of doubt and reveal you standing in the clear sunlight of certainty where I can see you and know you as you are, and understand you as you intend and desire to be understood.

As it is, I do not feel that this is true; for I find myself saying, "Does he mean to convey the idea that there is no difference, in essence, between an impelling influence and a compelling force? Does he intend to say that all the motives, inspirations, impulses and suggestions of life which impel us to the exercise of our voluntary powers are hypnotic? Or, does he hold that, in the final analysis, all our processes, both physical and mental, are involuntary or automatic because they may be the results of remote causes for which we were not responsible? Does he intend to convey the idea that the love which impels a mother consciously and intentionally to caress her child is the same, in essence, with the process which COMPELS an hypnotic subject to perform the same physical act unconsciously and involuntarily at the command of his hypnotist? Does he mean that all men are at all times under a subjective, psychic, hypnotic spell which differs ONLY IN DEGREE? Or, does he hold that there is no such thing as hypnotism at all? Is he intending to establish as a fact that mediumship does not, under any circumstances, involve subjection or control? Or, is he, in an indirect manner, trying to show that all men are at all times 'mediums,' DIFFERING ONLY IN DEGREE, and that all our acts are, in the final analysis, automatic and therefore mediumistic?"

I do not believe you have intended to leave me in this perplexing state of doubt and uncertainty, nevertheless that is where I find myself in my effort to follow you. Lest our audience also become lost in the fog and lose interest in the discussion, I am going to ask you if you will not, in your next letter, take up the subject of the BOOK and specifically outline in definite form some one or more of those particular "errors" to which you allude in your first letter and which appear to you to be fatal to the author's position? This will enable us to go directly to the vital points and determine wherein we may be at variance, if at all.

As the proposition concerning this public discussion of the book was originally laid before me, and as I still understand the matter, Mr. Francis has laid upon you in this correspondence the burden of refuting the author's position as it is stated IN THE BOOK, and making clear to our audience wherein his errors or fallacies consist; and upon me the task of meeting your objections, as far as I can, at any points where the book itself may fail to do so.

Is not this also your understanding of the plan and purpose of the work Mr. Francis has set before us? If not, then it would seem to me to be well for us, as well as our audience, that our tasks be more clearly and specifically defined before we proceed further.

But if my understanding of the matter is correct, then the burden of proof is on YOU, and it is my business to wait with patience until you have successfully controverted some one or more of the fundamental and vital propositions upon which the book is constructed.

It appears to me that the author's position is clearly and unequivocally stated in the book you are to refute, and that the main propositions upon which he depends to support his conclusions are simple and explicit. You have read the book, and it would therefore be presumption on my part to restate its position or review its substance here. It would be equally gratuitous, not to say impertinent of me, if I should attempt to anticipate you in either the nature or the order of your criticisms and objections. Recognizing the ethics of legitimate and proper discussion, I do not desire to appear in such a light. My respect for the intelligence of our audience, as well as for that of my correspondent, would restrain me from the commission of such an indiscretion.

But while I await with patience your specific charges against the book, it may be that some of our readers will expect me to reply to some of your suggestions, even though their relevancy to the task before us is not yet clearly apparent to my mind. To meet this possible demand I take the liberty of referring briefly to the following suggestions contained in your letter:

You say: "That my daily life, with its immediate mental activities and moral standards is, so far as voluntary action is concerned, under the direction of my own will, reason and conscience, is not questioned here." By this I understand that you are willing to concede that you have a WILL OF YOUR OWN, and that it is not under the control of any other individual intelligence.

While this is clearly all the author has intended to convey by the word "independent," still you ask, "But is my will independent?"

My reply to your question is that, AS THE AUTHOR HAS EMPLOYED THE WORD, your will is most assuredly "independent," acording to your own admission. And this is the only sense in which we are justified in using the word, if it is our purpose to treat the author fairly.

Throughout the entire book he uses the word "independent" in the same sense. The independent will or volition to which he refers, is that which is FREE FROM THE HYPNOTIC CONTROL OF ANOTHER INTELLIGENT WILL. This is as far as he is considering the subject of "independence."

He nowhere refers to those "causes which may be traced to antecedents, circumstances, temperament, structure," etc. Why? Because he is dealing with the specific theme of "the subjective, psychic process" involved in the direct and immediate action of one mind or will upon another.

The "independence" to which he refers is simply and solely the freedom of one will from the direct and immediate HYPNOTIC action of another will. This is made so clear and unmistakable in the book that I find it difficult to conceive that you did not so understand it. Be this as it may, permit me to call your attention, and that of our readers, to the fact that when you raise a question of ULTIMATE causes, or even REMOTE ones, you are entirely outside the subject matter as well as the spirit and intent of the book. For this reason it would appear to me that the major part of your last letter is not relevant to the subject before us.

All you have said, in fact, as to what (in your mind) constitutes "independence," might be granted without in the least discrediting the position of the author on the subjects of hypnotism and mediumship. Why? Because he is talking of one thing and you of another. He is talking of the independence of the individual mind from HYPNOTIC CONTROL, while you are talking of absolute and ultimate independence of man from all the forces, conditions and processes of nature. It seems to me that in raising a question so utterly foreign to both the subject and spirit of the book you are likely to do both yourself and the author an injustice.

In the same manner you seem to have mistaken the meaning and intent of my own words concerning the "independence" of our own decisions. I stated that "It does not matter what facts or opinions have influenced our character building; these influences in no wise prevent the free and independent decisions of a sane and normal intelligence." I meant by this that such influences are not HYPNOTIC, and do not prevent us from exercising our will free from the hypnotic control of another will. That is all.

But you ask, "Is not this 'sane normal intelligence' the principal agent that decires our conclusions?" Of course it is. That is why I call it "independent." If it did not do so I should not call it "independent." In other words, if another will than our own had hypnotic control of us and thereby made all our decisions for us, that would mean the kind of domination which the author condemns in the book.

But again you ask, "Can we make any decisions without the consent of this 'sane normal intelligence'?" This is only another way of saying, "Can we make decisions without our own consent?" I think not. But we can make decisions without the consent of some other intelligence than our own. And so long as we can do this we are "independent" in the exact sense that both the author and myself have used the term.

In order that both you and our readers may see how far you are missing the spirit and intent of both the author and myself, permit me to paraphrase one statement of yours. You say, "Just in the ratio that we approach independence we become irresponsible."

Now if you were using the word "independence" in that statement in the same sense I have used it and the author employs it in the book, your statement would be as follows:

"Just in the ratio that we approach FREEDOM FROM HYPNOTIC CONTROL we become irresponsible."

I am morally certain you do not intend to convey any such idea as this statement would indicate. And yet, if I should substitute my own meaning of the term "independence" for yours, that is exactly what your statement would mean.

It would be just as admissible for me to hold you to the meaning of your statement as I have paraphrased it, as it is for you to make it appear to our readers that both the author and myself are writing about the kind of "independence" you have voluntarily projected into this discussion. But I shall do nothing of the kind. Why? Because it would not be fair.

I assume that our readers are both honest and sincere, as well as intelligent, and that they have a right to expect that I will not attempt to mislead them by attaching to your language meanings of my own which are different from those you have intended.

Again you say: "It seems to me that the absolute authority of active causes in shaping minor events a hundred years back of a specific climax, is as real, as irresistible and as arbitrary as that which holds a hypnotic subject in moral and physical bondage to the will of his master."

Let us suppose that you are correct. I do not understand that it is relevant to our subject. The author nowhere either admits nor denies such a proposition, so far as I am aware. He has written specifically of the "subjective psychic process" involved in hypnotism and mediumship as he has defined these terms; and has said nothing whatever concerning the "authority of active causes" which may or may not be traceable a hundred or a thousand years backward from any given climax.

But you say: "If I am correct in this it is only a question of difference between one class of compulsory causes and another." Let us suppose again that your conclusion is correct; if it has any bearing on the subject under consideration it is directly in line with the author's position, as I understand it.

For instance, if your fatalistic theory be correct, it may be possible that "the absolute authority of active causes in shaping minor events a hundred years back," leads a man to commit a crime to-day OF HIS OWN VOLITION. A hypnotist may subjugate the same man and by the power of his superior will compel him to commit the same act. What is the difference?

The difference lies in the PROCESS employed to accomplish the same result. And it is just this difference that determines who is the guilty party. In the first case we hold the man guilty because he was in the possession of his voluntary faculties, capacities and powers, and did the act because he wanted to. In the second we hold the hypnotist guilty, because it was his will and not that of the instrument he employed which was responsible for the act.

In the first case the act is performed "independently" IN THE SENSE THAT TERM IS EMPLOYED IN THE BOOK, and in the second it is not. The cause in one case is hypnotism and in the other it is not. The PROCESS employed, therefore, is not the same.

In my last letter I called attention to the fact that according to your own statement you are ready to welcome the truth SO LONG AS IT IS ADDRESSED TO YOUR REASON. Then I asked you if you would be willing to extend the same hospitality to even the same truth, if it were THRUST upon you by a PROCESS which paralyzes your reason?

You answer, "I DO NOT KNOW." Then you put a hypothetical case which of itself clearly demonstrates, to my mind, that perfect frankness would have prompted you to simply say, "No." The numerous and carefully worded qualifications with which you have hedged about your hypothetical proposition are sufficient, it seems to me, to establish the fact beyond question that you would hesitate a long time to submit yourself to such a process, even though the result might be to convince you of a profound truth. I trust our readers will carefully note what you say upon this point, for it seems to me to be of special significance.

What you say concerning the surgical operation to which you submitted, further emphasizes the fact that it is natural for us to shrink from any process which we recognize to be of a destructive nature, or even what we term "abnormal." You submitted to the surgeon's knife only as a LAST RESORT, and I am glad for you that the operation proved a success. But it was perfectly natural for you to put it off as long as you could, and until your eyes were "of little use," as you have said.

And so it would be in the other case. The natural method of receiving an intellectual knowledge of the truth is through the exercise of one's own natural faculties, capacities and powers, and not by or through their suppression and paralysis.

What you say of natural sleep is certainly true. We do not dread it nor shun it, for we recognize it as a natural process and condition during which we are in the hands or under the protecting care of the Great Intelligence which is responsible for our being. If we felt that during this process individual human intelligences could tamper with our most sacred possessions, we should doubtless feel different about it.

But all parties concerned concur in the statement that hypnotism, or hypnotic sleep, is "abnormal," "artificial" and "unnatural" (see p. 87 of the G. P. C.). This fact would seem, to my mind, to account for the natural repugnance of the normal human intelligence to the idea of being reduced to a state of helpless obedience under its paralyzing spell. For the same reason we naturally hesitate to submit to the influence of anaesthetics or poisons.

I also have recognized the difficulties "in the way of any definite and certain conclusions to be reached in this discussion." They are not, however, those to which you seem to attach the largest importance. They are rather those which the author himself saw and so clearly stated on pages 162 and 163 of the book under discussion. I do not believe he anticipated that his own name would be a matter of such profound interest and importance as you and a number of other leading contributors to the symposium have seemed to regard it. Nor am I able yet to believe that the average thoughtful reader and student will either give or withhold his confidence in the integrity of the work for lack of the author's name.

In this connection I have to confess to you and to our readers, not only my surprise, but also some regret that such eminent figures in the Spiritualistic organization as Hudson Tuttle, Cora L. V. Richmond, Moses Hull, yourself and a few others, have obtruded this suggestion so forcibly upon the attention of our readers. I regret to be placed in the position of having to reply to it. To pass it by unnoticed, however, would doubtless leave our readers with a false impression which would prejudice them against both myself and the author, as well as the work we represent.

I cannot believe that anyone of you had in mind the far-reaching and reactive effect of the position you have assumed in this regard. I am wondering if anyone of you is prepared to stand by the logic of your criticisms on this subject, when it is applied to mediumship and Spiritualism. Let us see.

For the purpose of stating the point fairly and without coloring or prejudice, let me quote from the symposium article over the name of "Cora L. V. Richmond," at page 5 of The Progressive Thinker of Oct. 17, beginning with the sixth paragraph:

"The author is anonymous. If it were a letter you would put it in the waste basket. If it were a literary effort it would pass for what it is worth in a literary sense. AS A STATEMENT OF FACTS IT IS NOT ENTITLED TO THE LEAST CONSIDERATION UNTIL THE NAME OF THE AUTHOR IS REVEALED.

"NO PERSON HAS ANY RIGHT TO APPEAR BEFORE THE PUBLIC ANONYMOUSLY STATING ALLEGED FACTS SOLELY UPON HIS OR HER AUTHORITY WITHOUT ENABLING THE PEOPLE TO KNOW WHO THE AUTHOR IS." (The capitals are mine.)

I am informed by credible persons who were present and heard her, that this article was first delivered by Mrs. Richmond as a "sermon," at her regular Sunday service; that it was taken in short-hand at the time and afterwards reduced to type-written form and, with a few alterations, was then handed or sent to Mr. Francis, as her contribution to the symposium.

I am also informed by those who were present and heard her, and who have heard her many times before, that SHE WAS UNDER CONTROL at the time the words above quoted were first publicly delivered.

If this be true, then we have the following interesting situation:

1. Mrs. Richmond is not the real author of the article to which she attaches her name and which she gives to the public as her own.

2. Mrs. Richmond thereby committed the one offense which is held by honest literary men and women to be what might properly be termed "the unpardonable sin" in the field of literature, namely, the offense of sailing under false colors and acquiring a literary reputation to which she is not entitled.

3. The REAL author's name is not known to the public. He is in "hiding," and is likely to remain there for some time to come, as far as the public generally is concerned. More than this, he is "hiding behind a woman," which seems to be an offense of the first magnitude, in the minds of a few Spiritualists and this unknown Spiritual author.

4. According to his own words, therefore, all that this anonymous Spiritual author has said through the lips of Mrs. Richmond, "as a statement of facts is not entitled to the least consideration until the name of the author is known." Applying his own logic to himself, "HE HAS NO RIGHT TO APPEAR BEFORE THE PUBLIC ANONYMOUSLY STATING ALLEGED FACTS SOLELY UPON HIS OWN AUTHORITY WITHOUT ENABLING THE PEOPLE TO KNOW WHO HE IS."

I have heard it stated as a fact, that Mrs. Richmond has for some twenty-five years or more, been the instrument of anonymous spiritual authors who have been giving to the world "alleged facts," many of which are quite as startling as anything the author of the book under consideration has ever uttered.

Have they ever before warned the members of Mrs. Richmond's church through her or, the public through The Progressive Thinker, that all they have thus far given to the world "IS NOT ENTITLED TO THE LEAST CONSIDERATION UNTIL THE NAME OF THE AUTHOR IS KNOWN?"

Is Mrs. Richmond herself willing to attach her name to such a statement and give it to The Progressive Thinker for publication? If so, she is prepared to condemn every statement she has ever made while under control. Not only this, she at the same time condemns the very foundation of Spiritualism as "NOT ENTITLED TO THE LEAST CONSIDERATION."

Is it not a fact that every utterance that has ever come from the spirit world through the lips of a medium under control, is from an "unidentified author," so far as the world is concerned?

Is it not also a fact that some of the most remarkable books that have ever been given to the world are from "unidentified authors?" If I am not mistaken there are a number of Spiritualistic works that are in the same category. And yet, I have never before seen nor heard an attack upon them from your leading Spiritualists who stand so uncompromisingly for "publicity" as to condemn The Great Psychological Crime because you do not happen to know its author.

Within the last few months, since this book was published, I have read a most interesting article covering many columns of The Thinker, and written by one who signs his name "Sargis." I have never heard that any of your leading moralists have condemned his work on this account, although I am told that "Sargis" is not the real name of the author.

Do you not see, my friend, what a double-edged sword you have thrust into this discussion? Do you still feel that it is a proper weapon for those to employ who call themselves "Hunters for Truth?"

And now, just a word of explanation which I trust will satisfy those of our readers who may have obtained wrong impressions from the severe strictures that have been laid upon the book because of its unidentified authorship.

Within a few weeks after the book was published, and long before the symposium, or this discussion, was thought of, the editor of The Progressive Thinker met the author of The Great Psychological Crime and learned his correct name. Mrs. Francis has also met him and knows his correct name. Therefore all the rules of literary ethics have been fully complied with which should entitle the author, or at least his work, to the same consideration that is given to any other.

But more than this, Mr. Francis knows pretty much all there is to be known concerning the life, character, abilities and work of the author. There is no great mystery in it. Other leading Spiritualists have also met the author and know him personally.

In so far as his time and abilities have permitted, he has never failed nor refused to meet any honest seeker after such knowledge as he possesssss. The motive that has prompted him to withhold his name from the public, for a time, is that he might go on quietly with his work under the protecting shield of obscurity, until he has accomplished certain definite tasks which appear to him to be of paramount importance.

To my own mind, knowing the character of the man and his abilities, it has required a far greater degree and higher quality of courage to withhold his name than to have given it to the world with his book. It requires a higher quality of moral courage to go on doing good in obscuirty than it does to advertise ourselves before the public in bold type and thereby receive the attention and applause which our vanity craves.

Other criticisms have been offered by leading contributors to the symposium, from the ranks of Spiritualism. Some of these are presented in such spirit and couched in such form as to prejudice the average reader against both the author and his work. These, however, do not come within the scope of your letter and are therefore outside the present lines of this discussion. I therefore forego for the present the temptation to reply to them, and shall await with interest the presentation of your criticism upon The GreatPsychological Crime.

In the meantime assuring you of my high personal esteem and good wishes, I am, most cordially and sincerely yours, FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

MEDIUMISTIC EXPERIENCES.

Among mediums who did good work for Spiritualism in its early days, and, as strength has permitted, have continued this work to the present time, are Mr. A. F. Talmage and Mrs. Esther N. Talmage, now of Seattle, Washington, but formerly of LaPorte county, Indiana, where they were widely known for their rare spiritual gifts and for their strict integrity.

From the early fifties to the close of the Civil War the Talmages held circles, much of the time in their own home. No charges were made for sittings, and it often happened that investigators from a distance were furnished meals without cost. This "free gospel," with meals "thrown in," came to be in such high favor with many investigators, who came from near and far, to "try the spirits," that it was not long before the Talmages, feeble in health and earning their living by their own hands, found it hard to keep up a supply of food and clothing for their own family, and had it not been for a few patrons who felt it a duty to pay for what they received, these unselfish mediums must have suffered for the necessaries of life, and as it was, they were kept for years on the verge of want.

I dwell on this bit of biography for the reason that, even now, after fifty years of communion with the world of spirits, there are many bald-headed saints in our ranks who are fond of referring to the good old days when mediums worked for nothing, and one might be a good Spiritualist without paying a copper for tests, lectures or literature.

Although the Talmages have received very little material compensation for their long, self-sacrificing service, and are poor in the things men count as wealth, they are exceedingly rich in the consciousness of duty faithfully done; in the knowledge of the constant presence of loving, watchful spirits; in thronging memories of angel guidance along life's devious ways.

Of the Talmages almost numberless experiences as mediums, a few have been recorded by the writer, and for the first time are offered to the public through The Progressive Thinker.

A HARD-SHELL BAPTIST HEALED.

About one-half mile from the humble home of the Talmages, on a country road, lived Calvin Webster, a well-to-do farmer, a close communion Baptist, a disbeliever in the claims of Spiritualism. One summer evening at his usual hour, Mr. Webster retired feeling quite indisposed, but hoping to be better by morning. Instead he grew rapidly worse as the night wore on, his pain becoming unbearable. While thinking whether he could stand it until morning without alarming his family and sending for a doctor, four miles away, the bedroom door opened, and in strode Mr. Talmage, who at once proceeded to administer remedies, which, to the great astonishment of the unbelieving Webster, brought prompt relief.

The reader will ask how this thing was brought about. Near two o'clock at night Mrs. Talmage's guide roused her from a deep sleep, following a wearisome day; told her to call her husband at once, have him read a paragraph on a certain page of a medical work kept in the house, and carefully note what was said. When this was done, they were told by the guide that neighbor Webster was then suffering from a severe attack of the disease named in the paragraph read, and Mr. Talmage was urged to go post-haste to his home and use the remedies prescribed in the book. This is how Mr. Talmage came to be in that sick-room.

Nor did the case end here. The event proved to be a turning point in Mr. Webster's life. Soon after his recovery he prepared an article for a country paper, in which he related all that had occurred, and asked his neighbors to help him to account for the facts on any other theory than that of spirit interposition. No one responded; all skeptics were dumb. Mr. Webster himself wrestled with these and other stubborn facts, became a Spiritualist, and lived to old age, happy in this belief.

A GRANDMOTHER'S LOVE.

Some years after the above event, a family by the name of Beal moved into the neighborhood where the Talmages then lived, occupying a house a quarter of a mile away. As Mrs. Talmage was doing her housework late one afternoon the spirit of an old lady appeared before her, beseeching her to drop everything else and go to the Beals to heal a sick child. Replying to the spirit, Mrs. Talmage said: "Mrs. Beal is a stranger to me and I have not heard of sickness in her family. Should I go and be asked who sent me——" "Tell them God Almighty sent you," broke in the spirit.

But Mrs. Talmage not liking to thrust herself on a neighbor who had not asked her services as a healer, concluded to think of the matter over night. When she awoke the following morning the grandmother-looking spirit was at her bedside, earnestly renewing her plea of the day before. At last, when Mrs. Talmage concluded to go, the spirit seemed overjoyed, but remained, urging and hurrying until the start was actually made.

Before leaving home Mrs. Talmage's spiritual sight and hearing were more fully opened, so that she saw the sick child in its home, lying on a pallet of straw in one corner of a poorly furnished room; saw its mother and a neighbor who had called, and though at least eighty rods away, heard the neighbor say to Mrs. Beal: "Your child has a high fever; you should bathe it and put on a clean night dress." Poor Mrs. Beal, bursting into tears, replied: "I have no other night dress for my child."

Hearing and seeing all this, Mrs. Talmage hastened to the sick one, feeling assured that she had not been deceived. Arriving at her destination, she found things as represented by the old-lady spirit, was able to break the child's fever at once and learned before leaving that its grandmother was the very picture of the old lady who, as a spirit, so persistently urged the visit to her beloved grandchild.

HIGHWAYMEN THWARTED.

The Talmages attended an evening meeting in the village of Westville, four miles from their home. Returning, they had a choice of roads—one running east, the other south from the outskirts of the village. They took the south road, and the sleighing being good they were gliding along merrily when suddenly Mrs. Talmage was influenced by a spirit who told her that men were on the road ahead waiting to waylay them. The spirit was asked why they might not return to the village and take the other road.

"Because there are four men in the waylaying part, and to make sure of their game, two of the scoundrels have taken their places on each road," was the reply.

But Mr. Talmage, wishing to reach home that night concluded to run the risk and urged his horse forward. In a moment a spirit controlled his arms so that he could not hold the reins to drive. This settled the matter; they returned to the village for the night.

Now, it so happened that a neighbor of the Talmages, a Mr. and Mrs. McKellips, returning to their home from the same evening meeting, much like that of the Talmages, in a single sleigh, took the east road instead of the south. When about one-half mile from the village, two men rushed from the roadside, armed with clubs, one of which was thrown violently, striking Mr. McKellips on the back of the head and falling into the sleigh. Fortunately the horse took fright and bore the occupants of the sleigh out of reach of the pursuing ruffians, without serious injury.

THWARTED AGAIN.

One winter morning as Mrs. Talmage was sweeping the snow from the front doorstep, she was civilly accosted by a man in the road who told her he was the bearer of a verbal invitation from a distant neighbor, a Mr. Tryon, the purport of which was that Mr. Tryon cordially invited Mr. and Mrs. Talmage to spend the following Wednesday evening with him at his home. No sooner had the messenger passed on than Mrs. Talmage was controlled by a spirit who told her that the man's words were false; that Mr. Tyron had sent no invitation; that it was a plan to get them out in the evening to waylay them. Having confidence in the spirit, the Talmages remained at home. Later they learned that Mr. Tryon had been absent on business on the Wednesday named; that a visit from them had never entered his mind.

At this point it may be well to give the supposed motive for the two attempts to waylay the Talmages, as just related. A bachelor named Cowish, a near neighbor, had recently been robbed of $600 by masked men, and left gagged in his own yard while they made off with his hoard. The robbers having heard of the wonderful occult power of the Talmages were afraid they might throw some light on their dark deed, and concluded it would be safest to close their lips forever. The fact was that Mrs. Talmage had already been profoundly impressed that one of the gand of robbers was a well-known character living in the vicinity, but knowing that her testimony as a medium was worthless in court, the criminals' secret was in little danger of being revealed by her.

AN INDIAN GUIDE.

At the close of an evening lecture in a country school house, the Talmages and the writer were invited to spend the night with an old-time Quaker named Lewis, whose home was several miles away. Mr. Lewis, wishing to visit a sick friend on another road, could not act as our guide; he therefore gave directions and left us to find our way through the gloom of a moonless night, along a timber-skirted highway. Scarcely were we started when the spirit of a stately Indian chief appeared to act as guide. Mrs. Talmage could see him moving erect in the road, just in front of the horse, and presently she was controlled and spoke of the woods through which we were passing as the favorite hunting ground of generations of Red Men. Passing a heavily-timbered rise of ground, she saw the woods ablaze with campfires, and hundreds of the dusky sons of the forest around them. Stalwart hunters, squaws and pappooses, all were there, eating, sleeping, playing games and holding pow-wows. The Weird scene was vividly described by Mrs. Talmage. Reaching our destination, the facts as related above were given to Mr. Lewis, who musingly asked: "Does thee know that the place where thee saw those fires was long ago a celebrated Indian camping-ground?" We did not know, as this was our first visit to that region. One not a Spiritualist might wonder how that strange scene was limned on the mind of the medium, just then and there.

"CAN'T FOOL INDIAN.

Returning to their home after several days' absence, Mr. and Mrs. Talmage were attending to sundry affairs when Mrs. Talmage, who had seated herself to nurse her babe, was influenced to lay it on the bed, and to throw a shawl over her head and rush out of doors into the deep, freshly fallen snow, followed by Mr. Talmage, who saw that his wife was "led by the spirit." She pressed forward through the trackless waste, over a rail fence, over fallen logs, among stumps, around piles of brush, until at last, coming to a pile of brush of large size, she halted quickly, waved her hands over the pile for a moment, then ordered Mr. Talmage to pull out what he might find beneath the pile. Getting on his knees, he drew forth a large bundle, which was conveyed to the house, Mrs. Talmage again leading the way, whooping and shouting, "Can't fool Indian." Reaching the house the Indian influence left her as suddenly as it came, leaving no impression as to the contents of the bundle—Mr. Talmage's best suit of clothes and other articles of apparel belonging to Mrs. Talmage.

These articles had been taken from a chest, carried into the clearing and secreted before the snowfall, as there was no human footprint to be seen in that direction. The finding of the clothes was the first intimation of their loss. Who took them or for what purpose was never revealed, but it is evident that unseen eyes were watching the game.

An Object Lesson in Immigration.

The horrible tragedy which occurred Nov. 25, near Altoona, Pa., has a lesson aside from the brutality manifested. The press reported the case without comment, leaving the reader perplexed to know how it was possible for so many to be burned to death in a one-story building, with a wide-open door for escape.

When the true story is told, it is almost beyond belief, that there could be such brutal disregard for life, and debased selfishness among people called civilized and Christian. One hundred and fifty Italians were working for a contractor on the Pennsylvania railroad. They rented for sleeping purposes a one-story wooden building, and arranged tiers of berths around its sides. These they filled with straw for bedding. About 2 o'clock in the morning, fire broke out in one of these straw-filled berths, and quickly spread. The alarm was given, and those nearest the one door easily escaped. In a minute more all would have reached safety. But those who had reached the outside at once saw that the building was doomed. The day before had been payday, and they had left their money in their bunks. They wildly rushed to the door to go in. There they met the men coming out. Then the dreadful fight began. Those inside fought to get out, and save their lives. Those on the outside fought to get in to save their money. The ever-ready knife was freely used. The hissing flames in the tinder-like straw maddened those within, to soon end their sufferings. It was over in a few minutes. At the door was fourteen ghastly bodies; within more than a score burned to a horrible mass of cinder. Everyone might have escaped easily had it not been for the brutes who blocked the door in their attempt to save their money. These loathsome creatures are a class, and a large class, of the people this country is inviting to come and accept citizenship under the starry flag. Zealous religionists they are, every one, and will kneel in prayer over the foe they treacherously assassinate. Catholics they are, every one, born Catholics with scores of generations of Catholic ancestors, who have been as sheep to a shepherd in the hands of their priests. The Chinese are excluded. Why? Because they are not Catholics nor will they become Catholics. Every Italian or Polock, or Bohemian who becomes a citizen adds to papal power, and the wisest statesmen nor the President himself, has no more power with his vote, than one of these brutal products of priestly rule.

Bible and Sandwiches.

Miss Helen Gould has a sewing school for girls at Tarrytown, N. Y. The Catholic priest complained that she serves sandwiches with meat on Fridays, and for that reason he forbids Catholic children to attend the school. Miss Gould does not compel them to eat the sandwiches; they can decline to eat them if it is against their consciences. But there is another grievance—and that is, the reading of the Bible, the Protestant version, in the hearing of the girls. Miss Gould insists upon this, whether Father Farley likes it or not.

Doubtless Protestant religionists will approve this program—especially those who want the Bible read in the public schools of our country.

Apparently neither party, Catholic or Protestant, is aware of any deep and broad principle of human rights involved in the matter of Friday sandwiches and Bible reading. They look at the matter only in a narrow religious and churchly point of view, and without regard to the inherent rights of non-religionists who might or might not object to sandwiches, but would surely object to the Bible reading.

Is This Science, or Quackery?

Charles Churchwood, of Columbia, O., was taken to the Lakeside Hospital, Cleveland, O., suffering from lockjaw. A wound in his hand from a blank cartridge was the cause. The attendant doctors exhausted their resources, and still the horrible disease tightened its hold. Then they resorted to the new fad of antitoxin, the serum of the blood of a horse poisoned over and over again, until its blood is so thoroughly fermented with the virus that the vital forces cease to react. For quickness of effect they injected this deadly stuff into the base of the patient's brain.

Now let it be borne in mind this was the thing to do as laid down in orthodox medical books and taught by the most "advanced" professors in medical colleges. It is advertised as the specific cure for lockjaw or tetanus. The great and famous surgeons who gave it are protected by their fame, and diplomas from a charge of malpractice.

As reported, the experiment—it can be called by no other name—was beautifully successful. But the victim died shortly afterward. The heart could not stand the new enemy.

The question now resolves itself into whether the patient died of lockjaw, before the antitoxin got in its work, or if the latter cured him of the disease and then killed him?

Had an attendant injected the poison into the brain of the acting surgeon, death would have followed with the same certainty.

If a man stabs another with a dagger, it is murder. If he has a diploma, and stabs a patient with a needle through which he injects a poison more deadly than that which escapes from the fangs of a viper, it is science! Blood-letting, blistering, purging, vomiting, salivation with mercury have had their day and their millions of victims. The present fad of injecting horrible germ-infected blood of animals to heal disease in man, will go the same way, after it has received its hecatombs of victims.

Now Methodists Would Convert the Public Schools Into Revival Meetings.

The Methodist Conference of Virginia, by its resolutions has joined hands with Catholicism in an attempt to bring the public schools into disgrace. The American school system is maintained intact, against the assaults of Romanism, by the solidarity of the Protestant churches. The latter take their stand not because they do not desire one and all to control the schools according to their own peculiar religious bias, but if one is granted the high privilege all must be, and hence to keep the others out each sacrifices its own demands.

The Methodists have boldly confessed and revealed inadvertently their plan of conducting their campaign. This is the resolution, unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we urge a canvass of education, gradual, but effective, for the use of the Bible in our public schools and the more constant use of it in our own schools."

Interpreted into plain language, the preachers, presiding elders, bishops and laymen of the Methodist church are to work, "gradually," but "effectively," by insiduous advances, to the end of forcing the reading and study of the Bible into the public schools! It must be by "a canvass of education!" The people at large, those who send their children to the public schools, do not want the Bible read, but they are to be unknowingly educated into wanting it!

And should they be by this stroke of Jesuitism, what then? Would not the Catholic complaint that the public schools conducted for the whole people theoretically free from sectarianism, had come under denominational influence, be proven true? Would not the demand be justified that the public school fund be divided, that each sect might use its share in such education as it favored?

How can these sectarians be so blinded by their bigotry and zeal, that they do not see that they are paving the way for the papal conquest of the schools? Can they not see that their success is the success of Catholicism?

Evidence the Masses Can Comprehend.

Their belief in Spiritualism played a prominent part in the fortunes of Charles Ames, of Carson City, Nev., and Mrs. Catherine Spitzler, of Broadway, in Newburg. It was the cause, Ames says, of his finding his fortune in the mountains of Nevada and also of his finding a bride in the woman to whom he was engaged when he went west in answer to the call of the spirits.

As the story goes, when a boy and girl, they lived neighbors at Newburg, Ohio. They became engaged, but owing to his poverty, he did not feel that he ought to marry, fearing he could not support a wife. He was told by a spirit to go to the western mines and he would succeed in finding the precious ore. He discovered and is now operating a gold, a tin and a lead mine.

DR. J. M. PEEBLES.

The Doctor has been near unto death at San Diego, Cal. We are now glad to learn that he is getting better, and in a few weeks it is expected he will be as well as ever.

THE CONTROVERSY.

The Great Psychological Crime controversy is increasing in interest. It opens up a new field of thought to every Spiritualist. Lyman C. Howe and Mrs. Florence Huntley are contesting their respective positions inch by inch, and the same furnishes a vast amount of food for reflection. Their debate is conducted in the spirit of fraternal kindness, each one striving to have the truth correctly presented on their respective side. The healthy growth of The Progressive Thinker at the present time speaks volumes in favor of the discussion now carried on in its columns. It will be well for all subscribers to carefully preserve a file of the papers.

"SPIRITUAL OR PSYCHIC PHENOMENA."

Next week we will publish a most excellent address by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, on the above subject.

"Invisible Helpers." By C. W. Leadbeater, the noted Theosophist lecturer and writer. Very interesting. Price 55 cents. For sale at this office.

Graphic Description of Heaven

Girl's Visions Not Caused by Suggestion—Mary Kidder Still Has Trances—She Grows Weaker and Her Parents Expect She Will Die—Interest in the Remarkable Messages Grows in Intensity.

Later developments and investigation into the statements made by Mary A. Kidder, aged 14 years, of 314 First street, Kalamazoo, Mich., (says the Telegraph), whose ability to give names and describe deceased persons whom she has never seen or heard of, is attracting so much attention in that part of the city, are startling.

The trances still continue, although in a milder form. The girl continues her graphic descriptions of heaven and beings in the other world, although her physical condition is fast becoming alarming. Mr. and Mrs. John Kidder, parents of the child, say they have resigned themselves to their daughter's death, believing it is God's will.

The possibility that the amazing statements made by Mary were caused by mesmeric suggestion, was scouted this morning by several persons, to whom the girl has given messages from the dead.

"Mesmeric suggestion is absolutely out of the question," said Mrs. Edwin G. Russell, of 632 First street.

"When I was called to see the girl the other day I knew nothing of what was to be told me and was not thinking of either my dead brother or my children. My brother, George Hartman, had been dead over 40 years and was never in Kalamazoo. I had not thought of him for probably 25 years, and when the child named and described him I was too amazed to speak. She gave me this message:

"'George says, tell my sister she is not preparing herself to come, but she must do so at once.'

"When she named my two dead children I was not thinking of them, and am absolutely positive that no member of my family was at that time.

"One of my boys, Victor, died 15 years ago in Pennsylvania, and the other, Carlton, died in this city ten years ago. Both were very young and I question if a half dozen of my relatives ever remember the names of the two children."

Mrs. Addie Hess, of 709 First street, denied ever thinking of her deceased husband, Cyrus Hess, at the time Mr. Hess was named and described by Mary and a message given Mrs. Hess from her husband.

"It is past my understanding," she said this morning. "I was not thinking of my husband at the time and simply went into the Kidder home out of curiosity and to see how the child was getting along."

John Kidder, father of the girl, said this mornin:

"The wonderful statements my child has made to me cannot be explained. God, I believe, has marked her for his own. He is simply fitting her for a greater work and I have resigned myself to the inevitable. I know she will not be with us long.

"I believe as faithfully in what the child has seen as she does. When she told me she had seen Joseph Kidder, a cousin of mine who died during the civil war, I was not thinking of him—in fact, I had to stop and think to recall his name. 'Was his name Joseph?' she asked, and then I remembered. She named and described a large number of my relatives who have been dead for years and gave me messages from them. She told me of my first wife, who was killed in a railroad accident at Decatur in 1884, and gave me a message from her. As yet she has made no mistakes either in names or descriptions."

Many people have visited the Kidder home in the past few days and are greatly interested in the peculiar case. Dr. Frederick Shillito, the attending physician, is making every effort to stop the trances, as the nervous strain under which the girl labors while in a cataleptic state, it is feared, will prove fatal if they continue.

HUMANITARIAN WORK.

Genuine Humanitarian Work exceeds in importance all religions, all creeds, all cults, and even Spiritualism itself. Genuine charity, administering to the sick and needy, assisting those struggling with poverty, and relieving the one in temporary trouble, should be the aim of every reformer.

Humanitarian work transcends everything else in importance. We have tried to impress upon Spiritualists the importance of humanitarian work in connection with our cause. Without humanitarian work any sect or religious body of any kind is composed simply of dry bones. Take for example the non-sectarian methods of Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones:

Jane Addams' famous Hull House Settlement in Chicago will have an active rival when the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones' new church edifice which will be constructed on the lines of an apartment house, is completed. Now that the designers have finished their task the work of construction will begin at once, and it is believed the new building will be ready for dedication within a year. The structure will be erected at a cost of $150,000.

While the venture of the All Souls' Church pastor and flock will be along the lines of the Hull House Settlement, it will be unlike it in many particulars. Hull House is a philanthropic institution from beginning to end. This new institution will be, in a measure, subordinate to the church itself. It will be an oddity in that the spiritual work will be blended with the temporal and the work of the combined humanities of this pastor and flock will then be carried on on an extensive scale.

Backed by a mere handful of followers, Dr. Jones built the present All Souls' structure at Oakwood Boulevard and Langley avenue, Chicago, nearly a quarter of a century ago. From the very beginning it has been non-sectarian and non-denominational, and it soon became a magnet which attracted a considerable following. The tolerant spirit of the pastor, his joviality and ambition to found a great institution, which should be the meeting place of the rich and poor alike on a common plane, soon won him many warm admirers, and his following has now become so large it is almost impossible to attend to the many diversified elements in the present stinted quarters.

All races and creeds are represented in the following of the pastor. A half dozen or more of the most wealthy Hebrews of the city are among his constituents and most liberal supporters. They vie with Methodists and Presbyterians and high church Episcopalians in aiding his projects. The negro problem was long ago settled there. The negro is on the same footing as his white brethren, and his interests are as carefully guarded as are theirs.

To a certain degree All Souls' Church will lose its identity with the opening of the new institution, as it will be known as the "Abraham Lincoln Centre." This name for the philanthropic section was chosen because it touches thousands still living with a peculiar pathos; because it radiates benignity, humility, a Christ-like patience; because it was the name of a saint of the new order, a martyr of the present day.

"This centre will not be built on the implication that you have to go away from home to find a field for work," said the pastor recently.

"Our aim is to interpret religion in terms of sociology, rather than theology, and we are as inclusive of social stations as of theological creeds.

"The new settlement will be for employer and employe, for millionaire and errand boy. And it has no water in it; it has been projected for ten years.

"The Abraham Lincoln centre will carry on its activities in a six-story brick and concrete building. The basement will be used in manual training, games and boys' reading rooms. The Hill reading room, library, pastor's office and other working rooms will be located on the first floor. An auditorium with 1,000 seats for All Souls' Church will occupy the entire second floor. Sunday school and class rooms will occupy the third floor. The fourth floor will be devoted to social and literary clubs and seminary and memorial rooms. Resident workers will have the fifth floor, and on the sixth will be the gymnasium and domestic science department.

"The motto of the building is that it may be 'emblematic of the hearty, straightforward ideal of the man for whom it is named and that it may have a soul, the light and beauty of which will shine through and beyond its walls.'"

Besides the six assistants to Mr. Jones nearly a score of the church-members devote one-half of their time to the activities already under way. Many other workers give part of their time to work among the poorer classes in the territory north and west of the church. One of the activities—or humanities, as Dr. Lloyd calls them—is the Helen Heath Settlement, which is located in Halsted street, almost in the shadow of Hull House. This branch of the work has a library, penny savings bank and sewing school, all of which are run in conjunction with the kindergarten, and all are in a flourishing condition more than one hundred children being cared for daily.

The manual training department in the new building will be one of the best equipped in the city.

I again repeat that any Spiritualist society, any religious society, any Club or Cult that does not engage in some one or more respects in humanitarian work, is simply composed of "dry bones."

JUST FOR A MOMENT, THINK OF IT!

"While Rockefeller's income from the oil business for the year amounts to $28,600,000, his associates and stockholders will collect a total for the year of $14,750,000.

"It was said that Rockefeller's income from interests independent of the Standard Oil Company, such as railroads and other industries, amounts to far more than his income from the oil business.

"The profits paid by the Standard Oil Company, however, are the largest of any corporation in the world. In the past five years Rockefeller has reaped as his harvest from the business $141,700,000."—San Francisco Examiner.

The above special dispatch from New York appeared in the San Francisco Examiner.

A little earlier than that the Baltimore Sun said:

"In the early part of this month, before the Standard Oil Company had raised the price of its product, Mr. Rockefeller took one of his Cleveland friends into his confidence and told him that 'the personal comfort religion has been to me has been such that sometimes I feel that I would like to go upon the lecture platform and tell the people about it.'"

That recalls the case of the deeply pious woman of Virginia before the war. She became so wrought up over the idea of the salvation of the souls of the heathen of China, that she sold Sam, one of her slaves, and tore him away from his weeping wife and babies, and sent him handcuffed and in chains to Mississippi, in order to get money with which to send the gospel to China.

Ingersoll used to tell of a man who murdered a stranger for money in the timber; and over his dead body devoured the dead man's lunch—all except the meat. The meat he would not eat because he "was too religious to partake of meat on Friday." Rockefeller can crush all competitors, wreck railroads, bulldoze railroad officials and force them to give him unlawful rebates, starve his employes, blacklist honest working men and if they strike for an advance in wages cause them to be shot down like dogs, look with scorn and contempt on hungry, half-naked, half-starved women and children living in shacks unfit for cattle, monopolize oil, coal lands, railways, and other public utilities, charge ten times more for oil than it could be furnished for if he did not monopolize it, corrupt legislatures and courts, subsidize the press, muzzle the teachers in his colleges, intimidate the pulpit, and then thank God he is not as other men—that he is so religious and good that he feels constrained to go up and down the earth and cry aloud: "Repent, believe and be baptized ye sinners, or be damned."

Mr. Editor, was it not Jesus who said some severe things about the hypocrites who thanked God that they were better than other men, but who devoured widows and orphans and were themselves like whitened sepulchres, fair without but all corrupt within?

THE HOLY HEIGHTS.

I am tired to-day—o'erclouded,
As the world goes weltering on;
Let my soul fly up to the summits
Of the best days lived and gone.
I would not throw off my burdens,—
Not even the ones which smite,
But I must rest, so let me dream
In Memory's holiest light.

There are sacred days in all lives,
No matter how low they run,
Rich in the impresses which last
Longer than earth or sun;
Little actions which intertwine
Around the immortal part
As well as its temple, wherein plays
The blood of the mystic heart.

The days when we loved our best loves;
The days when some unseen law
Smote us prone as we clashed with it,
Weak as if "men of straw,"
But arose from our quick prostration
Wiser and humbler toe,
Ready to say "there are many things
To learn, to avoid, to do."

All human lives are such brief things,
If they had not our souls in thrall
It would seem but a silly waste of time
That we mention them at all.
For in all the whirling and rushing
Of a restless universe,
The ephemeral factors which make up men
Are the easiest to disperse.

Light, heat and life are so shifting,
And their products change so soon!
The finest brain, in a little while
Lies deader than the moon.
The heart which is supersensitive
To Life, with its stabs and shocks,
Throbs, hurts and burns for a little space
But soon with the years deadlocks.

Two factors abide eternally,
Outworking all things there be;—
Matter and Gravity,—they are the gods
Laboring creatively.
Filling the boundless universe
With nebulae, planets, stars,
Whirling them onward through vasty space,
Wondrous flaming cars.

Light, heat and life! They are all allit,
Scene-shifting things everywhere,
Save on the dead worlds,—they roll on
In blackness, blank and bare.
Did you ever think of a dead world
Traveling through the sky?
And feel that your body may ride on one
Ages after you die?

They carry no freight of aching hearts,
No tortured sub-human lives;
No light, no life, no stir, no pain,
In those black cars survives.
The ashes of the struggling things
Which lived, and loved, and died,
Will whirl around a rayless sun,
Taking a long death ride.

So when I tire of fret and shock,
And cannot see the gain
Of life's close struggle, that black dream
Stalks in to kill the pain.
I know, in ages yet to come,
The old dead world will seize
All sacred matter I have loved
With human ecstasies,

And bar it, for a space at least,
From sentient torturings;—
But it will take its place, sometime,
Where fresh creations spring;
So let me climb the holy heights,
While earth goes weltering on,
And waste an hour in looking back
On good days, lived and gone.

Where Are the Spirits of the Dead?

The Rev. Frank W. Luce, D. D., is no doubt a highly educated gentleman, and profound theologian as well. But when he asserts as he did in the St. Louis Globe Democrat, Oct. 25, that the spirits of the dead are in hades, the abode of death, and live in obscurity, which means gloom and oblivion, I for one beg leave to differ from him, and that, too, most decidedly and emphatically. I am glad to say, I know he is mistaken, and thankful that such is the case.

In reply to his question, Where are the spirits of the dead? I reply, they are all around us, on the earth and in the spheres upon spheres above us. Many earth spirits do not desire to leave our environment, and remain always near us; while on the other hand others more refined and etherealized and spiritualized wish to advance and in time rise to the purer and more advanced spheres surrounding our earth. After they have become thoroughly educated and purified and spiritualized, higher and higher from sphere to sphere they advance until ultimately they reach perfection and no longer desire to return to earth again. They are in heaven, the abode of eternal happiness and content of the blessed.

Dr. Luce asks: In what condition are our spirits after death? I answer, they are precisely the same as they were on earth, in character and mental equipment, without the body attachment and its wants. They retain the same memory, capacity and characteristics. But spirits never are in a hidden or concealed place or obscurity.

They want freedom of action. They will not even venture in our houses as a rule, as they fear they may be restrained of their liberty.

As Dr. Luce truly remarks, they have power of conversation and are in full possession of reason and their mental faculties. But there is no impassable gulf fixed as he intimates; all have the same chance to advance in the spirit world that we have here, and to go on and on from one sphere to another, until the highest is at last attained. True they are at first just beyond the veil of obscurity to most of us, but not to all of us. For I know from personal experience they are very near and dear to me, and I can communicate with them, for they come to my home and speak, laugh and sing, just as if they were in the flesh.

When we depart from our earthly bodies and our glorified spirits released from all earthly bonds and affiliations, we will be met by the purified spirits and ushered into the future life, the abode of the blessed. Then death can have no sting, the grave no victory over us, for evermore.

IF INGERSOLL CAME BACK.

Message to Humanity--Twentieth Century Plan of Religion--Public Opinion vs. the Right of Individual Expression--Ingersoll's Maligner Rebuked.

E. Finley Kitson, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—I did not say that Mr. Ingersoll committed suicide; I merely repeated what someone else said, supposing he knew what he was talking about. I have written the family explaining matters.

Rev. Dr. Fitch, of Buffalo, or most any clergyman in New York state can tell you who I am. Respectfully,

F. A. STROUGH.

Kalamazoo, Mich.

To the Editor:—The attached note is a verbatim copy of Rev. Strough's reply to my letter of Nov. 11, re the calumny of a libelous assertion. The "evangelist" shifts the authority of his accusing words to the shoulders of another—the Rev. Dr. Agnew, prominent in Presbyterian circles of Philadelphia, Pa., and in turn that gentleman (a distant relative of the Ingersoll family by marriage) denies in toto any and all responsibility for such utterance.

Is it possible that Rev. Strough, in his thoughtless zeal for the orthodox cause in which he is the hired laborer, sought to accentuate the value of his services therein by the promulgation of an added falsehood to those espoused by the great "trust" to which he adheres?

Was his purpose that of flattery of the ghost to which he bows—orthodox public opinion?

Did this "reverend" gentleman presume to profit by the absence of the noble hero, whose body is dead and who could not defend himself against the unmanly charge?

Did he thus wantonly exercise his individual right in an expression of a villainous opinion?

Out on you and yours, Rev. Strough, and may shame go with you into hiding! You have assuredly exercised your individual right in expressing an opinion; but that opinion is unwarranted, and the public mind has much less to thank you for to-day than yesterday, because of the fact that that opinion is not in any wise associated with truth.

There is, however, a circle of individual right, within which every man's opinions are sacredly his own, even in defiance of public opinion, and which his manhood and self-respect demand that he shall never surrender; but that prerogative is limited. The law of compensation adjusts such rights for every human being, and while the analysis of public opinion is always timely, and the purpose of learning how best to serve the public good is worthy, to know how best to serve one's self is the true base of reflection. In so doing, the interests of the greater majority are conserved.

By the way, "public opinion" is not an infallible standard of right. Contrarily, it is ofttimes wholly wrong, and its judgments are frequently revised and reversed by its own consent, after a full hearing adjusting itself to a basis practically just and true. Public opinon, ruffled at times by such vaporings as those of the Rev. Strough, grows prejudiced against the truth, and it is an error to accept all the passing and changing words of the public mind as the fixed and final verdict of public judgment. The public opinion that teaches the most valuable and impressive lessons resembles the bosom of a great ocean, when viewed in the grandeur of its all-pervading calm. The mariner who mounts the wild waves of a storm-tossed sea, and midst their dash and roar forces his altruistic, vibratory thoughts into the crests of those tempestuous monsters, may find his free-thought barque temporarily wrecked upon the breakers of public opinion.

"Public opinion be damned!" is the universal thought expression of the fearless freethinker, who cares naught for any element of society save that which is receptive of the teachings from the higher sources of wisdom. Such is the voice of those who refuse to be the servile and unquestioning followers of its behests! Right is might and will surely prevail, although time is required for the development of the psychologized public mind into the standard of philosophic thought established by these advanced thinking messengers.

Robert G. Ingersoll, of the modern thought-weavers, stands alone and in an unique attitude towards orthodox public opinion. His masterful words of wisdom regarding the philosophy of life (and the practicability thereof as demonstrated by him), are emblazoned upon the tablets of historic memory, and in characters that will not efface. His teachings were logical and scientific, reason having characterized his every utterance. The faith of tens of thousands of believers in myths was disturbed thereby, and to those myriads are being added constantly. Thought, such as Ingersoll evolved, will in time do away with the "evangelistic" functions of the orthodox variety, and the atmosphere, by means of intuition, will flood the mentality of mankind with all that is needed to guide along the pathway of progressinve intelligent religious natural life.

If Bob Ingersoll, the distinguished agnostic, were to-day in the form, all that he would wish to change of his former teachings would be expressed in language such as this: "I now know of a higher destiny than earth for man!" But I feel assured that the added knowledge which is his since in the realm of spirit would preclude the advocacy of any of the numerous systems of orthodoxy now in vogue in this land where free thought is the heritage of all. He would doubtless teach the god-ideal—perfection. His silvery voice would still be heard in opposition to intemperance and vice. His clarion tones would echo and recho throughout the world as a protector of virtue. His humanitarian pleadings would inspire the selfish to unlock their doors to charity's call. His manly bearing and the magic of his words would impart new-old lessons of energetic effort in behalf of his fellow-man toward a higher and nobler standard of domestic life. His majestic personality would be seen and heard upon the rostrum in advocacy of an altruistic government for the benefit of the masses and classes alike. He would tell us of Nature's God, and point the way of physical and intellectual development of the god-power within us, to the end that we might be prepared for the spiritual expression awaiting all god-creatures that breathe the breath of life!

But notwithstanding his sojourn up there for more than four years of earth-time, he would not have any news to communicate concerning the orthodox God to whom so many blindly bow; neither would he disseminate any intelligence regarding the "holy trinity," or the Jewish Maiden, Mary, whose fabled sufferings were of such vile nature as woman should not bear. He would tell us to be good; to be energetically industrious; to be thoughtful; to be considerate of the welfare of others regardless of their stations. His message would inform us that the great God-Spirit which dominates Nature throughout all of its ramifications, is the only deity to which our praises should be ascribed. The magnetism of Col. Ingersoll's disclosures would touch the hearts of men as they were never touched before, could he but come back in person and unfold unto a benighted world his revised message of love, sympathy and kindness. In that event, his mission here would not be in opposition to the churches, but to their unreasonable, illogical, impossible dogmatic teachings! His exalted purpose would be that of destruction of creeds, and in their stead the establishment of one great body of brotherhood and sisterhood, the confines of which would be coextensive with the globe and include the whole of the human family—white, red, black, olive and yellow. He would be the pre-eminent advocate of harmony among men and nations of men. Following his counsel, armies would be disbanded and wars would be at an end! The whole world would be at peace! The birds of the air, the beasts of the wood and field would not be unnoticed in his appeal for justice on behalf of all of nature's creatures. The fishes of the brook, the tiny insect of the ocean and land would benefit by his heart-felt plea to you and me for their protection. The flowers, the trees, and all these would smile a welcome to the return of nature's champion, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

With the Bible of nature as his faultless guide, this new and modern savior of humanity would unravel a twentieth century plan of salvation of the soul—an up-to-date method of pursuing a life of progressive happiness, everlasting—which the exercise of our reasoning powers would urge us to accept. Pious theology of the monopolistic sort would pale into nothingness before the onrushing influence of the divine revelations of nature's forces, and love, the true religion of life, would rule the day. The beauties of truth in its sublimity would forever disrupt superstitious idolatry, while justice for the now and future would banish all relics of the visionary mythical past; in other words, the present systems of homage to a variformed deity, such as the Rev. Mr. Strough and his fellow-religionists adore, would dissolve speedily before the revolutionized power of the Spirit God of Nature, whose gladdening influence now permeates the hearts and homes of the untrammeled free.

Much more might be embodied in the message which Col. Ingersoll would bring back to earth, and anything he might say would not bear the burden of venomous ignorance appertaining to a defenseless individuality or ism! His inspired mission could only prompt the kindliest counsel for his neighbor and friend, pointing to error where error was to be found, with a love of righteous justice for one and all.

What Jealousy Does.

My psychic friend, whose statement concerning his self-cure and clairvoyant vision anent the resurrection of the the worldly-minded spirit I. heretofore reported, relates the following equally as interesting narrative of his experiences:

"At one time my means did not permit me to board expensively, and I had to find cheap lodgings over a grocer's family. The father was a somewhat avaricious man and jealous of everybody with whom he could not come into sympathetic rapport—that is, of all who were his superiors.

"During my three years' stay with him, I noted that he had many losses in business and grumbled accordingly.

"Toward the end of this time I dreamt one night that I was in his employ and that he treated me ill, imposing unnecessary drudgery on me. I thought nothing of it, and attributed it to indigestion.

"At a subsequent seance, after receiving some sweet spirit messages, suddeny one came, saying: "Now for the meaning of your dream of durudgery!"

"I was very much surprised at this, because I had forgotten it, and felt sure it had no meaning. But this was written:

"'You thought that dream was meaningless because so insignificant. But it was symbolic of your landlord's feelings towards you. He burns with jealousy towards you because he imagines you think yourself above him, in not being able to put yourself on a familiar footing with him; and he therefore would like to humiliate you to the level of a drudge. But what he has been planning for you, came to him in the order of nature's law of cause and effect. He attracted to himself the humiliation on which he had set his heart for another. Business became dull comparative to the force of his jealousy, and in which his family joined. It is a case of "vengeance is mine" under your immediate notice, and which will stand clearer before you as you reconsider the whole case.' But this is nothing out of the ordinary. It is a general rule, only that the masses do not recognize the signs of spirit operation—aye, Nature's method of enforcing her divinity or humanity. A little more perspicuity in this direction would make men and women pay more attention to the smaller affairs of life and less to that which is of no consequence, though seemingly greater." ARTHUR F. MILTON.

"IF A MAN DIE, SHALL HE LIVE AGAIN?"

There are many ways to know, if with patience ye will go
In search of living facts proving life is void of end;
Thus in giving unto those, one or more will tell ye so,
That the proof of our existence we can send.

Our bodies were not all that sprang from life's great tree,
Nor is earth the only place where we could dwell,
And the knowledge that is ours some day will come to thee,
A story sweet and true, such as love's own voice would tell.

The mists now cold and damp, sometime may pass from view,
Then will a sun shine brightly over head,
Distilling light for you, from its own perfected hue,
Till eyes of thine shall see—there are no people dead.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

IMPORTANT QUESTIONS.

"What is Spiritualism? and Who are Spiritualists?" These questions are answered in a lecture from the standpoint of the young and rising speaker, Will J. Erwood, of La Crosse, Wis. He well says: "No matter how sublime our philosophy, if its principles are not practically applied, we have lost what it contains."

These questions are oft-recurring ones, and simply indicate the channel in which the minds of the people run. The fact that they come before us at almost every point, is one of the "signs of the times" which speak eloquently of the desire of man to know more of the object and ultimate of life.

In view of the fact that Spiritualism and its various phenomena are thoroughly in accord with the laws of nature, and are well established as tangible realities, we will lay aside the doubts as to the genuineness of spiritual phenomena, which assail the minds of skeptic and unbeliever, and will dwell more upon the beauties, and what we know to be true of this philosophy.

So thoroughly has the matter of spirit power and communication been demonstrated, that there is no longer any question as to its reality and truth, save in the minds of those whose scope of investigation has been very limited, or whose prejudice has prevented them from searching out the underlying principle of truth in spiritual phenomena.

The religion of Spiritualism, if I may call it such, is two-fold and far-reaching in its effect and nature, in so far as it embodies a philosophy, which presents the very highest code of ethics, and a phenomenal side which furnishes positive proofs of its fundamental claims, which fact brings it at once into the sphere of science, philosophy and religion of the higher order.

While we make no effort to deny the existence of the many gross frauds and charlatans, who are masquerading under the name of spiritual workers, we assert that any and all persons who have given the matter any time or attention, and who have carefully considered all sides of Spiritualism, will readily distinguish the difference between the true and the false, hence are rarely, if ever, deceived by the impostor who aims to work upon the credulity of the uninformed, therefore we naturally conclude that there is but little to fear from the exposure of these wolves in sheep's clothing, on the contrary there is much to be gained by such an expose.

Because of this we court the widest investigation, and ask all investigators to learn something of the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism, studying all sides of the question before they come to definite conclusions as to the origin of the various manifestations.

The majority of persons will readily concur in the statement that there is no question of more vital importance than this one which deals with the conditions, or lives of men after the change called death, hence the increasing need and desire of all to know more and more of this most fascinating and important subject—of knowing something of the philosophy which deals so closely with this change, and with the state of affairs prevailing on the other side of the "valley of death." Instead of death being a dividing line between the two expressions, or spheres of life, it is the link which connects those who are still in the mortal form, with the friends who have passed into the great beyond—is the gate which stands ever ajar to admit of the entrance of men into the world of spirit, and the transmission of messages from that world to the denizens of earth.

Spiritualism stands pre-eminent among the leading sciences and philosophies of to-day, and for any one to deny the existence of the great mass of evidence which supports its claims, is to evince ignorance of a subject which is commanding the attention of the leading minds of the age. It is fast becoming recognized as an important factor in the emancipation of the human family, and as a promulgator of much needed reforms.

Because of this fact it is not to be wondered at, when we find men in every walk of life turning their attention to the solution of the problems which confront all on the threshold of death; neither is it surprising to note the great number who have satisfactorily answered the question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" That this question has been satisfactorily answered, there can be no doubt; that it is a benefit to have it answered, there can be still less doubt, as the knowledge which enables us to know what conditions will prevail when we, too, have passed beyond the "shadows of the valley of death," gives to each an incentive to evolve the highest and best which lies within.

It is useless to longer attempt to make intelligent people believe that the spiritual manifestations so widely presented to humanity are the result of delusion, hallucination or trickery, as too often has the most conclusive evidence been brought forward to greet the eye, ear and receptive senses of those who ofttimes "come to scoff, but remain to pray."

For this reason, those who have given the matter the most careful attention and study, feel that they are fully justified in making the assertion that Spiritualism, when fully understood, becomes at once the greatest consoling element in life, and the strongest mentor, from a moral and spiritual point of view, inasmuch as it teaches and proves the active continuity of life, thus sweeping away the doubts and fears with which the mind may have been assailed—removes the skepticism which threatened to swamp the individual in a storm of materiality, and teaches morality for morality's sake, and not because of a fear of the consequent punishment to be meted out to the transgressor, and yet Spiritualism, philosophical Spiritualism, asserts that none may transgress without being subsequently punished, severely or otherwise according to the extent of the transgression.

Furthermore it is safe to assert that Spiritualism as taught by those "Masters of Life" who have solved the problem, and graduated to the higher expression, or plane of life, is not a theory, but a living reality—not theoretical but practicable and demonstrable, and proves that those who have passed beyond the "borderland of death" are not entirely shut off from the friends of earth; and that the ears of men are not deaf to the vibration of angel voices, nor their eyes blind to the beauties of soul life which lie beyond the cognizance of the more dense physical senses. The veil which seems to intervene between the denizens of earth, and the inhabitants of the world beyond the tomb, is being torn asunder by angel hands, and through the development of the higher soul attributes in man, and humanity is allowed to peer in no uncertain manner into the to-morrow of death.

If those persons who are inclined to criticise the philosophy of Spiritualism would first stop and consider what it really means in its truest and highest sense, their prejudices would vanish like dew before a summer sun, and instead of their minds being full of dismal forebodings as to the ultimate of man, there would dawn within their consciousness, a full realization of life's true value, and living would be worth while. If all men and women were as cautious about what they absorb in a physical sense, as they are about accepting the proofs of the continuity of life, there would be fewer man leaving their bodies, as a tribute to "King Alcohol," and fewer women whose lives would be wrecked as a consequence thereof.

A careful investigation of the facts presented in substantiation of the claims of Spiritualism, will readily dispel the idea that there is anything uncanny or unnatural about this philosophy or its phenomenal side. Spiritualism declares that when we have gone into that sphere of existence commonly called the "spirit world," we are still the same individualized being we have always been, and instead of being a mere clod as it were, we are realities. This being true, the sooner we recognize the fact that every time we come in contact with a friend from across the "Borderland" we are dealing with a tangible and real personality, the better it will be for all concerned.

When this has been done, and we can feel that our friends have simply clothed themselves in finer bodies, and that it is a mark of individual culture and growth when we are permitted to see them "face to face" the joy of that communion will be greatly increased. They vibrate on a higher plane than we, hence are not visible to the physical sense of sight as readily as to the spiritual perceptions.

The knowledge that these dear ones who have passed to that other life, are active, intelligent and conscious entities, takes away the dread of personal contact with them, and gives pleasure in the realization that death is simply a liberator, allowing the freed soul to enlarge its sphere of usefulness. Why should the seeming intangibility of the arisen ones induce the feeling that to deal with them we deal with that which is uncanny and vague? We think nothing of the fact that we are continually partaking of elements just as intangible in order to sustain the physical body which is our temporary dwelling. The intangible mass of substance by which we are surrounded, we drink in, in order that we may partake of the necessary amount of oxygen, etc., and feel no repugnance, and yet this is living matter as truly as you and I are living beings.

Why, then, shall we draw back in terror when we see an ethereal hand reaching across the chasm of death, and hear the melodious tones of the voices of loved ones long since gone before? There is no tangible reason for this feeling of dread, on the contrary there should come a thrill of joy at knowing that we are so fully developed that we may be thus blessed—that our hands may sense the touch of "angel fingers" and our eyes see, and our ears hear the wonderful workings of natural law in its efforts to demonstrate beyond a doubt, that the dead die not.

In the category of spiritual manifestations, there are many phases and degrees of phenomena, the extent and wonder of which it would take more time than is now at our command to explain. Suffice it to say there is no phase which is not founded upon natural law, and which is not the logical outcome of the most natural causes. In the minds of all who are concerned with the mysteries of nature there is the firm conviction that nothing, absolutely nothing unnatural can transpire in a universe dominated by natural law, hence all manifestations of spirit power, from the tiny raps made by angel hands, to the building up of a full-sized material form for the temporary accommodation of that arisen one who wishes, for a short time to vibrate in unison with their mortal friends upon a material plane—who wishes to become visible to the physical sense of sight, are pre-eminently natural, and everywhere are to be seen such evidences as will convince the most skeptical of the genuineness of these phenomena, and the reality of the continuity of life.

Because of all this, I will say in answer to the query, "What is Spiritualism?" Spiritualism is the philosophy and science of life as related to all things, celestial and terrestrial, and embodies a system of demonstration and ethics, such as enables it to substantiate its apparently abstruse claims, by scientifically arraying facts of phenomena, in the extent that the cobwebs of doubt are literally swept away, and the emancipated being who has fully assimilated the truths it presents, begins to breathe more freely than of yore.

You question its manifestations? You doubt the continuity of life. Which is the most reasonable theory—that which says when a man dies it is the end, or that which says the same principle which impels the onward and upward growth of all things, from the tiny plant, to the mighty world; from the new born babe to the most profound philosopher?

If no after life, then what? It is the old, time-tried question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Where, then, can such a question be answered, if not in Spiritualism? In what system or philosophy can that answer be found, if not in the spiritual one? Can we prove anything without tangible evidence? Must there not be evidence before a case can be tried and decisions rendered? Where, then, outside of spiritual demonstrations, or evidences of spirit power, can the required testimony be found? There can be but one answer, and that is "Nowhere!" I repeat, outside of the demonstrations of spirit power, through the various and divergent manifestations presented, it is impossible to find one iota of evidence which will prove positively, the active continuity of life, hence the assertion that Spiritualism is the key which unlocks the door of the storehouse of nature's mysteries—which unlocks the mighty gate of life and death, allowing rays of the sunshine of knowledge to greet the watchful eye of mortal man—permitting angel loved ones to stray back for a moment, to whisper fervently "All is well," is well grounded and apropos.

When we have caught a glimpse of those forms divine from the world of spirit, it simply means that we, (the Ego) have asserted ourselves and have temporarily overcome the limitations of physical attributes to the extent that we are consciously recording the vibrations of intelligence from the more ethereal planes of life.

I say "more" ethereal planes of life, but that is merely speaking from the viewpoint of those who function upon the so-called material sphere of action. In reality there is comparatively little difference between the tangibility of the spheres. It is merely a matter of developing up to that standard wherein we can cognize the more rapid vibrations. He, whose ear is deaf to the music of the human voice, might well say, there is no human voice; while that one whose eyes are blind to the beauties of nature, to the sunshine and the broad, blue canopy which spreads o'er head, might well say, "these things have no existence," but, the testimony of those who see and hear not, fails to alter facts, as far as the ones who have witnessed the glories of nature, and listed to the soft cadence of the voices they love, are concerned.

Touched by the gentle hand of inspiration, the soul man plays upon the harp of life, producing a symphony of truth and wisdom—of sympathies and achievement which thrill kindred souls with the vibrations of joy and peace, and a "thousand years become as a single day," inasmuch as the harmonies of ages of development course through the deep channel of the minds of men.

Subjected to the influence of those who have lived and died, and lived on, childhood, youth and mature age are guided into the hazy depths of trance, and lo, the broad expanse of the field of thought and knowledge is revealed through their quickened mentality. Transformed by the intelligence under whose influence they are, they become at once, poets and philosophers, orators and logicians. Progressive thoughts are formulated into words, and emanate like scintillating rays of light from the glorious orb of day.

Unconsciously or otherwise, as the case may be, the voice speaks on, guided by the intelligent soul to whom it has been loaned, giving forth in cadence not its own, the wisdom of ages—the accumulation of years of knowledge and research in the realms of life, which have found their abode in the minds of men long gone before.

Oh, glorious truth! Oh, wonderful law, permitting such a transformation scene in the mentality of the children of men, in order that we of to-day may keep in touch with those souls who have been the "Beacon Lights" of history, and who now function in the world beyond the grave.

Just as the acorn when planted in the soil, travails, bursts the shell in which it is encased, and springs forth in response to the urge of life within, becoming in time the mighty oak, rearing its branches and boughs far, far above the location of its roots, spreading shade and giving comfort to all who rest therein, so the soul man is planted in material form, passes through the travail of experience, burst the physical shell, that it may grow upward and onward into the realm of souls and spirituality, giving light and comfort to all with whom it may come in contact.

Spiritualism is a philosophical science of life, which says we are responsible for the actions transpiring in our lives to the extent that we have developed consciousness and discretion, and going still further says that the transgression performed in ignorance must needs bear its harvest of pain, causing us to learn by the suffering consequent.

But who are the Spiritualists of to-day? What a great question, but with the simplicity of all that is truly great. If to be a Spiritualist means simply a belief in a continuity of life, and a possible chance of communing with those men and women who have passed into the great beyond, then Spiritualists are legion. All who believe in the survival of the soul after death—who believe in the communion of saints, are Spiritualists; but, if to be a Spiritualist means the development of the very best that lies within—if it means the doing of the grand and true, because we know it is right, and for the very pleasure of it—if it means the living up to the highest standard of morality, up to the standard of the teachings of the inspirers of men—if it means soul culture and illumination, then of a truth, "many are called but few are chosen."

Spiritualism cannot be taken piecemeal, as it requires all sides to make a well-rounded out philosophy. Thus we must have the phenomenal evidence, as that is the rock upon which we have builded the structure of knowledge, and Spiritualism is essentially a religion of knowledge; then it requires the philosophical side in order that we may know why these things are facts, why the phenomenal side is true.

It requires the scientific arrayal of its evidence, and more than all it demands the practice of the principles taught by those who have gone into the better world, as well as by the most advanced here. I say the better world, because of the greater possibilities, the sublimity of the material by which its denizens are surrounded, not because I believe it to be a different world in the real sense of the term.

Of what value are the teachings and revelations given us by the sages and philosophers of the celestial zones of life, if we fail to profit by them—fail to apply them in our daily life here? No matter how sublime our philosophy, if its principles are not practically applied we have lost what it contains.

It is Life, abundant, pulsating life that Spiritualism seeks to inject into the natures of men, that they may be up and doing, here and now. The great school of developments which has one of its grades upon this material sphere, is wide in its scope and takes in all that live, and it is fact in this school, as well as in all others, that the man, woman or child who will study, is the one who will grace the head of the class, and win the laurel of victory.

Spiritualism, then, is the religio-philosophical science of life, and the Spiritualist is the one who knows how to live in harmony with all that is true, noble and just, and knowing how, LIVES.

When You Are All Bound Up and are suffering from indigestion, lack of appetite, foul breath, headache, dyspepsia, catarrh of the stomach, kidney and liver complaints you need a tonic laxative, something that will move the bowels quickly, easily and without leaving hurtful effects behind. Never use a purgative or cathartic. They weaken the bowels and system and make the disease worse. Use instead Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine. It tones, builds up, gives new strength and vigor, not alone to the bowels but to the whole being. Only one small dose a day will cure any case, from the lightest to the worst. That means cure, not simply relief only. Most obstinate cases yield gently and easily and the cure is permanenet. Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine is not a patent medicine. SPIRITUALISM DEFENDED.

Dr. H. V. Sweringen comes to the front with ringing words in defense of our Cause. He repels the attack on Spiritualism by the Rev. J. N. Field, and illustrates forcibly the fact that the reverend gentleman is weak in common sense.

No society or sect can successfully claim a corner on, or monopoly of truth, religious or secular. That there are two or more sides to religious, as to all other questions, is made evident by the number of separate and distinct denominations in christendom to-day.

In accordance with his previous announcement that he would deliver a series of sermons on the various "isms" of the day, the Rev. J. N. Field, of the First Baptist church, of Fort Wayne, has, thus far, preached upon "Dowieism," "Mormonism" and "Spiritualism." Just how clean a sweep he proposes to make of the "isms" the writer hereof is not in a position to say. Whether the next "ism" he will mercilessly attack, will be "Calvinism," "Lutheranism," "Catholicism," "Wesleyanism," "Campbellism," "Baptism," "Methodism," "Congregationalism," "Episcopalianism," or "Presbyterianism," I am unable to decided.

Spiritualism has much in common with all these "isms," for they all embrace much that is spiritual, beautiful and true. But it also comprises not a little that is emphatically and diametrically opposed to them, and it is for this reason that the Rev. J. N. Field has felt it incumbent upon himself to attack it from his pulpit.

For example, Spiritualism teaches that: "There can be no death in any such sense as the churches have taught, Death as change of expression, as transition to a higher plane of being, as, a birth into a more refined and spiritual world, undoubtedly exists. But death as a penalty for Adam's transgression, death as an end of being, death as an end of living, death as the close of man's probation, as a point which fixes man's eternal destiny, is a fossilized conception of an ignorant and barbarous past which our age must reject, as it does a thousand other absurdities believed by primeval man. "Death is not the end of life, but an event in life." The exhortation of Seneca and the exhortation of the theology of to-day, to think on the end of life, is reasonable only in the sense that the end of earthly life is the beginning of a higher and fuller and more spiritual life hereafter.

There can be no final condition to an eternally progressive being like man. As well may we talk of the final condition of one of the great luminaries of heaven as it speeds through illimitable space! The law of progress, which is co-extensive with the universe and coeval with time renders the idea of the orthodox heaven and hell impossible and absurd."

Modern Spiritualism is founded on certain present day revelations or certain phenomena. The genuineness of these phenomena, the orthodox church persistently denied as long as it could do so consistently. Finally being obliged to acknowledge the fact that there were bona fide phenomena, it sought to dispose of them at once by attributing them to the devil. But this disposition of them was soon discovered to be very unsatisfactory. An appeal was then made to scientists who were yet loyal, orthodox christians, to explain the phenomena of Spiritualism upon any other hypothesis, than that of the return of the spirits of the dead.

The result of this appeal was that there soon appeared a book entitled "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," by Prof. T. J. Hudson. That this book was written in the interest of the orthodox church, seems evident to the writer, because so many of his orthodox friends have inquired of him whether or not he had read the book.

Let me here state once for all, that I have read the book of Mr. Hudson, in which he endeavors to explain the phenomena of modern Spiritualism upon, or by his dual theory of subjective and objective mind. But this theory does not explain my experiences, nor those of Spiritualists generally, in the phenomna of Spiritualism. While Mr. Hudson has failed among Spiritualists in establishing his explanation of their phenomena, he has succeedd admirably in aiding them to establish the fact of their occurrence for which we are all very grateful to Mr. Hudson, and through him, to the orthodox church.

Will the reader please observe what this scientific writer, who was not a Spiritualist, has to say on page 206 of his book, on the subject of spiritualistic phenomena? He thus writes:

"I will not waste time, however, by attempting to prove by experiments of my own or of others, that such phenomena do occur. It is too late for that. The facts are too well known to the civilized world to require proofs at this time. The man who denies the phenomena of Spiritualism to-day is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant, and it would be a hopeless task to attempt to enlighten him. But I shall attempt to explain their origin on other grounds than the supposition that they are caused by the spirits of the dead. In other words, I admit the alleged phenomena, but deny the alleged cause."

It will thus be observed that the phenomena of modern Spiritualism, whatever may be their explanation, are established. What are we going to do iwth them? What is their relation to, and bearing upon science and theology? Do they answer in the affirmative Job's question: "If a man die shall he live again?" If so, then why should the orthodox church antagonize and reject them, unless it be because it is fearful, that, along with, or close following such phenomenal proof of a future life, there are other truths or revelations which may seriously compromise some of its dogmas. If I may judge from the prevalence of materialism, agnosticism, infidelity and unbelief, both in the pulpit and pew of the orthodox church, it is time that it was struck by some such lightning as a genuine spiritualistic phenomenon, no matter in what part of its dogmatic anatomy it strikes. It will require some such profound shock to cause a re-action sufficient to awaken it up to a realizing sense of the progress in psychic science going all around it, and, quietly, within it.

Since the fact of the prevalence of genuine spiritualistic phenomena can no longer be denied, it is incumbent upon us to investigate its significance. What does it mean? It surely means something. If it is not investigated in the church, it is bound to be, outside of it. Indeed, it is now being investigated by all classes of people, whether in the church, or out of it. It is unnecessary to mention even a few of the illustrious names of those who are at present engaged in its examination. There is, however, no name more revered in Rev. Field's church than that of its lamented famous missionary, Adoniram Judson, whose daughter, Miss Abby, was a most pronounced Spiritualist, and the authoress of several important books on the subject of Spiritualism—a fact not generally known among Baptists. Her brother, the Rev. Edward Judson, now occupies the chair of Homiletics in the Chicago university. Miss Judson, at the sacrifice of many old-time personal friendships, preferred to be true to her convictions, with the despised minority, than to be false to them, with the popular majority.

It is remarkable what changes will take place in the thoughts and opinions of men. One of the greatest evangelists of the orthodox church a few years ago, was the Rev. Fay Mills. He was patted on the back by all of the churches. But they have suddenly stopped patting him, for he has cut entirely loose from all their dogmas, insisting that there is but one religion, and that it is composed in love to God and the practice of the Golden Rule in our dealings with our fellow men. One of his utterances in a recent meeting (for he still holds meetings), rather points toward a belief in Spiritualism. He says: "It is not inconsistent with what we know of the past, it is not inconsistent with the great revelation of God to believe that the world of spirit is about to be more fully revealed unto men."

It was Martineau, I believe, who said: "We do not believe in immortality because we have proved it, but we forever try to prove it because we believe it." I cannot quite fully endorse this statement. We would naturally suppose that our orthodox church people believe in immortality, but they seem to make no effort to prove it. Bishop Foster, of the M. E. Church, confessed that he did not know that death did not end all. Many of the clergy and their parishioners are skeptical about a future life. They depend entirely upon faith and hope. This fact accounts to a great degree for the lack of interest and enthusiasm in the church to-day. On the other hand, those who are to-day attempting scientifically to prove a future life and have proved it to their satisfaction, are those who were formerly denominated materialists, agnostics and infidels, and who engaged in the investigation of Spiritualism for the sole purpose of exposing it as a humbug, and thereby sustaining their preconceived opinions.

I am well aware, that the argument of the church is: "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." I claim this blessing most emphatically, in various and numerous instances. Indeed, I look upon Paul's definition of "faith" as being one also, of "knowledge." "Faith," says Paul, "is the evidence of things unseen." Now, if we acquire "knowledge" from "evidence," then I know that I have been in communication with deceased friends, although unseen, for the "evidence" of their presence as impressed upon my mind and reason through the sense of hearing alone, is simply indisputable.

This "evidence," to a certain degree, is not infrequently realized among orthodox preachers and occasionally crops out irresistibly in their pulpits. The Rev. S. A. Northrop, one of Rev. Field's predecessors, affirmed that he often felt the presence of his deceased mother with him in the pulpit. The Rev. Lyman Abbott affirms: "I am scarcely less certain that for some years after my mother's death I was influenced by her spiritual presence, than I am that I have of late years been influenced by persons corporally present. But if one serenely and scornfully skeptical, asks me for a demonstration of my faith, I should only answer him that the 'evidence' is my own experience, and that I neither can share it with him nor desire to do so." The Rev. Dr. Heber Newton (Episcopalian), in a sermon on Spiritualism, said: "It is a fact concerning Spiritualism that through it the conviction of the life to come is taking a new hold of man's mind and heart. Myriads of men are to-day rejoicing in a firm and positive conviction of the reality of the life to come who but for this movement would have been left in the doubt which overshadows vast masses of men to-day. This faith has become so vital that it renews the early Christian joy in the presence of death. Instead of impugning the sources of this renewed faith, let orthodoxy make more real to those who abide within its folds, this ancient and fundamental and vital faith of men."

The Rev. Dr. Sunderland (Presbyterian), in a sermon, spoke as follows: "I do not believe, and cannot believe, that it would be impossible for my sainted parents to send a thrill of influence to help me in the hour of distress, or in the time of sorrow. Nor do I think that a belief in their ability or disposition to do so is out of harmony with the teachings of God's word. The whole tenor or scripture goes to show that the departed spirits of the redeemed are unbound and unfettered. * * * We know little of the possibilities of a spirit free from the limitations of the flesh."

The Rev. Dr. John Henry Barrows in an address at the opening of the World's Parliament of Religions, said: "It seems to me that the spirit of just and good men hover over this assembly. I believe the spirits of Paul, of Buddha, of Socrates, of Jeremy Taylor, of John Milton, of Roger Williams and Lessing, of Tennyson, Whittier and Phillips Brooks, are here. I believe that the spirit of Abraham Lincoln, who sought for a church founded on love to God and man, is here."

But my space is limited, and I must forbear adding any more of the many utterances from the pulpit of every denomination, which show that the "evidence" of a future life, upon which the orthodox church relies, is, essentially, spiritualistic in character. Although not recognized, Spiritualism constitutes all the vitality there is in the church today; it is the warp and woof of the whole Christian fabric, however much it may wish to pose as censor of the church, but it is my opinion that if it would give this 'evidence" the attention its importance demands, there would be fewer materialists, agnostics and infidels within it, less selfishness in the world, and such men as Rockefeller, Gould and Cassatt would cease fighting to own it.

Instead of adopting Professor T. J. Hudson's explanation of the phenomena of Spiritualism, the Rev. J. N. Field prefers to revert to, and endorse the old theory of "magis" as his explanation. In the light of modern developments in psychic science, I am not a little surprised at this. It is true, that ever since the three 'magicians" by "astrological" assistance, visited the Child Jesus, whose birth was foretold by a "dream," a "vision," and a "ghost story," Spiritualism has permeated every class of people, every religion under the sun; but in this, the beginning of the twentieth century, its evolution has reached a point at which its true significance is dawning. The very universality and many phases of Spiritualism, accounts for the endless variety of theories introduced for its explanation. But, like the primitive American Spiritualist, we are now "seeing God in the cloud and hearing Him in the wind," or with Pope, we see that "All are but parts of one stupendous whole, whose body nature is, and God the soul."

The Rev. Dr. Funk, one of the publishers of The Literary Digest, who is not a Spiritualist, recently announced a very satisfactory test and message he received from the Rev. H. W. Beecher, and which is familiar to the reader. Will the Rev. Field's theory of "magic" explain it? Through mere idle curiosity, the Chinese minister to the United States, Mr. Wu, recently went into a seance in Washington, D. C. The result was that he received communications, both oral and written, in the Chinese language, which were amazing, interesting and satisfactory to him, because the language, intelligence and names attached to it were absolutely unknown to all present, but himself. Will the Rev. Field's theory of "magic" explain it?

About one-half of the Rev. Field's sermon was devoted to the relation of some of his experiences in the investigation (?) of Spiritualism, which were very humorous, and thoroughly enjoyed by the large audience present. I could relate some experiences equally funny, and some, absolutely disgusting, in my investigations of the subject, and so can many Spiritualists. But we must expect such experiences, as long as we are to obey the scriptural injunction or command to "Try the spirits whether they be of God (good and true), for many false prophets are gone out into the world. Beloved, believe not every spirit." The trouble with Brother Field was that when he went to Buffalo last week to investigate Spiritualism, he fell among these "false prophets," fakes and humbugs, and from the tone of his description of them, I rather think it pleased him. He got what he was looking for, and he returned to Fort Wayne "loaded for bear."

I here freely admit that some of my experiences tally well with the scriptural charge of their being "abominations." But, on the other hand, many of them are in grand accord with yet other scriptural passages which are most pronounced, beautiful commendations of them. These, Brother Field did not read. His scriptural selections upon which he based his remarks, were the ones usually chosen for such attacks upon Spiritualism, and have been completely overwhelmed a thousand times by other selections from the same volume. His sermon is a very old one against Spiritualism, and has been time and again unanswerably answered. Like as a lawyer, Brother Field was engaged in making out his case against the defendant, Spiritualism, and he appealed to the "law and the testimony," the Bible, for his purpose, but well knowing that the defendant's counsel can appeal with equal, if not better success, to the very same source, in behalf of his client. And so, hardly worth while for either side to appeal to the Bible. Science is rapidly settling the question for us and in support of Spiritualism, Brother Field to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Rev. Field made a number of admissions in favor of Spiritualism, which were absolutely denied to us by the pulpit a few years ago. His assertion that Spiritualists claim that Spiritualism is a new "ism," indcates that he is not well up in their literature, at least on this point. There are a few more points which might be noticed, but I do not wish to impose upon the good nature and liberality of the Journal-Gazette.

Whether Jesus was a Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian or the founder of any other of the sects of our day, is a question I will not attempt to answer. That He was a Spiritualist, and the greatest medium of the ages, through whose mediumship life and immortality has been brought to light, and the stone rolled away from the door of the sepulchre of thousands of human hearts who thought their dead lived not, his Biblical history has certainly established. "The works that I do, ye shall do also, and yet greater."

JUST A GIRL.

Many a throne has had to fall
For a girl,
Just a girl;
Many a king has had to crawl
For a girl,
Just a girl;
When a hero goes to war,
He may battle for the right,
But 'tis likelier by far
That he sallies forth to fight
For a girl,
Just a girl.

When the doctor turns to say,
"It's a girl,
Just a girl,"
Papa murmurs with dismay,
"What! a girl,
Just a girl?"
Ah! but why the sadness there?
Why the bitterness displayed?
Some day some strong man will swear
That the great round world was made
For that girl,
Just that girl.

Why did Adam take a bite?
For a girl,
Just a girl;
Why was Troy swept out of sight?
For a girl,
Just a girl.
O! would heaven still be bright,
And would any good man care
To achieve it, if he might Never claim forever there
Just a girl,
Glorious girl?

CURES DEAFNESS AND CATARRH.

ONLY ONE REMEDY IS CERTAIN AND THAT IS "ACTINA."

Deafness is the direct result, in 95 out of every hundred cases, of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The effect of catarrh is to fill up and clog the air passages with deposits, these in a short time stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Deafness ensues, and the hearing cannot be restored until these deposits are removed. It is impossible to reach the inner ear by probing or spraying, and that is the reason why the greatest aurists and physicians find their skill baffled. But science has discovered a way to reach these heretofore inaccessible portions of the head. This discovery has been named "Actina." It is a vapor current which, passing through the Eustachian tubes attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal deposits, so that they pass away, and at the same time loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, so that they immediately respond to the slightest sound vibration. Ringing noises in the head are also caused by catarrh, and are the premonitory signs of deafness. "Actina" never fails to cure this distressing affliction; we have known cases of years' standing to be cured in three weeks. "Actina" is also a certain specific for asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are either directly or indirectly caused by catarrh. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, also sent Free. Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 248 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Influence of the Zodiac Upon Human Life,
With Character Readings of Persons Born Upon the Cusp.

The principles found in this volume are both a science and a religion, for a better and a far happier humanity. It points to the planets as an index to the human character and liability to diseases; also gives the gems and colors suited to temperaments evolved under certain planets. But the author, ELEANOR KIRK, lays special stress upon the fundamental principle that "All maladies known to man can be entirely dominated, forever cast out, by those who realize that mind is the master and body the servant." ..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Spiritual meetings every Sunday evening, at Perl's hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, near Western avenue. Mrs. Hanson, assisted by Dr. Randall. Mrs. Hanson and others will give tests.

Mattie E. Hull writes: "I am happy to report that Mr. Hull is rapidly improving at present. He came down to dinner for the first time in nearly a month last Friday. He is out of doors for the first time to-day since he was taken ill. He walked to the Temple and back this forenoon. It will be a long time, I presume, before he regains his former strength."

I know three priests, bright, brilliant men, who would leave the church if they could only be assured of some employment in which they might gain an honest livelihood. One of them said to me, about ten years ago, while talking on this very subject: "If I leave the church starvation, perhaps ending in suicide. If I remain where I am it is a life of hypocrisy. I have given the matter serious thought and am fully convinced that God Almighty views with more horror a suicide than a hypocrite."—Charles McArthur in the American Citizen.

Mrs. Morrill has just concluded her engagement of two months with the Grand Rapids society. She will be in Alliance, Ohio, for the month of December. Those desiring to correspond with her will please address her at that place during this month. Permanent address, 965 Stewart avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Woodlawn Spiritual Society will hold a spiritual meeting every Sunday evening at 7:30, at hall, 355 East 63rd street, near Madison avenue. Some of the best new thought lecturers and spirit mediums will be there. W. H. Mohlar, president; Prof. J. E. Smith, pastor.

The Englewood Spiritual Union, 528 W. Sixty-third street, Hopkins' Hall, makes the following announcement: "Mrs. N. S. Noyes, of Boston, an eminent astrologer and most gifted and pleasing speaker, will lecture before the Englewood Spiritual Union on the evenings of November 22, 29 and December 6, at 8 o'clock and will be present at the afternoon conferences which take place each Sunday at 2:30 p. m. The years that Mrs. Noyes has devoted to the study of the Solar Man have enabled her to gather most wonderful and valuable lessons from the planets and stars, and to thoroughly unravel the mysteries of the heavens that have perplexed earth's most assiduous students for centuries. Through the lessons thus mastered everybody may profit by attending her lectures. Her forecasts and horoscopes have served as valuable guides and instructors to thousands."

Elizabeth R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "Mrs. M. T. Longley has closed her engagement with the First Spiritualist Association of this city. The Ladies' Aid meets every Thursday evening. These gatherings are always well attended. It brings the people together during the week for social and intellectual thought. Mrs. Lees Edson will minister to this society for the next three months. The Educational Spiritual Society holds meetings at 519 9th street N. W. This society is in a flourishing condition. The German Spiritual Association will hold its regular meetings at Wons Hall, 721 6th street N. W., every Sunday at 2:30. Addresses by E. F. Niemeyer and Mrs. Zoller, Mr. Max Gentzke, the editor of the German Spiritualist paper, organized this new society some few weeks ago. Mr. Gentzke will make his home in Cincinnati, Ohio. He is the newly appointed missionary for the German Spiritualist field by the N. S. A."

Adelaide K. Brooks writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union wish to express its appreciation for the most excellent services rendered by the gifted and accomplished lecturer, Mrs. N. S. Noyes, who has been serving our society for three Sundays past. Her very presence demands the attention and respect of our large audiences. With a marked individuality, a most pleasing personality, we predict a brilliant career for our sister and co-worker from Boston."

The Rochester (Ind.) Republican says: "Dr. E. H. Denslow, of Sturgis, Michigan, addressed a fair-sized audience at the Spiritualist church, last evening, and those present considered it an hour well spent. The subject for the discourse was 'The Spiritual Development of Man,' and dealt principally with the higher attainment which comes as a natural sequence from the study and comprehension of natural law. 'Suggestion,' said the speaker, 'has played a direful part in the drama of life. For ages we have been taught that we were weak worms of the dust, born in sin and raised in iniquity, therefore just inheritors of the kingdom of darkness. This suggestion impressed on the pliable brain of the unborn child has evolved a creature of fear and misery, who, unconscious of his oneness with God, denies God. When the law of suggestion is understood, the world will produce a higher type of man and womanhood, from the fact that they will be born with the thought of love, hope, cheer, health, happiness and good will toward every living being, and above all with a realization of the germ of divinity implanted in the soul which only waits opportunity to unfold men into Gods here, and now.' The lecture was an educator and just the kind of teaching calculated to make the world better. Dr. Denslow has consented to remain over next Sunday and the public can confidently expect to have another intellectual treat."

Mrs. E. Zimmerman writes from Pennsylvania: "I received the books I sent for, with great joy, and I will try and induce as many as I can to subscribe for your paper."

Aug. Recht writes: "The Society of Spiritual Truth which meets at Crosby Hall, 423 Classon avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., had a well attended meeting Nov. 29. Mr. Rassmussen lectured on spiritual phenomena, which was interesting and very ably presented. A number of communications were then given by him and other mediums."

Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain writes from Milford, Mass: "I have been much interested in the criticisms of The Great Psychological Crime, as published in your valuable paper; also in experiences of several mediums. I cannot appreciate the losing of their identity, and being governed or controlled entirely by outside influence. I have been a medium over fifty years, and when I have asked advice of spirit friends, they have invariably, after expressing their opinions, said: 'We have told you what we think is right and best, but use your own judgment.' I have sometimes felt sorry that they would not decide some questions for me, but they would do only as I have stated."

Brother John Woolman writes: "The Universal Occult Society has moved from its old quarters, 3120 Forest ave., to 253 East 31st street, just east of Michigan avenue, south side of street. The hall that we formerly occupied was in such bad repair and so unfitted in every way for our work that we decided to give it up. We are now holding our lyceum and evening services in the parlors of Brother and Sister Aitkins, 253 East 31st street, which are large and commodious, and capable of holding quite a large number of people. We will hold our meetings there until such a time when we will have secured a place that will suit us in every way, as we desire a place that we can make permanent. Since I last wrote you we have organized, and are now a full-fledged church organization, with the following officers: President, Dr. H. E. Ballard; Robert Gilray, vice-president; J. W. Caldwell, secretary; W. B. Aitkens, treasurer; Dr. H. E. Ballard, W. B. Aitkins and C. W. Caldwell, board of trustees. We have in connection a Ladies' Auxiliary with 12 members, who are indefatigable workers, and are making a big record in bringing converts into the fold of Spiritualistic knowledge. Bro. Robert Gilray is pounding away on Natural Law, and using our slogan, 'THINK FOR YOURSELVES,' as a hammer to drive in the nails of Spiritualistic truths. Our audiences are composed of earnest seekers after truth, and they listen profoundly to the grand philosophy of Natural Law, and when they are further regaled with the psychic revelations by our good and honest Sister G. E. Aitkens, they evince their satisfaction by coming out boldly and acknowledging the absolute truth of these revelations. They go away committed to Spiritualism, which is proven by their coming again and again to our meetings, and placing their names on our register. We are actuated for truth's sake, and want only the truth, and no medium shall at any time occupy our rostrum who has not been thoroughly investigated as to their honesty, by our committee. Spiritualism has been held in check in a great measure by 'freak mediums,' who have insisted on thrusting their phases of mediumship upon the public, who have gone to hear them in a spirit of investigation, and who have been driven away from this beautiful knowledge by this class of impostors, and instead of the investigator (for the first time) going away edified and encouraged to investigate further, they go away nauseated, and ridiculing this beautiful truth. Under these circumstances do you blame us (who are ourselves seekers after the truth) for having such an investigating committee?"

The Logansport (Ind.) Reporter of Nov. 20, says: "J. G. Hinderer, for a number of years one of the best known Spiritualist mediums in Indiana, was arrested last night at Anderson, and locked up. He will be taken before an insanity board, Hinderer has been acting queer for more than a year. He has had trouble with his family, and especially his daughters, all of whom have left home. He was out with a revolved yesterday and wanted to kill his brother. He went from saloon to saloon and drank heavily during the afternoon. He dropped his gun in one of the saloons and there said that he was after his brother. The police were notified and he was locked up."

S. M. Rogers writes: "For several Sundays past the patrons of the First Spiritual Society of New York City have missed the loving face and presence of their president, Mrs. Henry J. Newton. After the many years of faithful service of Mrs. Newton and her kind-hearted husband, the absence of both of these much-loved people from the platform at the regular Sunday afternoon services, seems a crushing blow, almost too great for endurance. To-day Miss Gaule was compelled to fill both places, that of president and medium, and to the credit of herself and her guides, she never appeared in better form. I would like to add that they have added to their already large corps of entertainers another beautiful and accomplished vocalist in the person of Miss Mabel E. Clark. Her songs are among the most difficult, and are sung in a manner that speaks volumes for her teacher's patience and her own talents. In singing 'The Land Beyond,' and 'Adore and Quiet Be,' with piano accompaniment by Mrs. Edmund Severn; the lady proved her voice one of rare quality and range."

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in the columns of The Progressive Thinker are for sale at this office. Bear this in mind.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Dr. J. Hoffman writes: "I take this occasion to express my gratification with your course, as well as my appreciation of your courage in permitting the symposium that has lately both edified and instructed your readers. It has edified those who see from above, and instructed others who have to twist their necks to look upwards. In the end, I do not think that much good will come to the 'dyed-in-the-wool' Spiritualists. Well, if you could not put a new pattern into the rug, the beating you gave it has at least knocked out a great deal of dust! You have appeared to me in a new light of late, showing how little we know of our oldest acquaintances and that many of us do not show their true colors, or, at least, all their colors, unless forced to the front. Most heartily do I wish you a long life of health and happiness."

Mrs. S. S. Rockhill writes from Alliance, Ohio; "To-day closes the month's work of D. A. Herrick, of Grand Rapids, Mich., with the Independent Church. He and his estimable wife go to the latter place to fill an engagement for the winter. Our society has secured the services of Mrs. Cora Morrill, of Grand Rapids, Mich., for the month of December. She comes with the highest recommendations, and we anticipate much from her ministration. Friends in Canton, Salem and other towns are invited, as we are connected by electric cars."

C. W. Stewart, C. M. Folsom and Josie K. Folsom are meeting with good success at Howard Hall, on Olive street, St. Louis, Mo. On Sunday evening last the hall was packed to the doors with a very intelligent and appreciative audience, and Mrs. Folsom gave forty readings, that were every one recognized by the persons to whom they were given. In nearly every instance the full names of both spirit and mortal were given. Mrs. Folsom's mediumship is truly wonderful, and many are convinced of spirit return through her work. Mr. Stewart's lectures are well received and Mr. Folsom's trumpet seances are very fine. Their address is 3013 Dickson street, St. Louis, Mo.

C. J. Barnes, the excellent trumpet medium, is now located at 1020 South Eastern avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

J. M. White writes from Kansas City, Mo.: "The materializing seances which are being held here through the mediumship of Mr. W. W. Aber are attracting a great deal of attention. Dr. Bowker, a well-known resident of this city, is frequently seen here and his materialization is natural in every way. Spirits come from the cabinet, addressing their friends in languages which no one but those addressed understand. Mr. Aber understands no language but English and we have heard Swedish spoken by the materialized forms. Recognition is the invariable experience of all who come honestly seeking for truth. The seances are well attended by representative people at the residence of Mr. Aber, 3422 East 10th street, Kansas City, Mo."

Harry J. Moore conducted memorial services at Rochester, Ind., last Sunday. Mr. Moore has some time in August (the latter part) open for camp engagements. Address him in care of this office.

Mrs. A. A. Averill writes from Lynn, Mass.: "The month just concluded has been one of the most successful months ever enjoyed by the Lynn (Mass.) Spiritualists Association. Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates have been the speakers during the month, and they fully sustained the excellent reputation which preceded their coming here, and have made a host of warm friends who will be rejoiced to welcome them back for the month of March, at which time they will be with us again. They are also engaged for September at Unity camp, and for October and November at Cadet Hall. One of the pleasant occasions of their visit has been the union meeting held under the auspices of the society on Nov. 28. The association entertained as guests large delegations from Salem, Beverly, Newburyport, Haverhill, Lowell, Lawrence, Stoneham, Woburn, Malden, Chelsea, Cambridge, Burton, Waltham, Providence, R. I., and individual visitors from many other places. The exercises were in charge of President Alex. Caird and consisted of short addresses by the prominent ones present. Supper was served in the banquet hall to nearly two hundred, after which the audience was treated to an hour's concert by Chase's orchestra. We feel that this was one of the most successful union meetings ever held under the auspices of the Spiritualists, and believe that its influence for good will be far-reaching. The children's lyceum connected with the association, in charge of J. O. Allan, is in a very flourishing condition, additions to the roll of membership being made every Sunday. Free instruction is given to the children every Tuesday evening, in both singing and elocution, by competent instructors, Harry C. Chase being in charge of the musical part, and Miss Mona Belle Welch, the class in elocution. A fine list of speakers has been engaged for the remainder of the season, Dr. George A. Fuller being with us the first two Sundays in December, and Mr. Thomas Cross the last two. Mrs. Whitlock, Mrs. Katie Ham, Mr. Scarlett, Mr. Hutchins, of Springfield, and other good talent will be heard later in the season."

Spiritual meetings every Sunday evening, at Perl's hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, near Western avenue. Mrs. Hanson, assisted by Dr. Randall. Mrs. Hanson and others will give tests.

A Spiritual Chautauqua Contemplated.—The Jamestown (N. Y.) Post says: "The plan for a new Spiritual Chautauqua is making rapid and substantial progress. G. F. Lewis, of Cleveland, acting secretary of the new movement, is at the Sherman house, arranging details for the new organization. Yesterday a meeting took place at the home of G. G. Chase, which was attended by Rev. J. G. Townsend, Mrs. Clara Watson and others who are interested in the Spiritualist and liberal religious movements. All expressed themselves as earnestly in favor of the movement. To a Morning Post representative Mr. Lewis stated he believed the first Sunday in June would see the new Spiritualist center in full blast. He also stated that no charge would be made to the grounds, the only cost to those who attend being a small admission fee to the lectures. It is proposed to secure the attendance of the best speakers in the liberal denominations, and also of the most famous platform mediums obtainable. No effort will be made to build hotels or cottages. Those interested will board where they choose and will visit the new assembly when they desire. The plan is different from that pursued at Chautauqua, Lily Dale, or any of the other summer assemblies in Western New York. The site is still to be selected and Mr. Lewis' visit to Jamestown is partly for that purpose. As soon as the weather moderates he will go up the new line of the Chautauqua Traction Company, and will inspect the Cole and Douglass property near Victoria, three miles this side of Chautauqua. He will then cross the lake to Point Chautauqua, which has also been highly recommended as a beautiful location, and will return to this city over the J., C. & L. E. railroad. Mr. Lewis is associated on a committee to choose the site with R. H. Wallace, of Cleveland, assistant general passenger agent of the Erie, and President F. L. Chase, of the Jamestown, Chautauqua & Lake Erie. Mr. Lewis himself is well known in railway circles, having made himself famous years ago by the purchase of the 'Crosscut' line, from Buffalo southwest across the county through Mayville and Sherman, now a part of the Pennsylvania system. Among the leading promoters of this Spiritual Chautauqua is Hon. A. Gaston, of Meadville, formerly president of the association at Lily Dale. Mr. Lewis called on Mr. Gaston on his way here, but found that Mrs. Gaston had just died, and that the time was inopportune for taking up the matter with that well-known Spiritualist. Mr. Lewis, who is the oldest Spiritualist in Ohio, is very enthusiastic over the new movement and confident of its success."

J. M. Conley writes: "It is with great pleasure that I take this opportunity to express my heartfelt wishes for the success and interest that the medium, Mrs. Isa Kayner, has awakened in Grand Junction, Colo., since her arrival here. I have found her a most estimable and refined woman. She holds her work most sacred, and that alone will bring success, and open up an avenue of thought and investigation among people. I have found through Mrs. Kayner the key-note to a great many things that I was unable to solve. She has been able to explain all I have asked, to my entire satisfaction."

Mrs. L. M. Hoffman writes from Toledo, Ohio: "The Independent Association of Spiritualists elected on Nov. 4, the following officers: H. E. Dowd, president; Dr. W. O. Hubbel, vice-president; H. J. Hoffmann, financial secretary and treasurer; W. Lynch, recording secretary; trustees, J. Newton, Wm. Traverse, Arthur Page, Louisa M, Hoffmann and Lizzie Dowd. We have organized a lyceum which is prospering. We had Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit, Mich., with us for the month of November. Our hall was crowded. The last evening of her engagement Mr. Carpenter took part in the services, and we had a rare treat, both being such able speakers. We have for December, Mr. and Mrs. Walt Ripley, of Yorkshire, England."

The Progressive Spiritual Society will hold a social the third Thursday of each month, at the home of Mrs. Wm. Hilbert, 204 Burling street. Games will be played for prizes and refreshments will be served. All are cordially invited to attend.

George S. Hall comes here from Columbus, Ohio, well recommended as a healer of remarkable power. He is now located at 3019 Vernon avenue, near the corner of Thirty-first street.

Frank T. Ripley is now at Anderson, Ind., lecturing and giving tests.

I note that somebody wants proof of intuition being true. Intuition is truth felt and what is feeling but life itself? Do we need proof to know that we feel happy or discontent, calm or excited, hot or cold, joyous or tormented by pain? Study self and you will need no more proof of one than of the other.—A. F. M.

Mr. G. Hess writes from Peoria, Ill.: "Mrs. S. E. Pemberton, trumpet medium, of 805 Summit street, Bloomington, Ill., was with us in a developing seance at our home. We had present fifteen friends, and the results were fine. The spirit lights were grand and were seen by all present. Carrie, Mrs. Pemberton's independent guide, played with baby Clifton while our spirit friends talked through the trumpet. Sister Pemberton is a fine medium and deserves a seat on the throne for her good work in this city and for her honesty as a medium."

Mrs. Adelaide K. Brooks writes that the wonderful test medium, Mrs. J. A. Murtha, will be with the Englewood Spiritual Union at Hopkins' Hall, 528 W. Sixty-third street, Dec. 13 and 20.

Dr. Beverly writes: "At Lakeside Hall, corner Thirty-first street, and Indiana avenue, the Spiritual Science Society will give an entertainment Thursday evening, Dec. 17, for the benefit of the society. The program will be fine. Little Florence and others will sing. The best psychics have volunteered to give tests. A new psychic from New York, the musical medium from Boston, and a fine palmist from Buffalo, beside all resident mediums have been invited. Every lady will bring a lunch in a box. Free tea and coffee will be furnished. Dancing will begin at 10 o'clock, and all will have a merry time. An admission of 25 cents will be made. The meetings are increasing in interest. Prof. Gustavson spoke on earthly and heavenly treasures to a large audience and Mrs. Upson gave two very fine musical tests on the piano. She will be with us now every Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Dr. Stockman speaks to us next Sunday evening on astrology."

The subject for Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's discourse next Sunday, December 13, is "The Ten Steps of Victory in the Conquest of the Soul Over Matter." Masonic Temple, Hall 309. Services begin promptly at 11 a. m.

Mrs. Ida M. Gilbert writes from Pottstown, Pa.: "We are just beginning to grow, having with us Mrs. Elizabeth J. Demorest, of Pittsburg, Pa., one of Spiritualism's stalwort workers."

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. For sale at this office. Price ten cents.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Camp-meetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. For sale at this office. Price 10 cents.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. For sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

"Meatless Dishes." Very useful. Price 10 cents.

"Astral Worship." By J. H. Hill, M. D. For sale at this office. Price $1.

Union Meeting of Spiritualists at Lynn, Mass.

Alex Caird, M. D., writes from Lynn, Mass: "We have had plenty of State Association meetings, where a few speakers went to some place, held a meeting, took up a collection and went home; this meeting was different. We invited all of these societies as our guests, and entertained them handsomely. I have not seen so much brotherly feeling exhibited since I have been associated with the Spiritualists."

The Lynn Evening News speaks of the meeting there as follows:

A union meeting of the Spiritualists of the state was held in Cadet Hall Saturday afternoon and evening, and the occasion was one of much interest and profit.

The visitors were hospitably entertained by the Lynn Spiritualists Association, whose guests the assembled delegates were.

The hall was prettily and profusely decorated for the occasion with choice and handsome bouquets of flowers and potted plants, which presented an attractive appearance, and gave an added charm to the affair. The decorations were furnished by Young & Libbey, florists.

There were good delegations present from Salem, Beverly, Newburyport, Haverhill, Lowell, Lawrence, Stoneham, Woburn, Malden, Chelsea, Cambridge, Boston, Waltham, Providence, R. I., and individual visitors were present from many other places.

The afternoon meeting opened at 2:30 o'clock with singing by the audience, after which George W. Kates extended a cordial welcome to the visitors.

Mrs. George W. Kates entertained with a vocal solo, which she rendered in a sweet and pleasing manner, which was followed with a short address by J. S. Scarlett of Cambridgeport.

Mrs. Maud Litch, of Lynn, gave readings in her usual satisfactory way.

Mrs. Sanger, of Waltham, gave an interesting address, and Mrs. Ham, of Haverhill, a well-known and gifted medium, gave readings.

Mrs. Ida Whitlock closed the afternoon service with an eloquent address relative to the organization of Spiritualists and society work.

An excellent supper was served in lower Cadet hall from 5 to 6 o'clock, some two hundred people having their wants provided for.

From 6 to 7:30 a highly enjoyable and pleasing entertainment was given by the children connected with the children's Lyceum, and members of the association.

Mrs. Westcott, of Lynn, gave a recitation entitled "Josiah Allen's Wife's Visit to A. T. Stewart's Store in New York," which made a great hit with the audience.

No entertainment given under the auspices of the association would be complete without Warren Chase taking part of it, and by special request he sang "Old Black Joe," the children of the lyceum joining in singing the refrain, which was sweetly rendered, and was well received and heartily applauded.

Selections were rendered by Chase's orchestra, which were highly pleasing to the audience.

The program included the singing of choruses by the scholars of the children's lyceum, and vocal solos were rendered by Eva Manning and Mildred Carter, and recitations were given by Hazel and Margaret Vaughn, members of the lyceum.

The evening meeting was opened with an invocation by J. S. Scarlett, after which Mrs. George W. Kates sang by request, "Only a Thin Veil Between Us," and in response to an encore she responded by singing another solo in a sweet manner.

President Dr. Caird next introduced George W. Kates, as the gentleman from everywhere, and Missionary of the National Spiritualists Association, who gave a 30-minutes' address, in which he fully demonstrated and sustained his ability as one of the ablest and leading speakers engaged in Spiritualistic work.

Mrs. Kates gave a number of readings and messages in her usual satisfactory manner.

Albert Blinn, secretary of the Lake Pleasant camp-meeting association, made an interesting address on Spiritualistic lines, and complimented the organization on the good which it has accomplished and is doing in its chosen field.

Mrs. Kate Ham, of Haverhill, followed, and gave a number of remarkable and satisfactory tests, which closed one of the most successful union meetings ever held under the auspices of the Spiritualists.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, James Broadfoot, in his 78th year of age, at Port Perry, Pa. Brother Broadfoot has been a Spiritualist for over fifty years, coming to this country from Scotland. For the last thirty years he has been a resident of Port Perry. He has always tried to live a true life, and do his duty to all. A large number of relatives and friends were present to pay their tribute of respect. The wife and sons are all outspoken Spiritualists. The body was placed in the cemetery at McKeesport, Pa. Services conducted by F. Corden White. COR.

Ryerson W. Hilliker passed to spirit life, Nov. 13, at his home in Kansas City, Kansas, aged 73 years. He came to Kansas City in 1865 and had been mayor and banker. Later he was one of the organizers and a vice-president of the Manufacturers' Association, and at the time of his death the manager of the Novelty Manufacturing Company. Mr. Hilliker was an old Spiritualist and the funeral was in keeping with his belief. The speaking was entirely local talent, and by his old Spiritualistic friends. Horatio W. Gates, of Rosedale and ex-Senator Johnson Clark were the principals.

MRS. L. M. HAMMOND.

Alexander Parker passed to spirit life at 7:30 a. m., Sunday, October 25, at his home in Normal, Ill. The deceased was 76 years of age. He was born in Craigie, Ayrshire, Scotland, in 1827, and came to this country in 1857. For the past seven years he had been interested in Spiritualism and an earnest reader of The Progressive Thinker.

Mrs. D. D. Griffis passed out of this life, Nov. 20, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. C. Wyman, 1650 Dewey Place, city. She was seventy-nine years of age, and for the last ten years a firm believer in spirit return.

Passed to the higher life, a dear and only sister, Mrs. E. D. French, at San Diego, Cal., Nov. 8, 1903. To quote from her own lines, "Out from the mists of earth-land, she hath found the perfect day." She was a lady of fine sympathies and intellect, a writer in former years for San Francisco papers and ever a firm believer in the truth of Spiritualism. F. H. COWLES.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES,
By means of natural selection, or the preservation of favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of the age fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

MAHOMET, THE ILLUSTRIOUS,
By Godfrey Higgins, Esq. This work is one of the Library of Liberal Classics. No author was better qualified to write an impartial and honest life of Mahomet than Godfrey Higgins, and this volume is intensely interesting. It should be read in conjunction with Gibbon's work. Price, 25 cents.

The World's Sixteen Saviors,
Or Christianity before Christ. By Kersey Graves. New and startling revelations in religious history which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods. This wonderful and exhaustive volume will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which the author has chosen for it. Printed on white paper, 380 pages. New edition, revised and corrected, with portrait of author. Price $1.50. Postage, 10 cents.

VOLNEY'S RUINS
—AND—
THE LAW OF NATURE,
TO WHICH IS ADDED
Volney's Answer to Dr. Priestly, a Biographical Notice by Count Daru, and the Zodiacal Signs and Constellations by the Editor;
Also, a Map of the Astrological Heavens o the Ancients.
Printed on heavy paper, from new plates, in large, clear type, with portrait and illustrations. One vol., post 8vo, 248 pages; paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.
This is undoubtedly one of the best and most useful books ever published. It eloquently advocates the best interests of mankind, and clearly points out the sources of human ignorance and misery. The author is supposed to meet in the ruins of Palmyra an apparition or phantom, which explains the true principles of society, and the causes of both the prosperity and the ruin of ancient states. A general assembly of the nations is at length convened, a legislative body formed, the source and origin of religion, of government, and of laws discussed, and the Law of Nature—founded on justice and equity—is finally proclaimed to an expectant world.

MAHOMET,
His Birth, Character and Doctrine.
BY EDWARD GIBBON.
This is No. 5 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25c. Sold at this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.
A New Edition, Profusely Illustrated.
"I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find nothing in it trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all, that under the appearances of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observation of the vulgar."—VOLTAIRE.

A NEW CATECHISM,
BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.
This is a new "Catechism" in the full sense of the word. There has as yet appeared in the world of liberal literature nothing like this most wonderful little book of reason. E. P. Powell, the well-known author, the reviewer and critic, says: "The remarkable thing about this 'Catechism' is that it tells the truth." It deals with the questions of God, Immortality—the Creeds, the Clergy, the Church, Prayer and Salvation, Jesus and his Teaching, the Growth of the Christian Scriptures, and many other philosophical, scientific and ethical questions with the utmost candor, courage and clearness. 188 pages. Cloth 75c; paper, 50c

THE VOICES By Warren Sumner Barlow. The Voices contain poems of remarkable beauty and force. They are most excellent. Price $1.00.

THE GOSPEL OF BUDDHA,
According to Old Records. By Dr. Paul Carus. A translation made from Japanese, under the auspices of the Rev. Shaku Soyen, delegate to the Parliament of Religions. Was published in Japan. Price, $1.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.
Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

WISDOM OF THE AGES.
Revelations from Zertoulem, the Prophet of Tlaskanata.
A Mine of Valuable Reflections and Suggestions.
This work was automatically transcribed by George A. Fuller, M. D., a gentleman who stands high as a lecturer and medium. It is a mine of valuable reflections and suggestions. The paragraphs are short, suggestive and inspiring. Every one of them leads to something higher, grander, nobler. Price $1.00.

DEATH ITS MEANING and Results. By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting narrative relating a series of wonderful psychic manifestations occurring in the writer's experience. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

THE SOUL ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

BODY AND SOUL.
BY J. CLEGG WRIGHT.
This volume consists of a course of lectures delivered in the trance state, and is certainly no small contribution to the study of the soul. It is a good work to open the eyes to the difference between the deductive and inductive process of mind. Bound in cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

Apollonius of Tyana Identified as the Christian Jesus. A wonderful communication, explaining how his life and teachings were utilized to formulate Christianity. Price 15 cents.

An Infamous Conspiracy A pamphlet of 32 pages, compiled and published by the late Rev. J. G. White, author of numerous anti-Catholic works. It contains disclosures relative to a villainous plot to overthrow our free government. Price, 15 cents.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
—OR—
DIAL PLANCHETTE.
This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.
Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?
The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the Formation of Circles and Cultivation of Mediumship
with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.
Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."
Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."
Securely packed, and sent postage paid from the manufacturer, for $1.00. Address:

ASPHODEL BLOOMS
AND
Other Offerings.
BY
EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.
This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and story-letters contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 235 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.
The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.
The Medea says: "Psychic Poems."
That erudite critic, Wm. Stumette Coleman, "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."
Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."
Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian, says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * Its thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."
The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of sad odds, mixed with common flowers, is offered, hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin, Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. P. R. Pomeroy: Q. What of the contemplated crusade to convert the Holy Land to Christianity?

A. This movement is entirely distinct from that of colonization of Palestine by the Jews, which has grown out of the belief that the Bible has a prophecy that that people shall return and occupy that country. Palestine is not a desirable place to live in, and the Jews from remotest time have seemed to appreciate this fact. There never was a time when there were not more Jews outside of that little country, about the size of New Hampshire, as mountainous and more barren than within it. They flourished best in contact with other nations, for they were traders, and not workers. At present they have so increased that Palestine would no more hold them than Lake Erie would the Atlantic Ocean. There are six millions of them and few could be persuaded to go to the sterile coast of their Holy Land.

The question refers to the movement in England to raise money to purchase Palestine from the Turks. This is to be a "pacific crusade of conquest of the Holy Land from the Turks," as the circular sent out, declares, "in which our arms will be the sword of the Christian spirit, and our armor a well-filled purse at which the the Turkish government will at the opportune time succumb."

Times have changed since the first Crusade 800 years ago, when the ignorant masses of Europe, driven on by the priests like stampeding cattle, hurled themselves on Asia. The road from Constantinople to Jerusalem was white with the bones of more than two millions of victims to pestilence, famine and the sword.

In 1097 the effort was successful. Jerusalem was invested by the Christian hordes and after five weeks was taken by assault. All the tales of Armenian or Macedonian atrocities are tame compared with the brutalities practiced on the inhabitants of the Holy City by the Christians. Mothers implored for mercy in vain. Infants were thrust with spears in their mothers' arms, the aged remorselessly cut down. Over ten thousand who surrendered under promise of protection, were driven together like a herd of cattle, and slashed and trampled to death by the mailed Christian warriors in the name of Christ. The pent-up rage of generations spent itself in those days of slaughter. The streets were piled with the dead and none were left to dispute possession with the Christians who now turned their attention to the tomb of the Savior. With armor stained with blood, they bent low around it with tears streaming down their begrimed and furrowed cheeks they sang anthems in his praise!

Their lion-hearted leader, Godfrey of Bouillon, was crowned Defender of the Faith, in 1099. In 1187, Saladin brought the City of Jerusalem again under Mohammedan rule. There was no massacre, however, for this ruler, wise and charitable as he was brave, sent home the Latin and Frank invaders with a slight ransom, and pardoned the inhabitants.

Ever since that time christendom has been nettled by the incongruity of having the Holy City and tomb of its Savior in the hands of a rival faith. Again and again the effort was made to dispossess the Mohammedan, with most wretched failure, and to this day only by paying tribute to another god can the worshiper kiss the holy shrine where he believes once lay the crucified Redeemer.

If he knew that it was the genuine tomb! By what evidence is it known to be his tomb? By a miracle! Helena, mother of the great Constantine, became converted to Christianity, and went on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. There she found by a miracle the tomb in a cave under a pile of rubbish. She also found the wood of the true cross, and the bones of the three "wise men," or Magi, and sent them to Milan from whence they were transferred to the cathedral of Cologne where they now form one of its chief wonders. She was sainted by the church for her miraculous powers and success in finding everything she sought, and the place she identified as the sepulchre has been the shrine of pilgrimage ever since. Beyond her own claim of miraculous revelation, there is not a shadow of evidence that the cave was the resting-place of Christ. During the Middle Ages the priests in imitation of the old pagan religion, on Easter eve received the holy fire from heaven. The trick became such a barefaced deception, that it failed to be acceptable to the most ignorant pilgrims.

It is a wild and impracticable scheme, but there is method in this madness. This hue and cry to possess that sepulchre covers up the obscurity whether there be a sepulchre of Christ at all! It is a sort of assurance to the masses that the Christians believe in its reality.

If the question were put to the higher authorities, if there is any proof that the so-called Holy Sepulchre is genuine, they would one and all declare that the tombs of Adam and the patriarchs pointed out to the traveler by the shrewd Arab guides, are as authentic.

It is a wise rule that this crusade introduces, that when the country has been bought for Christ, and Christians rule, "no Infidel shall vex!" Infidels will be forbidden the blessed country! Well, should the impossible come to pass, and this little coterie of reverends and titled gentry purchase the barren hills of Palestine, and set up in the business of making a model Christian country with God in its constitution and the Bible as the foundation of its laws, Infidels will have no desire to "vex" its rulers. Their only interest will be to prevent other countries from adopting the little Theocracy as their model.

Rev. W. Thomas: Q. (1) Can the existence of spirit ether be proven?

(2) Can spirit power cure insanity?

A. (1) It can scarcely be truthfully said that the ether by which the phenomena of light, electricity, heat and magnetism are explained, has been demonstrated to exist, yet the complete and unequivocal manner with which it explains and harmonizes all phenomena in this field, and the way all new observations fall into line, offering no exception, is a constantly accumulating evidence nearly approaching demonstration.

The theory of spirit ether is a parallel case. It harmonizes all the known facts, and every new observation confirms and makes it more essential as a bond of unity, whereby all physical phenomena are brought under law and order.

(2) There are many kinds of insanity. Softening of the brain, which means dissolution of the nerve substance, produces imbecility. Congestion, proceeding to lesion, manifests the most deplorable and hopeless forms of madness. There is nor can there be a cure for such organic changes.

Then there is mental aberration which comes from overwrought functions, unbearable effort, self-hypnotizing by dominance of suggestion, when one idea gains complete control to the exclusion of all others, and the hypnotic control of spirit intelligences. In these cases, hypnotic control either by mortals or spirits, is the most efficient means of restoration.

Especially in those cases where there is domination of one idea, the hypnotist, mortal or spirit, by substituting new suggestions, is able thereby to effect a permanent cure.

MELTED BY A TEAR.

A hard man. There were those who said that old John Stornwick was as hard as stone; that he had not an atom of feeling for anything in the world but himself.

He lived alone, in an old, tumbledown wooden building that stood in deep shadow amid a cluster of stunted trees which had once formed part of an extensive orchard.

It was generally thought that his chief business was money-lending to poor people in straitened condition, secured on their furniture, or the wage income where they were employed.

At cent per cent interest, and relentless seizure of property pledged the moment indebtedness failed to be paid. Neighbors looked at him askance whenever he was seen shuffling along the street; and children hid away from him as something uncanny, in almost trembling fear.

This greatly angered him, and he would many times stride his iron-shod cane with savage crash on the pavement, muttering the delight it would give him to crush them all in the face of the earth.

Yet strange to say, in one day gave a piece of money to a wee sith of a girl from sheer sympathy because of her tears.

A pretty maiden of ten, slight of form, with wonderfully tender face and big, melting brown eyes. She had been rudely crushed against by a gay roysterer, and her basket of sweet pinks and roses she was carrying to market, cast into the gutter and spoiled.

Wringing her hands in an agony of despair, while great tears filled her soft eyes, she cried: "Oh! my beautiful posies! What shall I do! What shall I do! It took the last penny mamma had to buy them, and now they are spoiled. I can bring no more money home for food!"

"Oh! what shall I do! What shall I do!" This in direct appeal to Old John, who had chanced to draw near when the accident occurred; the while being so earnestly impelled to move his pitying generosity, that her trembling fingers became clasped on his arm as she uttered her appealing cries. It might be that this unfearing confidence of the child, in place of the terror with which he had been shunned by other children, was the impelling motive which induced so strange a thing as his involuntary gift of the piece of money, accompanied by the still more strange softness of his voice, in saying;

"There! there! don't cry. Tell your ma it was all an accident, and then, mebby, she won't whip you!"

Before he had shuffled a score of steps away he repented of what he had done; called himself a stark idiot; wondered if he wasn't losing his head; then vowed to be harder and more exacting in his business to pay back for it.

But the child's tears were wiped away, and out of the accident grew unexpected blessing.

A grandly dressed lady, seated in a fine carriage nearby, and who had noted all which had passed, stepped down and approached the girl as she picked up such of the flowers as were not entirely destroyed.

And when the lady learned how the dear mamma was in such failing health as to find it very hard to procure the scant livelihood even the two required, she gave her a handful of silver that seemed like a fortune, with the promise that in a short time she would call at their humble home and see what further could be down to help them.

Surely the sick mamma, a refined lady who had seen better days, was right when she said: "The blessing of our Father in heaven is on all good deeds. He has surely ordained that kindness shall grow and spread like the good seed which bears a hundred fold."

Old John would have almost been bewildered had the thought been presented to him, that out of his small gift, like unto a spring of pure water loosened unto the arid sand of a desert, had sprung flowers of love and mercy that were destined to bloom in peace and comfort all through the coming days of the suffering widow and her child.

Spiritual Basis of the Religion of Jesus Christ.

As Presented in a Lecture by that Rising Young Man, Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas.

Jesus, the Man of Galilee, who moved by the ordinary motions of mankind (hunger, Matt. 21:18; anger, Mark 11:14-21; weakness and agony, Luke 22:43-44; grew and increased in thought, Luke 2:40; lack of faith, Mark 25:34), was, like Buddha, Zoroaster and other messiahs, born in fulfillment of a dream (Matt. 1:18,23). There is a marked similarity in the lives of these Messiahs, Saviors and Christs; physical and spiritual disturbance—quaking of earth and singing of angels at birth and transition—a life of comparative solitude, the working of certain phenomena which astonished the people until they believed and followed the teachings of a single precept of Love to all, and each accused of being possessed of a devil. Each of these teachers have ministered to the people to whom they came in a remarkable manner, differing only as educational development compelled them in order that their teachings might be acceptable. Jesus, who, in the strength of his inspirational powers, taught and demonstrated the doctrines of Buddha, Confucius and others, walked in the majestic spirit of humility; he mildly but imperatively spoke and acted as the spirit moved him. He sought to establish no creed, complied with the Jewish forms as long as convenient (was circumcised and in other ways complied with the religious forms, Luke 2; observed the Sabbath when convenient and at other times declared the Son of Man, Lord of the Sabbath (Mark 2:27-28; Matt. 12:1-13), yet never failed to do that which the spirit told him was right.

The New Testament gives us little, if any, history of his life from the time he was twelve years old—when he left his parents and begun his Father's work in the temple—until he was probably thirty years old, the time of his baptism by John the Baptist; in fact, the New Testament does not claim to give the full history of his life (John 20:30; 21:25), having been written many years after his transition, and the material gathered principally from hearsay. It is equally as authentic that Jesus spent these years, of which the New Testament is mute, in the schools of the Magi of the East, under the care and instruction of those Wise Men of the East who came by angel invitation at his birth (Matt. 1:7-11.) That his ideas as stated were to greatly impress the world is certain, for Gabriel, the spirit who has been a messenger from the spirit world since Daniel (Daniel 9:21) told Mary and Joseph of the wonderful child who was to be born, likewise informed Zacharias of the birth of John the Baptist, who was to go before Jesus in the power and spirit of Elias. (Luke 1.)

Religion is the principle in each human heart which causes the spiritual senses to proclaim the things of earth temporal and the things of the spirit eternal; every soul looks to its source, and its manner of looking may be called its religion. Creeds and doctrines are in no wise religion, only to the extent that they help those who adhere to them, to spiritual development. Forms and ceremonies, creeds and doctrines, are only the trappings of religion, even as rules are not mathematics, only the guide; so each nation and people have their guide to spiritual development. The age of sacrifice, which preceded the coming of Jesus, gave way, to an extent, to the fulfillment of the law—Love; but not altogether, for we must remember that thousands of Jews adhere as closely as ever to their chosen forms, and three to one as many devotees bow at the shrine of Buddha as at the altars of Jesus.

The spiritual basis of the religion of Jesus Christ was and is Life Eternal; life means activity—the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. The Law of Life is Love; service to our fellowman. (Matt. 22:35-40; Matt. 25:40; Mark 12:29-34; John 8:32-58; Galatians 5:14, also 6:1-9.) The spiritual basis is the light which each passing age has afforded; to live by the best light that is ours, with condemnation to none, ready to accept the higher and better light when it presents itself. He spoke of Life which IS, Eternal; the realm of thought in which the past and future blend and make the ever eternal Present, Here and Now. To think of the base and low is to commit crime (Matt. 5:17122, also 28.) Not to be pupished, but living in condemnation already, (John 3:8). "And this is the condemnation that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil."

Every transgression produces condemnation, which lasts as long as one remains in the estranged condition. Christ is the incarnation of Love, which through all ages has manifested itself as the Savior—in fact, twas Love which swayed Creative Energy to move, by the Ponderous Laws of Progression and "form" man. Here in the story of Nicodemus we have an illustration of the materialism with which Jesus had to contend; he told of spiritual things and those who heard gave them material interpretations. This, too, accounts for many of the seeming contradictions (Matt. 5:17, and Luke 12:49-51), and that no record was kept, so that when written of many years afterward much was taken from tradition. Law is Life and Life is Love; worship of the Creator is service to the Creature. (John 13:34-35:) "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have lone one to another."

The commandment is Love to all men (Matt. 5:44, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you.") There is no form or ceremony prescribed, let each live faithfully by the light which shines in his life, if it be Confucius, Buddha Zoroaster or Mohammed who has inspired the thought. The underlying principle of all religions is Love, and the matter of forms is entirely the creation of the men who have formed what they think to be exalted conceptions of this great Law of Life—Love.

By loving service do we rise; and every one of us must unfold that high exalted state of being. (Matt. 5:48.) Some people have concluded because of early education, that many souls can escape punishment for transgression, some by placing their sins on their respective Savior and others by being placed in a place far away from their Creator. Either is far from the Law of Life Eternal. (Matt. 16:26-28.) John 12:32: "If I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto me." Every man is judged, here and now, and by faithfully loving and serving mankind every one shall be drawn unto LOVE. The Creative Energy that some call God, some Brahm, some Allah and others the Great Spirit, is Life and Love, and each human soul must express the divine incarnation. Death is the doorway to higher possibilities, as Autumn is the fruition of Summer. (John 12:24.)

No soul can escape punishment for transgression, nor can one—even me—escape actual growth to the fullness of spiritual expression. Hell—the discordant condition produced by transgression; heaven, the harmonious condition produced by Love and service. The former a thing opposite to God, Love, Happiness—and the result of disobedience; the latter a possession which stands waiting, and at the same time demanding the obedience of each and every one to grow into its full realization. (Matt. 25:46.) Note the phraseology, "and these go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." "Life Eternal," a thing possessed; eternal punishment, that which continues as the result of transgression as a means of reformation. What parent is there who punishes their child with any other thought than reformation—making him better? Surely the thought of Him who hath made parents is even higher. No particle of Divinity can escape gravitating to its own place, the elements of which the body is formed hasten to return to their several places in the economy of Nature, the spirit to its source, and by some process—that of progression, the Law of our Being—Love makes it whole, Light dispels darkness, love overcomes hate, smiles chase away frowns, discord resolves into harmony—even so will Divine or Infinite Love lift the soul of every human creature to the plane of a perfect expression of the Life Energies possessed. (John 5:25-29.)

Every age seeks for a sign, and the sign shall be Love to one another; there shall also be the doing of those things which Jesus did. (Mark 16:17-18.) John 14:12: "He that believeth on me the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my Father." Recognizing the growth of Time, Jesus left many things untold, always promising the ministrations of the Comforter. (John 14:17-26.) John 16:12-13.) "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit, when he, the spirit of truth, is come he will guide you into all truth." These passages, with the connecting verses, are positive prophecy of Modern Spiritualism, the reign of Knowledge, the presence of the Comforter.

The Universal Law of Love moveth in and through all the religions of the earth, asking for a life of willing service as evidence of discipleship with the Everlasting. The voice of the several Messiahs has told of the glad message to all people and each has given sufficient demonstration to satisfy any seeker for Truth.

Each succeeding age brings greater developments in Science, Religion and general Government, and each of these seeming new, yet in reality revival of some thing which has gone day occurred is greeted with the accusation, "Works of the devil." (Matt. 12:24.) The spiritual basis of the religion of Jesus Christ is the doing of kindliness to every human creature, regardless of the forms, ceremonies, creeds and dogmas which have bewildered men, this self same spirit has been manifest in every religion that has has moved men to worship the Creator by serving the Creature. Though the time has been when, as recorded in John 16:2, "The time cometh that whosoever killeth you think that he doeth God service," those who possessed the powers of mediumship and gave proof of the presence of our loved ones who have passed higher were put to physical death, yet they have ever triumphed by knowing that Life is Eternal and each event takes one higher in unfoldment.

Who is there that doubts the Power of Life, Love, God? Who will attribute any of the qualities of the Infinite to any other source? There is one God, who perhaps unknown in the fullness of spirit to any, manifest in the devotion of every human soul; and with the manifold love of life, moves each and all to that state which expresses the perfect. If you and I would prove our discipleship to this god of gods and lord of lords—this Infinite Intelligence which is unchanged by our belief or disbelief—then we love and serve our fellowmen, whether they speak our tongue or not, whether they are our race or color or not, whether they cry unto Jehovah, Allah or Brahm, or if they cry unto no deity; for the Eternal Creator is Life and Life Eternal unto all living things.

When we cease to move we cease to be; when we cease to progress we are beyond the conception of mortal mind. The foundation of Life is motion, and on and on we go through the vast eons of time and eternity, each serving the other and thus climbing to higher expression until wrapped in perfect peace, which may be the enjoyment of heavenly things, or possibly as the Buddhist hopes—oblivion; but be it as it may, today demands our service, loving sympathetic and tender. Higher than personal difference, broader than human opinion is the Law of Life—the spiritual basis of being—LOVE.

A Visit to Dr. Samuel Watson, and Results.

The many able articles written by the best thinkers of the day upon The Great Psychological Crime, were quite a treat to me, and after reading all of them pro and con I came to the conclusion that where good men and women on both sides of the question can so widely differ in their opinions as to the merits and demerits of a new idea so very important to the spiritual philosophy, there is room for some middle ground, and Mr. Baldwin, I think, struck the right keynote.

Yes, wait and examine before you judge so harshly. If nothing would be the result but the sifting the truth from the falsehood, the genuine mediumship from the fraudulent, everything needed would be gained, for under the old system of so-called mediumship real Spiritualism has suffered fearfully and always will.

Before I became a convert to Spiritualism I was a Methodist. In my youth I was educated a Lutheran. Catechism and the study of the Bible after I could read were my main lessons, and when, in the year 1856, I knelt at the altar of the German Methodist Church, Clay street, Louisville, Ky., during a revival, I being one of the penitents, I distinctly heard a spirit voice in German say: "Thy sins are forgiven thee; sin no more!"

I had prayed to the Jesus of Nazareth, and lo, he answered my prayer in German. For many years this was a conundrum to me.

In 1862, while I was in the market house one Saturday afternoon, having been a vegetable gardener, I felt a sleep coming over me when I laid my head upon the counter for a moment. I saw how three well-armed soldiers stopped me on the way home, near Spring Garden, two and a half miles south of the city, and demanded my money or my life. I heard their words and saw them plainly. On account of a neighbor's wife who wanted to ride with me, I was kept from starting homewards until dark, when upon the very spot seen, the three soldiers stopped me, and I was relieved of fifteen dollars.

When, three days before the surrender of Vicksburg, Gen. Grant made a furious attack with his whole army upon that fortified city, I was waiting for my dinner. Sitting by the table I fell into a trance or sleep. I saw Grant's army attacking the place. I also saw the gun-boats firing at the city, while I was marching with a column of soldiers up the hill by the side of a young man named Solomon Kramer, who had joined the army at the beginning of the war, and whom I had loved as only one brother can love another, he being a member of my class, I being class leader in the church. All at once we arrived at an obstruction, a temporary wall, behind which southern soldiers were waiting for the attack by the Union forces. A bayonet protruded the wall, and Brother Kramer fell dead before me. I called out aloud: "Oh! my dear Solomon is dead!" That awakened me and my whole household, but there I was sitting by the table still waiting for my dinner.

When in the spring of 1865, the beginning of June, the government sent a large fleet of ships with cavalry down the Ohio and Mississippi, destined for Galveston, Texas, because the Texan rebels had not yet surrendered to the Union forces, one of the men deserted the ship, broke into my stable and took the best horse out of four. My market map soon after got up. Went to the stable found it broken into. He came near my room and called aloud: "Mr. Everbach, Charley, horse, saddle and bridle gone, and the stable broken open!"

I jumped out of bed when I heard a distinct voice in English say: "Go to Portland and get your horse." I captured horse and thief.

In the fall of 1866 I moved to New Albany, where I owned a farm. I became acquainted there with Spiritualism. I had told a business friend, Mr. Winterstein, that many things had happened to me in the Methodist church, when he said: "Oh! you are a medium. Your guardian angel is always near you and you can investigate for yourself if you go to see Mrs. ——," who has since passed away. I did so, and my whole family, including parents made themselves known to me in writing and trance.

I then sat for development a few months with my wife, who was a Baptist. We would always pray together before sitting at night. Before long we had all kinds of manifestations, including beautiful lights, which floated all over the room, and generally rested over me, so that my clothes were often very bright, and they looked as if adorned with jewelry. Very soon I got automatic writing, and sitting for that was demanded.

A few evenings after I got: "Go to Memphis, Tenn., and see Dr. Watson." This was in January, 1876, after the election of Hayes. The people in the South were excited, on account of the Republican proceedings. I hated to go, as I had lost in 1873 what I had saved in twenty-one years. The writing became urgent, and was always signed, "John Wesley." To keep from spending so much money for the long passage, I shipped some ready salable merchandise to Owensboro, Tell City, Evansville, Columbus, Cairo and Paducah, and Memphis, and started on the 8th of January. I was very successful, selling the goods, and arrived at Memphis on the 18th. I found my goods, and then searched for the residence of Dr. Samuel Watson, who received me with great kindness. I told him that a noble spirit had requested me in writing to visit him. He had a private medium, Mrs. Miller, who was called. In one minute the slate contained this message: "I called the dear brother, Doctor. You know why. Invite him. John Wesley." Then the Doctor embraced me, and said: "You are a Methodist, and destined to preach the gospel of spirit return."

Then he told me that four days from then, on the 22nd of February, the Father of our Country, and his spirit wife, Martha Washington, would materialize, and I should be present and admitted, by presenting this card at the door at 8 p. m. He also told me that I would be the only brother from a northern state; that every southern state would be represented by a highly educated people. What happened at that greatest seance I ever attended, I will write in my next.

By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the factor the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

LIGHT OF EGYPT,

The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is a valuable addition and a library on occult subjects. Spiritual astrology is especially elaborated. Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc., are a few of the subjects treated of in a scholarly and masterly manner, showing the author to be familiar with his subjects. You cannot afford to be without it, as well as all his other books, viz.: The Light of Egypt, Vol. I., bound in cloth, $2; paper, $1. The Light of Egypt, Vol. II., bound in cloth only, $2. Celestial Dynamics, cloth, $1.

TWO IN ONE

A COMBINATION OF

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 462 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

Is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

PRICE $1. FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Forge and Matter

By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

ASTRAL WORSHIP

By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

THREE SEVENS

A Story of Ancient Initiations. By the Phelons. Illustrating the Hermetic Philosophy. Price, cloth, $1.25.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES,

By means of natural selection, or the preservation of favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any book of volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of the age fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

STARTLING FACTS, OR Deeds of Darkness Disclosed

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

"NO BEGINNING."

An Excellent Work for Thinkers.

This book, "No Beginning," is by William H. Maple. The Arena says of it: "The argument is unanswerable. The book will at once appeal to the reason of every reader, and leave him more amazed than ever at the prevalence of the theory of Creation." The Two has always been a fateful num- Free Thought Ideal says: "We found it full of glittering thoughts for thinkers, and the very death warrant of Christian superstition shines upon its pages." Price 75 cents.

Three Remarkable Books

"The Divine Pedigree of Man."

"The Law of Psychic Phenomena."

"A Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life."

The Divine Pedigree of Man, or the Testimony of Evolution and Psychology to the Fatherhood of God. By Thompson Jay Hudson, LL. D. A most remarkable work, demonstrating the existence of the Soul and Future Life. It is scientific throughout. Price $1.50. Dr. Hudson's work on "The Law of Psychic Phenomena" is also valuable. Price, $1.50. His "Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life" should be read by all. Price $1.50.

A GREAT BOOK.

THE HULL-JAMIESON DEBATE.

One of Unflagging Interest Throughout —It Should Be in the Hands of Every Spiritualist and Freethinker.

This book, containing nearly 500 closely printed pages, should have a million circulation. Price $1. It is chockful of rapid-firing ideas, and is the ablest debate, on both sides, ever published. Send for it.

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope.

This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. The historic facts stated, and the keen, scathing review of Romish ideas and practices should be read by all. Price 25 cents.

MOLLIE FANCHER,

The Brooklyn Enigma.

An authentic statement of facts in the life of Mary J. Fancher, the psychological marvel of the nineteenth century. Unimpeachable testimony of many witnesses. By Abram H. Dailey. With illustrations. Price, cloth, $1.50.

A Very Interesting Book for All.

Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse. This work contains a graphic account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., and similar cases in all parts of the country. This volume is the first from the author directly upon the subject of Spiritualism, and has stood the test of many years. Cloth, $1.20; postage 10c.

The Pupil Asks Questions, and the Teacher Answers.

Pupil.—What are opinions?

Teacher.—Expressions of judgment founded on insufficient data, faith, belief and guesses proclaimed in everyday twaddle; first-born, undeveloped thought peeping through the senses. Mind in a nebulous condition, the senses are confounded, chaos of thought, noumenal potencies sleeping at the base of being, etc. This partly but not wholly answers your question, for, so long as the spirit of man is a progressive being all is not known. Science is ever explaining, man is ever learning, but the unknown can never be known prior to the birth of light and knowledge derived from experience.

The nebulous mass of opinions is not a beginning but a continuous change produced by attraction and repulsion, likes and dislikes, which separates the confused mass into various associations, races and nations of men, between whom the alternation of love and hate has ever manifested itself. Each becomes self-centered in bigotry, and proclaims I am right and you are wrong; whereas, all are wrong, because each lacks the higher thought of universal brotherhood; and the wrangle usually ends in religious wars founded on selfish desires and opinions. In the future let the Hague tribunal settle all matters of war—might is not right in a higher sense!

Pupil.—If man has always existed as a progressive being why is it he knows so little now?

Teacher.—There are degrees in progression, conditions, conservation, resting places necessary to rejuvenate and to prevent evolution from destroying the balance and perpetuity of all. Innate Thought and Life atoms have always existed, but are unknown, for want of experience, until they manifest themselves through an ethereal clothing. They assume this garment for self-protection, in which they store resistance which becomes greater and greater as they condense the ethers into gases, gases into fluids and fluids into solids. Here the forces become balanced by the reaction of their own efforts producing a stand-still.

Now the I-thought sleeps in the rocks, dreams in the vegetable and partly awakes in the animal. In the descent you were wedded to matter; in the ascent you are now wedded to the spiritual, and will progress much faster as you approach the Sun of suns—cosmic consciousness.

The descent is the so-called night of Brahm (the old universe destroyed by repulsion or evolution) whose atomic children reconstructed a superior universe from the debris of the old. Such is rejuvenation. Such is a faint outline of progression. The All-father sacrifices himself that he may renew his life in his atomic children. It takes periods of eternity to make the descent, and periods of eternity to make the ascent before you will take your last degree at the meridian of high twelve. Here you will be introduced to Brahm, the All-father, (cosmic consciousness) environed in his Vis vitae-scope regalia showing all the past as a present living entity. Here every object in nature is translated into thought, a vast psychic mind, an occult power that runs the universe. Psychometry, telepathy, transfering of thought by wireless telegraphy between human beings and from spirits to the children of earth are evidences of this all-pervading psychic mind.

Pupil.—Is man a microcosm? (A little world, containing an infinitesimal part of the whole—macrocosm).

Teacher.—There are many human beings and spirits, and all are but parts of one stupendous whole. A part is not equal to the whole is self-evident. Man is a progressive being, were he infinite progression would cease. Progression proves that the past-man lacks and this lack produces a desire for more—like a hungry man. Suppose man is comcomposed of many different qualities, then any cause that would induce these qualities to change would also destroy your innate selfhood; this would blot out the memory of yesterday and you would cease to be a progressive being. Man must contain an absolute, an unchangeable, indivisible, innate prime quality in order to retain the photographs of impressions and ideas engraved thereon. The result is memory. The absolute cannot progress because it cannot transcend itself—the ultimate.

Now then, if by microcosm you mean a multiple being, the problem of progression is solved by accretion, by involution, by attraction, by gravitation or the inflow of the panorama of nature engrayed on the absolute—not by development by turning the absolute quality inside-out expecting to find something new and grand. All that the absolute can unfold is but a reflection, an echo of what it has received; i. e., the alternation of the inflow and outflow creates a cyclonic dynamo causing the phonographic cylinder of memory to revolve—listen, you hear the silent voice, thought, repeating past experience, past history or singing the songs of to-day, all derived from the panoramic views of nature. If the cylinder of time and mind is not set at the right indentations you will fail to call up past events, or you may hear a medley of foreign voices, a whir, producing insanity, so-called.

An explanation of the Absolute is an explanation of the Power of rest behind which there is no explanatory cause. However we can say this: Self-existence, without effort, saves active existence from destroying itself. From the power of rest you return, by reaction, into the abysses of space, like light and heat of the sun, where your life and energy are renewed in constructing a new universe. Regeneration, or descent into matter, does not mean retrogression (you cannot fall for you have not risen above your lowest passion in any space), but progression, otherwise you may stand still while sleeping or indulging your wild passions, self-conceit and faults; when you become master of these you are your own savior.

Again, descent and ascent, up and down, like heat and cold are relative terms—a unit alternating according to conditions experienced in the vast orbit of human existence. Such is progression.

The same law that perpetuates suns and stars will perpetuate you and all else. But, when multiple beings are composed largely of homogeneous molecules, the multiple possesses but little conerence. In this case a sudden catastrophe may cause the one to separate into two or more parts, each assuming a new name and character, and will hover near or revolve round the central nucleus like satellites round Jupiter. Here you discover a similarity between the physical and mental structures throughout nature. Even separate thoughts prove the trisection of the multiple being.

Thoughts are things when clothed with the photographic regalia of nature. This regalia directs thought to the object which formulates the expression of thought. Every invention is but an expression of the inventor's thoughts; so, too, every object in nature is nothing more than matter molded into an expression of pre-existing thought; yea, eternal thought as well as life and matter. Matter is put into motion by Life, energy, force and all guided and fashioned by conscious thought.

The law here brought to light makes it easy for writers and speakers to substitute or translate nature's ideal objects into thoughts and vice versa.

Pupil.—Why do we love our Ideals?

Teacher.—Ideals are your gods, many man-made and dualistic as their maker, man.

"Father, Son and Holy Ghost,
Three at least and one at most."

In ages agone your ancestors instead of bowing to their jeweled thoughts worshiped nearly everything animate and inanimate; even stones, the rock of Gibraltar, the Hercules, guarding the mouth of the Mediterranean Sea; the Blarney stone, polished by kissing; the Rock of Ages, hem! not the bed-rock of existence. As they advanced in opinions they kneeled to grubs, bugs, beetles and snakes, also to ants and spiders to learn industry and art. In those days your forefathers were cannibals. They believed in consuming many of their animal and missionary gods as the best method to gain their strength, bravery and virtue; for they had no conception how God could be built out of words, ideas and thoughts like cob-houses. They loved the flesh-pots of Egypt, the aroma of burning liver and gall, the sacrifices on the altar; yea, the blood of the lamb is transfused into the Eucharist which is but a remnant of cannibalism! Then, he who could capture and eat his enemy, man, was a hero. Finally as man rose from all-fours and stood erect heroes were transported to the sun, moon and stars and worshiped as gods and goddesses. Again the stars were bunched into groups or constellations, or a combination of the gods and goddesses into a Trust. The earth was made the chief mogul or central nucleus of the Trust around which all the sky gods revolved and named after the gods previously worshiped. Now, the sun god is the central nucleus of the solar system; again this god with his planetary children is traveling towards some distant point, which in turn is forging onward to a superior vortex known as the milky way, i. e., the milk of the goddesses was spilt along the way in weaving their necklace of the grand galaxy of the heavens.

But there is a spiritual meaning to all this material grandeur. By the law of repulsion every planet, sun and star is sending out electrical currents which influence the earth and its human inhabitants. Electric storms affect the compass-needle, causing changes in the temperature producing cyclones, earthquakes, etc. The sweet influence of the Seven Sisters, the Pleiades, was conceived by Job to be spiritual. Hence originated the idea of planetary spirits, tutelary spirits, some of whom are saints, sinners, devils and Beelzebub of the air who spits destructive fire and bellows like thunder. Now, all the gods of antiquity exist to-day in mythology, in astrology, in the astronomical chart of the heavens, in tradition handed down (up) from father to son. But this is not all; their spiritual nature exists in the psychic plane of thought or first spiritual sphere surrounding the earth. This sphere is largely composed or derived from a spiritual emanation of the earth and the ascension of human thought and spirits, or this spirituality may be called the aura of the earth.

This aura is the telepathic medium between men and spirits, the wireless conductor of thought between sensitive persons. Eventually all the past will be translated into conscious thought. A large percentage of the human race are idolators to-day. You adore the bones of dead saints, the pictures of the popes, and especially the paintings of the immaculate Virgin, the mother of God, Jesus, who died on the cross—a symbol of phallic worship. You nurse your stone, brass, silver and gold idols—all for the love of the almighty dollar, stamped, "In God we trust." This gold god is gathering strength in the hands of the Trusts who are grabbing all in sight and feeling for more in the dark.

This god has no soul, and must be controlled, else the government of the United States will soon be the tail instead of the head of the comet.

There is another God I wish to introduce to your notice, viz.: The immaculate Zero Being or the boundless Space God, who is neither male nor female, he or she, as personal pronouns are not applicable to infinity; still we use them as finite beings cannot understand an impersonal God whose infinite omnipresence surrounds, penetrates, permeates and pervades all the semi-personal sub-gods of nature. All are too gross to occupy or displace the universal X-ray or that which is more refined than themselves. Thus the Space God is void of all passions and antagonisms of nature—fight on ye hero gods until you conquer self. To be liberal is the road to wisdom. Ministers and politicians have no use for a neutral god. All say, we cannot conceive nor worship a nothing. True. But all are as conscious of the omnipresence of the Space God as they are of themselves. To you this presence or recognition is something that blots out your nothing. What logic, I hear them say! It is but the gymnastics of imagination; yes, but imagination is a gift, a function of the spirit; those without the gift of spiritually dead while living. All, said and done, is but the growth of opinions from the ape up to a multiple being composed of many individual atomistic prototypes which mirror the past and the present. All is graded truth of many colors; such is the law.

BAD STOMACHS CURED.

We Can Positively Cure Any Case of Stomach Trouble Not Caused by Cancer. Do Not Take Our Word. TEST IT YOURSELF.

FREE TEST TREATMENT

Do you suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia, or stomach trouble in any form? If you do why not let us cure you? We do not mean HELP you by giving you a Soda Compound Tablet or some of the other patent "Dyspepsia Cures." We will positively and permanently cure you. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble; will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the stomach, and make you strong and healthy as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousands of those we have cured of stomach trouble in all its forms and stages; but they would not be facts or proof to you—only words of thanks and praise. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself. And believing that a practical test would be more convincing to sufferers than all the testimonials we could print and absolutely prove its great merits, we will send anyone desiring it a full two weeks' trial treatment absolutely free.

DEAFNESS CURED AT HOME

DR. COFFEE, the Famous Des Moines Aurist,

ANNOUNCES THAT HE HAS DISCOVERED A SIMPLE METHOD OF TREATMENT WITH WHICH HE IS CURING THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE ALL OVER THE WORLD, AND WHEREBY EVERY PERSON AFFLICTED WITH DEAFNESS, THICKENED HEARING, AND HEAD NOISES CAN RESTORE THEIR HEARING PERFECTLY AT HOME WITHOUT VISITING A DOCTOR.

DR. W. O. COFFEE.

NEDA PARKER.

C. SCHWENK.

FREE—64-PAGE DEAF BOOK

Dr. COFFEE has published a 64-page book on "Deafness and Head Noises, Cause and Cure," which will be sent free to every reader of this paper who has any kind of ear trouble. WRITE HIM NOW. This book explains how you can cure yourself at small expense, of deafness caused from catarrh, from thickened ear-drums, from inflammation, and from stiffening of the bones of the ear, and from every form of deafness and ear disease where the ear-drum is not destroyed or the nerve paralyzed. This book explains how to diet, take physical exercise, and contains all the rules of health, and tells how to remove all catarrhal conditions and prevent deafness.

He restores hearing in cases like these:

Beautiful Miss Nada Parker cured of almost total deafness in three months.

Miss Nada Parker is a niece of Mrs. Sadie Atherton, of Moberly, Mo. Mrs. Atherton says—"Nada was almost totally deaf from severe inflammation of the head and ears and concavity of the ear drums, caused from scarlet fever. Leading specialists in Kansas City and St. Louis could do her no good. We thought she would be deaf for life until we heard of Dr. Coffee, of Des Moines, Ia. We got his treatment for deafness and used it three months, and restored her hearing perfectly. Dr. Coffee's treatment is mild and simple. Can be used by anyone at home and I think it is a good discovery."

This picture shows the exact condition of Nada Parker's ears when she began treatment. Ear drum lying flat on bones of ear—called concavity. A common trouble.

Prominent Railroad Engineer

Mr. C. Schwenk Cured of Catarrhal Deafness

Mr. Schwenk's case shows another form of deafness caused from catarrh and neglected colds. He had been growing deaf for a year or two and would have lost his position as an engineer. He made up his mind he would get totally deaf until he heard of Dr. Coffee's treatment and used it. In two months his hearing was restored perfectly. His run is from Valley Junction, Iowa, and he never lost a day while using Dr. Coffee's treatment. Dr. Coffee can cure every case of this kind.

THIS TREATMENT CURED

Mrs. Millie A. Greenman, of Garvin, Minn., who had abscesses and ulcers and deafness for several years.

H. H. Miller, of New Orleans, La., of deafness and head noises.

Mrs. I. J. Bolton, of Kansas City, Mo. She was so deaf she had to use an ear trumpet. Restored her hearing perfectly.

L. M. Moore, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, of deafness and head noises when he was so deaf he could not attend to business.

J. H. Ringking, of Springfield, Ill., who was deaf for twenty years, caused by an attack of pneumonia, resulting in total deafness. Had been given up as incurable by some of the best ear specialists. Dr. Coffee's Absorption Treatment completely restored his hearing.

J. J. Fuse, Jacksonville, Fla., of almost total deafness.

W. W. Caldwell, of Denver, Colo., who was almost totally deaf. Used the Absorption Treatment three months; can now hear as well as ever.

F. D. Johnson, San Francisco, Calif., who had a very severe case of chronic catarrhal deafness. Has spent considerable money for doctor bills without benefit. Has used the Absorption Treatment, got perfect hearing, and is entirely relieved of the fluttering and popping in the ears.

Mr. Ed. Burns, of St. Louis, Mo., who had a very severe case of catarrh which settled in his ears, producing a soreness and a discharge. It made him so deaf that he could not hear a watch tick when pressed against his ear. Four months' use of the Absorption Treatment has completely cured the soreness, stopped the discharge and has given him perfect hearing.

Here and Hereafter.

BY CHARLES DAWBARN.

CHAPTER SECOND.—ENERGY.

We must not lose sight of the important fact that energy is never latent. It may be a trifle less demonstrative at one time than another, but the essence of the unit is motion. So units come, and units go in their eternal play, their unions and disunions becoming what we call experiences. But about this time our dear friend the scientist begins to get into trouble. He has learned his lesson of motion. He has followed it with his five senses. He has then invented senses that can follow that movement after he himself grows blind. The motion of the units in the flame of a candle, posing as heat, his manufactured sense will record at a distance of a mile and a half. That is the true fairy tale told by Langley's wonderful bolometer. He thus learns that at least up to that point the heat movement of the units is going on in precisely the same manner as when he sensed them with his eye a few inches away, or with his thermometer at a distance of a foot or two. He assumes, he guesses that it thus goes on forever. But his own recorded experiences are against him, for Nature every now and then changes her molecular groupings.

The scientist counts her heart beats, takes her temperature, and gives the form a name. He catches and bottles hydrogen and oxygen, and grows very learned about the size and movement of their units. But in a moment, when he just happens to mix two to one of those gases, he has discovered SOMETHING with not the slightest resemblance to a gas, so he calls it "water." He has not the shadow of an idea why certain proportions of hydrogen and oxygen make water but as they always do it, he prefers to call it LAW, instead of Intelligence, and lets it go at that.

He now settles down to study water, and gets along swimmingly. He puts in heat, and he takes it out again, when he discovers that his progress is blocked at both ends. He has lost his water at a certain temperature either way. He calls this a "critical point," meaning that he does not understand anything about it. All he knows is that he has got ice at one end of his scale, and steam at the other. His water has vanished from sight and touch. Once a he declares it LAW in big capitals, and of course, Intelligence has nothing to do with it.

The ice is his master. The more he shivers with cold the harder it gets. But he is lord and master of the steam, and reduces it to slavery. Presently he finds that at another of these "critical points" it, too, vanishes. He tells us it has become gaseous, perhaps electricity. He sadly acknowledges that he cannot follow it further, either with or without his instruments. Surely this should be a lesson in humility. But it isn't.

We have been taking a simple illustration of just two gases, and their behavior under changing conditions. Now we will return to our little red hot planet, with its surrounding steam, gases and ether, each and all composed of units, or corpuscles if the student prefers the new name. Let us once again recall that Intelligence rules so clearly and unmistakably that the scientist calls it LAW. There are certain conditions of energy, and myriads of "critical points" as graded classes in Nature's every day school. And you know nothing about the class above you till you get there.

We are not going to follow the planet's history step by step. Intelligence is perpetually adapting herself to changes; and every form discovers what that means. But now we begin to enter the region which is a desert to the scientist and his instruments.

The earliest molecular gatherings evidently evolute either backwards or forwards with equal facility. It is just oxygen and hydrogen into water, and back again. Quite simple so far, and nothing to make a fuss about. But when the gathering units, inspired by energy, give intelligence a little more play what we call "elements" appear. The units have blended into known and unknown gases, and at "critical points" have solidified into forms the scientist can't take to pieces and analyze. He finds, however, that he can imitate Nature to a certain extent. He can send those forms back into gases, or put them to use as they are, and blend them to suit his whims. But presently Nature reaches another of her "critical points," and these blended units take another step forward, instead of backward.

The scientist has to accept a critical point without explanation. He can straddle it, but he can't go through it. So when a speck appears on the rock or in the water, and, as it were, beckons other units to come and be eaten, he shouts "behold LIFE," and assumes that LIFE was evolved out of the gas and water blends that were there before. But at that "critical point" INTELLIGENCE has got a new hold, and comes a little more to the front. Her rule is law as much as ever, but in sunshine and shadow, heat and cold, liquid and solid within limits, she is feeling her way upward and onward, and at every step getting further from her last "critical point."

We now begin to see something of what this last change means. We always had energy expressing itself by movement of the unit. In the crystal that energy manifests in the molecule by inviting visitors to come and build upon it. But in this new speck the unit passes right on and into the citadel itself, before it goes to work. The attraction is called "hunger" and the effect is labeled "assimilation." It is noted as a "life process" but not even guessed by the scientist as the work of the INTELLIGENCE which we have traced at every step doing its work in its own way as conditions have permitted.

It is now we perceive the tremendous progress that has been gained in, or by this last step. The new born speck, instead of waiting for something to turn up, moves on its slow way, and the friendly attraction of the past has become now capture by force or stratagem. We recognize "will" as present, but we remember that it was always there, for intelligence without will is an impossibility. There is, of course, an evoluted capability of expression, but the same eternal intelligence.

Something more has happened. Creation is further from its base. At first combine your gases and you have water. Decompose your water and you are back to your gases. With rock and crystal a step forward and a step back would seem to complete the round. But now a new factor has appeared, and must be taken into account. The blended molecules have evolved a will; that is to say, Intelligence, hidden before, can now be seen and felt, and must be taken into account in any and every change. When you would go back to first principles you have to decompose not merely solidified gases, but their evolved will. It may be possible, but most assuredly it has become difficult. The decomposer is dealing not only with substance and energy, but with intelligence so active that it has become "will." It is true there is no brain in sight, nor likely to be for evolutionary eons, but "will" is there, and it is absurd to attempt to explain it as polar attractions and repulsions. These attractions and repulsions are themselves but tools for the use of intelligence. Evolution is itself but an increased manifestation of intelligence, just as retrogression is a lessed manifestation of intelligence. So what we will venture to call the "creative base" is further away at each step of evolution.

We here come in contact with a remarkable habit of the Creative Intelligence. Like the bowler of to-day, it throws its ball from the base every time, although the discharge becomes more powerful, and the distance covered is much further as the game proceeds. The individual life, and its potencies are all included when it leaves the hand of the Creative Bowler as, say, a fertilized egg. The one outside condition is the vibratory expression of units we call heat. And what we call "evolutionary steps" are but inches the ball passes over on its way to the goal. So we take careful note that, as a whole, evolution is a growth of the expression of intelligence; almost every step taking place within limits unmarked by a "critical point." The change we mark from amoeba to man has been so gradual that even the scientist can't place his finger or his instrument on any spot where Intelligence changed her base, under different conditions and rules. Yet a very different game has been evolved by Intelligence and his coworkers.

We marked the "critical point" where form first becomes a psychological expression of Intelligence. It was as tremendous a change as that from gas to water, save that the form remained the same, to mortal eye. This time it was an invisible SOMETHING we call "will" claiming and exhibiting a limited control of form—very limited at first—but with growing power, for it was Intelligence wielding evolution. She was playing a higher game though the players remained the same old Cosmic companions.

Here we stop to take issue with the Science of to-day, at least as represented by Carl Snyder and his ilk. They have marked and recorded certain processes, and left Intelligence out of their study, at least as a factor in the game. To them substance and energy can be either weighed, measured or recorded, and sometimes analyzed. When they suddenly discover an intelligence present which is not capable of being expressed by polarization or chemical attraction they proceed to assume and teach that substance and energy have not only married but become parents of of a child, which they are willing to call Intelligence. So there was a time—a moment if you please—when with Nature for nurse, the baby was born. Of course it was a "critical point," a very critical point indeed, but a little different to the former critical points, for the new was blended with the old, and Nature was continuing her little game with the same shaped ball, and even the same raw materials. Something was changed and something was added, so the scientist enrolled the change under the heading of Psychology. Once again we assert nothing had come into existence, or even into expression, that was not there from the beginning as the Cosmic partner we call Intelligence.

Still the scientist blocks the way. He cannot realize that it is the same old game as played by Nature from the beginning. She just pitches her psychological ball an inch or two further than before. Of course he recognizes the fact, and proceeds both to study and teach it, but he declares the game is ended. His own senses and his invented senses have followed the game so far, but it would be ridiculous to suppose that scientific manhood does not cap creation. The being who can make an instrument that will measure the heat of a candle 7,000 feet away, and who has found out what stars are made of, is, of course, Nature's ultimate.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

Martha could endure it no longer. Without lighting her tallow candle which stood upon the rude table she undressed and went to bed unmindful of the fact that she had eaten no supper. She was not afraid, for she knew no one would harm her. There were family tents all about, and the occupants were for the most part honest, hard-working farmers with their wives and children, and they were not of a class to molest a helpless girl.

Martha heard through the stillness of the damp night air, the voice of the preacher shouting to his congregation. He took for his text, "Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate," and he emphasized the fact he had obeyed the command. Picnics, fairs, parties, pleasures and pastimes of all descriptions, he denounced as snares of the devil, but the height of his eloquence he poured upon the women. Feathers, flowers, ruffles, ribbons and laces were but factor's in the devil's scheme to lure the soul to destruction. "It is not posies you need but camp-fire," he shouted; "not camphire (camphor) but camp-fire."

After the preacher had exhausted himself, there was a general prayer-meeting, but Martha heard little more than the shrieks and groans. About midnight the women who occupied that portion of the tent adjoining Martha's returned and there was much talking. The old woman who had been dozing by the stove awoke, and wanted to know all about the meeting.

"How did you like Brother Hightop to-night?" she asked.

He just gave the women fits," said one; "told them that they must be meek and obey their husbands and all that."

"I did not like him one bit," said another decidedly.

"You know what the apostle Paul said," came from two or three meek-looking little women.

"I know," replied the decided one, "but Paul owned up that he said some things that the Lord didn't tell him to, and I believe what he said about women was one of them, but of course he would'nt own it

As near as Martha could judge this view of things was received favorably. They then began discussing the prayer-meeting and it seemed that religious fervor had run high during the evening. Several women had taken the flowers from their bonnets and the rings from their fingers. Some had been converted and several had lost their strength. Among the latter was one young woman who arose to speak with an infant some three months old clasped in her arms. She had spoken but a few words before she began to sway. A friend near-by took the baby from its mother's arms, and the poor young woman fell heavily to the ground. Her husband sprang toward her with outstretched arms, but one of the clergymen had stepped between him and his prostrate wife, and said sternly, "Don't you touch her! Don't you dare touch her!" The young man meekly withdrew and the meeting proceeded. All this and much more Martha listened to.

At last one of the women asked, "Where's that Weston girl?".

"She went home with her folks," was the prompt reply from another.

"She ought to have been here to-night," said one of the women who earlier in the evening had stripped her bonnet of its flowers. I don't know but she is all right, but when I was converted the converts used to make a good deal of noise, and I haven't heard her make any."

"I don't like the girl," said another, "she looks and acts just like a Spiritualist medium I used to see up home—always seems to be seeing something way off somewhere. Mediums are witches, I believe, and you know what God commanded his people to do with them.'

"Nonsense!" said the decided one who had so recently settled the "woman question." "The Weston girl is just as good as any girl on this camp-ground, or I lose my guess. It's time we were all in bed."

With that sensible remark she set the example by starting, and in a short time silence reigned.

All night Martha lay thinking and staring into the darkness. Every time she thought of the young preacher and the scene in the tent, her cheeks would burn with indignation and she would exclaim to herself, "And he is a married man and a minister, and I thought he was so good!"

Martha had been reared in almost nun-like seclusion, and was wholly ignorant of what the world calls "society," but she came of a long line of honorable ancestry whose ideas of morality were as stern and unyielding as the hills of their native land. Narrow-minded they might have been, but they were honest and honorable. The more Martha tried to solve the questions which arose in her mind, the deeper she became involved. All her old doubts returned in full force, and many inconsistencies in the religion she was supposed to believe arose for her to contend with.

Just as it began to grow light a little she heard two distinct raps upon the board roof over her head and a voice—the same voice she had often heard—again said to her, "Peace, child, peace."

A feeling of restfulness came over her and she slept until the encampment was astir. Martha then arose and dressed, and after eating a few mouthfuls of food, crept out of the tent unobserved and made her way to the carriage drive. She had not long to wait, for the little black horse came briskly up to the gateway.

"Father, I want to go home," said Martha. "Please let me go now."

Mr. Weston looked surprised and inquired anxiously, "What is the matter, Mardie? Are you sick?"

"I am sick of staying here. Please, father, let me go home," she said pleadingly.

"What's all this?" said a sharp voice near by. Looking around Martha saw one of the elders, a sharp-featured, gloomy-faced man who looked as if he had not laughed for forty years of his life, and had done his best to restrain his fellow-beings. He now approached Martha and eyeing her with stern displeasure, sad: "So you want to run away from your duty, do you? Quench not the spirit lest it depart from you forever. Beware how you trifle with the spirit of God, for there is a sin which will never be forgiven." Then turning to Mr. Weston, he said: "If that was my girl, Brother Weston, she would strip off her furbelows—glancing at the ribbon which Martha wore at her throat and waist—and stay on this ground and confess her sins and give in her testimony with the elect."

Mr. Weston pushed back his hat and rubbed his head.

"Father!" said Martha in such an intense tone of voice that Mr. Weston glanced at his daughter quickly. "Come on," he said, holding out his hand, and in another moment they were trotting along the willow-fringed, stony road leading home. When they drove up to their own gate they were met by Mrs. Weston. Her high, narrow forehead was wrinkled and her thin frame seemed to be quivering with some great emotion, and, as her husband jocosely remarked, her mouth was tied in a bow knot under her chin.

The moment the horse stopped she burst out: "Wall, this is a pretty piece of business, I should think, making me put up all that victuals and then you come lugging it all back this time of day. Marthy Weston, I thought you had experienced religion. I guess you'll have ter get another dose, runnin' away from meetin' in this way."

Martha, without speaking, passed by her mother and went into the house. Here a surprise awaited her, for the moment she entered, a middle-aged woman clad in deep mourning, came forward to meet her. Martha knew her aunt had buried her only son but a few weeks before, but she was not prepared to see so great a change in her. In the white-faced, big-eyed woman before her Martha could see hardly a trace of the bright, happy, fun-loving aunt she had always known.

"Oh, Aunt Laura!" said Martha, as without another word she threw her arms about her aunt and burst into tears. Probably it was the best thing she could have done, for it strengthened the bond of sympathy between the two, a bond destined never to be dissolved.

After supper that evening, Mr. Weston went and sat down beside his sister, and after some preliminary 'hemming, began the subject of religion. Mrs. Gray listened quietly to what her brother had to say, but showed no interest. At last he concluded his remarks with, "I trust, Laura, that you feel assured that you will one day sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God."

"No, Silas," replied his sister, "I have no such hope or desire. You may think me very wicked, but I will never go to any heaven where my boy cannot go. He was as good a boy as ever called a woman mother, but he did not believe in the Bible, or Christ as a savior, and according to your religion he is a lost sinner. I have searched the Bible carefully, and I cannot find in it any hope for him."

Here Mrs. Gray began to sob. Mrs. Weston went up to her sister-in-law and said kindly: "Don't, Laury. Your duty is to look out for your own salvation. You thought your boy was unconscious for a good while before he died, but he might not have been, and you do not know what thoughts he might have had. He might have asked the Lord to save him, and perhaps you'll yet find him among the saved.

Mrs. Gray moved impatiently, and turning to her brother, said, "Sarah does not believe one word of that, neither do you, Silas Weston."

Mr. Weston hitched his chair uneasily. "I dunno," he said. "I think it's safe to leave him in the Lord's hands."

"You would not feel so complacent about it if your boy had died in such a way," rejoined his sister.

The next morning Mr. Weston, with his wife and son went to the camp-meeting, leaving Mrs. Gray and Martha alone for the day. After the morning's work was done, Mrs. Gray picked up "The Coming Conflagration" which lay open upon the table, and began reading, but she soon threw the paper from her. "It is terrible," she exclaimed with a shudder. "Talk about the joy of saints arising to meet their Lord, when their friends and neighbors have got to be burned by this same Lord just because they do not believe just so and so. Oh! I wish I could know the truth. I tell you, Martha, this is just killing me, and I cannot bear it much longer."

Martha looked distressed, and after a moment's silence, said: "You know, auntie, that some people who believe the Bible do not believe in hell or the burning of the wicked at the judgment day."

"I know, child, but all this is in the Bible, and that is not all. I tell you, Martha, if the Bible is to be believed, God has done and has ordered done, things that no enlightened nation at the present time would countenance for a day, and yet we are told he is the same God yesterday, to-day and forever. It seems to me when human beings get more civilized and more merciful than their God, they had better get a new one."

Martha sat silent for some time, then she said: "I believe half the people claiming to have so much religion are not one bit better than many who do not profess to have any."

"Certainly they are not," said Mrs. Gray. "I found that out long ago; but then it is not a question of goodness, but of belief. It is through faith salvation comes."

"Oh, yes, I know," said Martha, "when it comes to salvation, kindness and good works, and a sunny nature count for nothing; it is the one who believes that gets saved from the wrath to come. I heard one sermon that I never have forgotten. It was from the words, 'If any man has not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his.' Elder Reams said that was too plain to be misunderstood, and he said that whoever had the spirit of Christ would bear the fruits of the spirit, which are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith and temperance, and no matter how much anyone professed, if they did not produce these fruits they would not be saved."

Mrs. Gray smiled as she answered: "That is equivalent to saying that whoever does produce the fruits will be saved. I have no desire to undermine your religious belief, Martha, especially as I have nothing to offer in return, but years ago I lived in the family with an out and out infidel. He did not try to skulk out of it by taking some other name, either. He was an honest, hard-working man, and I never knew a gentler, kinder man in my life, and his wife told me that during the ten years of their married life she had never known him to get angry or fretful, and he certainly practiced temperance in all things. I remember asking him one day if he never got mad, and he said he had a habit when he felt himself growing angry, of thinking how he would feel about the matter if he was out in the ocean drowning, and that always calmed him."

"That's like Uncle Ezra," said Martha, laughing. "He says when he begins to get 'riled' he always imagines that George Washington is standing by, looking at him, and he says it works 'fust rate.'"

"Well, you can see for yourself, Martha, that it does not depend upon the Lord, but upon one's own self. If we are determined to conquer ourselves we will, but at times it helps to get the mind off on something new—it matters little what."

Different View-Points---The Cosmo-Psychical Vs. the Individualistic View of Evil.

This article is suggested by the position taken by S. D. Bishop on "Human Rights," in No. 723, and "The Liquor Traffic," by P. C. Mills, in 721 of The Progressive Thinker. These writers take the individualistic view of sin, depravity and evil in the world. They represent a large, intelligent and conscientious body of people.

On the other hand, in my discussion of these questions, representing, as I believe, the more advanced scientific opinion, and especially looking at the whole subject from the standpoint of evolution, and being equally as conscientious, I have honestly arrived at a very different conclusion concerning the matter.

First, I will present an epitome of my views concerning the existence of evil from the cosmo-psychical standpoint. Then by way of an application of the principle, answer the main arguments of my critics.

Pope uttered an inspired truth when he said:

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body nature is and God the soul."

Evolution being true, from all we know of nature in its broadest sense, evil is not a unique phenomena confined to man alone and the result of an accident, but a great fact which has existed in one form or another from eternity, and is subject to the great law above mentioned.

Prof. LeConte well proves that it exists in the form of physical evil in the animal kingdom. Throughout all that realm, struggle with an inimical environment, resulting in the survival of the strongest, the swiftest and the most cunning, is the rule. This struggle may have seemed evil to the individual at the time, but it was certainly necessary to that progressive elevation which culminated in the higher being called man; hence looking back upon it from our view-point, we cannot regard it as evil.

The same argument applies to physical evil in the human realm. We seem to be surrounded with an evil environment against which one must constantly struggle or perish. Heat, cold, tempests, floods, volcanoes, venomous reptiles, etc., are all about us.

Our only remedy is knowledge of nature's laws.

But without this necessity for struggle and knowledge we certainly could not emerge out of animality and into the higher humanity.

Now, shall we call that evil which is a necessary condition of our progress to a higher plane of life? It may seem to be, but really is not. IT IS GOOD IN DISGUISE.

Now look at organic evil—disease in all its hideous and infinitely diversified forms, include, all the results of intoxication if you will. But suppose after ages spent in obtaining knowledge concerning its causes and applying it to its eradication, can one look back from our elevated standpoint of physical perfection, and call that evil which is certainly the necessary condition of our elevation? We cannot. It is again only good in disguise.

So moral evil, perhaps the most hideous form of all evil, that of which all previous forms are but forecasts, may, in accordance with this great law, be regarded as a necessary step in our spiritual elevation.

"Either God is not all-good, or else not all-wise, or else not all-powerful, or else there is no God."

So said many of our wiser fathers as they stood helpless before this greatest problem of the ages.

But evolution teaches us that knowledge of, and conformity to, the laws of the moral and spiritual universe, will eventually enable us to completely overcome moral evil.

Happiness is not the goal of humanity, but virtue in virtue; that is, the full, complete, harmonious development of all our mental faculties and bodily powers in perfect correlation with our environments.

Evil, then, is the necessary condition of all progress, especially moral and spiritual progress. It is a part of nature and must exist. From a philosophic view-point they are not good or evil. They are only higher or lower. All evil consists in the dominance of the lower over the higher; all good in the temperate use of the lower by the higher. "The stronger the lower is the better, if it be only held in subjection," says Le Conte. The higher is the natural outgrowth from the lower.

So from the cosmo-psychical point of view, Pope again was right when he said, "Whatever is, is right. What we call evil, is necessarily incidental to our liberty, our intelligence, and our spirituality as human beings.

Drunkenness is an evil so-called, deeply deplored by all, but as I showed in a former article, an inevitable result of the working of nature's process for the formation of character.

It, therefore, seems plain to me that a logical application of the doctrine of evolution to the solution of the problem of evil, will satisfactorily answer all the arguments of my critics. They look at the liquor traffic from one standpoint, I from another, so we come to different conclusions. Whenever and wherever liquor is mentioned they seem to be unable to think of anything but the drunkard. "The business of the liquor dealer," says Bishop, "is making drunkards." How untrue is this assertion. His business, like all others, is to get a living, make money. The millions who use liquor temperately and the physicians who use them medically, resent this as an insult.

The U. S. Dispensatory, which embodies the medical law and gospel for nearly 150,000 physicians, says of alcohol: "It is invaluable in debility; in a great measure the only true diffusible stimulant in the world; of the highest value in low fevers."

An article so universally used and so valuable is sure to be abused; but to stop its use because of its abuse is nothing more than an expedient for the weak and diseased. To establish prohibition as a principle among men in general would be to degrade the race and remove all incentives to a moral growth. How foolish the parent who would remove everything the child should use or play with out of its reach. Wisdom says leave the articles in their accustomed place and teach the child their proper use.

"Horse stealing," says Mr. Mills, "what of it?" I answer: We expect law to prohibit crime, but we look to it to only regulate matters that do not involve crime, but contain only risk under certain conditions. Certainly the selling or drinking of liquor is not a crime. Legislative regulation is all that a thing not vicious in itself but which may readily be abused, needs.

"The saloon never made a Huxley or a Spencer." No, nor did the Dark Ages with its prohibitory laws and inquisitorial devices either. But the liberty, the abuse of which results in drunkenness and other vices, did. Of course the drunkard should avoid every form of alcoholic drink, but I deny that a prescription for a sick man should be made a bill of fare for the well. Those who advocate prohibition in order to keep men from becoming drunkards, should, to be consistent, prescribe the dyspeptic diet for the well, in order to keep men from becoming dyspeptics.

The chief chemist of our government, at Washington, says: "The great evils of our time are fried foods, pastry, baking minerals and adulterants."

Why not prohibit these so as to keep people from getting sick?

I am fully satisfied that not one one-thousandth of the sin, pain, sorrow, evil, sickness and degradation in this this country is caused by the use or abuse of intoxicants.

Prohibitionists make the mistake the Roman Catholic church has made. They substitute the law of force for the law of love, and I am sorry to see that the trend of Protestantism is rapidly in the same direction. Every man's actions and life should be regulated from within his own soul, and not from without.

I affirm, therefore, in conclusion, that prohibition is false in philosophy and harmful to the best interests of society as well as contrary to the plain example of Christ and the teachings of the Bible. It usurps the individual prerogative of self-control and transforms man into an automaton, a cringing slave. Only through freedom as nature gives it to us, can virtue of the highest type be acquired.

Knowledge is the only true remedy for all vice and crime. So long as the effects of an evil are limited to the perpetrator himself, legislation has nothing to do with it.

A NEW PLAN

To Oppose the Roman Catholic Church.

To the Editor:—Noting the incident relating to P. A. Seguin, in your paper of Nov. 28, it seems to me there should be some kind of organization of Freethinkers which could on occasion resist the encroachments of this church all over the world. The A. P. A. is dead, and as it was never much in effect but a bob to a political kite, I do not know that it is very much to be regretted.

There is no use expecting any efficient bar to the Roman church among the Protestants, as they are nearly all women. All the men who have any backbone have left the Protestant churches, so the only effectual opposition that can be expected must come from the Freethinkers, and it seems to me a society, secret, fraternal and beneficial, could be formed among the Freethinkers, and if properly organized would in time grow to be a power to be reckoned with by all enemies of free speech, were they Catholic, Protestant or Mormon.

I have proposed this time and again among materialists and others; they all say it is a good idea, but no one seems to be able to get a move on. The Freethinkers in France have the credit of harrowing the old Romish hag in their country. The Bohemian Freethinkers have almost nullified the influence of the church among that nationality. Why not the Freethinkers of the whole world unite in a brotherly organization which would form a basis of co-operation against all the enemies of free-thought and free speech.

Properly organized it would slowly spread over the whole earth, and in time become strong enough to wipe out both physical and mental opposition to progress.

The Freethinkers of France have, I am told, organized among young boys under 20, an order called the Sons of the Coast, and have had the honor to earn the wrath of the church for their success in operating against it among young people. Why not us? Who has the brains to organize such a society in a simple yet efficient form, building for future more than for immediate growth. I have a small sum of money to help launch it.

An article in the last copy of The Progressive Thinker, in reference to attacks on the public school by the Roman Catholic church suggests that there is work cut out for such an organization from the start. The Junior Order American Mechanics is a society in the east gotten up to protect the public schools, but it insists on the Bible in the schools, and has other marks of the Protestant priests to make it objectionable to Freethinkers; but it may furnish us an idea. I wish something could be started along this line. Is it not practical? Such a society could affiliate with the Bohemian Freethinkers, the German Turner societies, and other societies, but should be broad enough to admit all the half-fledged Freethinkers (on probation if need be), and make them by degrees full fledged.

It might arouse less antagonism and so be more effective in influencing public opinion, if it were not known as a distinctively Freethinkers' society, but have the protection of the public schools and also free speech and free thought as their main object.

My idea would be a society with the dignity and weight of Freemasonry, to combine all the fighting blood among Freethinkers into one order that would form a basis for political action. Press work and lobby work, a central order to watch and combat all the foes of free thought, but especially the Roman church. Am I right, or am I "nutty?"

NOT ALL A DREAM.

Is life only a beautiful dream,
Where the dreamer dreams on and on?
Or are the glories realized
In dreamland's happy home?

'Twould seem in vain were this life
If only a dream it be,
And the silver barques built in sleep
Would ne'er sail eternity's sea.

Life is a golden reality,
Through which the soul is gently led,
And by the lving waters
The dreamers all are fed.

The Problem of Obsession

Elucidated by One of Our Foremost Thinkers.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST

We take great pleasure in introducing to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, Mr. W. J. Colville, one who stands high as an author and lecturer. His answers to questions on the rostrum, and his lectures and improvisations, place him in the very front ranks among the intellectual Stars of our Cause, and his views will be carefully considered. His opinions on the ordinary Developing Circle will create a profound impression. Mr. Colville's present address is Room 11, Flood Building, Market street, San Francisco. Cal., where he can be addressed for engagements.

Obsession or demoniacal possession has for ages been the subject of great controversy in almost every land beneath the sun.

Belief in this hideous nightmare of theology is largely augmented at frequent intervals by the bursting forth of strange epidemics of disease, alike of mental and physical description, and as it is always easier to provide a suppositious scapegoat, whether in the form of a microbe or a devil, than to go to the root in causation and vanquish a subjective adversary within race or individual consciousness, the great Devil still holds his own in certain orthodox religious circles and multitudes of lesser imps still receive the homage of multitudes of professing Spiritualists.

Nothing can be more pitiful and pitiable than to witness an encouragement of so degrading a superstition as that of belief in devils, for, disguise it as they may, and many modern Spiritualists will probably repudiate this charge with angry vehemence,—the present widespread belief in evil spirits is causing more havoc among Spiritualists and doing more destructive work to the cause of Spiritualism than all the attacks offered to it from without, no matter how fierce or subtle may be the weapons handled by an outside adversary.

Belief in evil spirits, at least as that term is commonly understood, is directly at variance with those fundamental teachings of Spiritualism which, fifty years and more ago, promised to emancipate the world from the degrading thraldom of belief in any devil or devils. Twenty years ago many Spiritualists were fond of reciting from Denton's Radical Rhymes, "The Devil Is Dead," and no doubt there are still many even among believers in obsession who continue to endorse that particular poem, because it only denies that particular form of devil-worship encouraged by old-fashioned types of Christianity. Far be it from our intention to suggest that these whose views we are in honor bound to controvert when demoniacal possession is the theme of our requested discourse, believe actually in just such a literal archfiend as many theologians have delighted to depict, but they do believe in, and they do most terribly fear, a number of lesser evil entities who, if Spiritualism in its barest outlines be in any sense a true philosophy, can only be their own fellow-human beings, possibly no better, but certainly no worse than many with whom they come in frequent contact during their common daily walks on earth.

Spiritualism has often been glorified by its exponents as that system of philosophy which robs death of its sting and peoples the unseen universe with nothing that man need dread. Now, chiefly in consequence of foolish endeavors to develop psychic possibilities by crude and artificial means, a legion of devils has taken possession of the strongholds of Spiritualistic fantasy; thus whenever one is ill or erratic the mediaeval remedy of exorcising an obsession is proposed, and all scientific discoveries are forgotten in the eagerness with which many reputed spiritual healers rush to cast out a devil.

If Spiritualists of this variety held tenaciously (as they usually do not) to a literal acceptance of conventional translations of the Greek Testament, there would be some grounds for this terrible and very awful superstition, but biblical criticism of the most recent and radical type is not generally offensive to any of these twentieth century believers in devils, consequently they have no just grounds of complaint against us when we tell them that there is not a shred of evidence worthy of any reasonable mind's acceptance that Jesus of Nazareth or any of his disciples ever cast out any such evil spirits as the literal version of some portions of the gospels and epistles as usually accepted would lead the untutored reader to suppose. The old belief in two rival forces in the universe continuously contending the one against the other is at the root of all these miserable diabolistic theories.

Gerald Massey's "Devil of Darkness" is a pamphlet calculated to throw much needed light on this delusion, and as its author was for a great portion of his life an enthusiastic Spiritualist, his utterances on this subject may serve to dispel, in some degree, the thick darkness which now envolops so many victims of the theory of obsession.

We are constantly being asked whether we do not believe that there are two principles in the universe, one good and the other evil, and our invariable reply is the most decided possible negative.

NO!

There is but one Power and that Power is absolutely good. From that base we will never move and though as yet we may be standing on this solid rock with a comparatively small minority, it affords us unspeakable delight to watch the rising tide of scientific demonstration bearing on its crest an ever-increasing company of fearless investigators into the mysteries of Nature, all ready to give up their dualism and accept a monistic if not a monotheistic view of the universe, which rules out humanity's malignant foe—the ancient devil and all his tribe—forever. But, say those who are afflicted with what they term obsession, "your beautiful theoretical doctrine of the goodness of the universe does not prevent or relieve our sufferings, and to what do you attribute these agonies which we have undergone and may still be undergoing?"

Our answer to that pathetic query is not far to seek, and it is a very blunt and decisive one. If you do not accept a theory of life which would bring you inexpressible peace and consolation did you accept it, you can not be reaping the advantages of entertaining a glorious faith you do not share.

The afflictions of those who are called "possessed" or "obsessed" are very real to those who experience them, and the victims of painful delusions should in most cases be very gently dealt with, though there are some instances where only the most heroic mental treatment has proved to be of much avail.

The greatest of all reasons for stoutly opposing the theory of evil spirits is that whenever it is entertained it tends to further weaken an already nearly impotent will, and it plays directly into the hands of any and every charlatan who has charms to vend and nostrums to dispense.

Christian Scientists who hold to the hideous doctrine of "malicious animal magnetism" are sailing in the same rotten ship with all others who believe in an imaginary power of evil, which to them appears as a reality, and it is even more absurd for Christian Scientists than for many Spiritualists to harbor this detestable delusion, because they teach in so many words and with unfaltering accents, "All is Good; there is no evil."

Recent reliable testimonies from skillful surgeons and physicians have thrown immense light upon the problem of seeming evil. Not very long ago, in California, a boy who had been performing almost every act of cruelest devilry, and who had become the despair of his doting parents who were almost heartbroken at the prospect of having to see him removed either to a prison or a lunatic asylum, was restored to perfect moral health through the agency of an operation which removed a small portion of the skull which had pierced the brain, and thereby led to all the misconduct of the lad who, while in that abnormal condition, was temporarily non compus mentis.

Another very well established case was that of a gentleman in middle life who had been for many years humane and generous, but who in consequence of a small tumor having formed on his brain, gradually developed into a most disagreeable and dangerous person. A post mortem examination of the brain disclosed the tumor, and men of scientific attainments readily attributed its victim's extraordinary deflection from his former excellent moral standard to its pernicious influence.

Such instances are being multiplied by hundreds in the annals of modern surgery, and it would certainly be well for thoughtful people to acquaint themselves with a few such facts, when thoroughly corroborated, before having recourse to any theory of evil spirits to account for partial or total insanity.

The only view of the teaching in the New Testament concerning evil spirits which is at all rational, is suggested by the very phraseology employed by the evangelists and attributed by them to the teacher and healer whose words they are endeavoring to report. "They shall cast out devils," is a phrase easily accepted as well as readily accounted for when we take into account the obvious suggestion conveyed by the words themselves, which clearly imply that the unclean demons to be evicted are within the man himself, and particularly when we also remember the universal tendency in the Orient, prevailing to this very day, to highly personify abstract ideas and impersonal tempers.

All diseases and discords proceed from within and manifest outwardly according to all schools of metaphysical thought and practice; thus the mental and spiritual healers of nineteen centuries, more or less, ago, were wont to insist, as their successors do to-day, upon the supreme importance of keeping the inner chambers of the human temple free from all defilement.

If believers in obsession contented themselves with telling their students and patients that they incurred danger from outside evil influences only as they encouraged such base emotions as revenge, jealousy, and fear of evil within themselves, there would be no necessity for waging war upon their favorite inculcations, as such teachings would contain a decided ethical element and would have a tendency to awaken the public intellect as well as conscience to the paramount necessity for keeping out of our subconscious as well as out of our objectively conscious unseen receptacles, all inmates other than those whose acquaintance we can be glad and proud to claim.

Let us now consider a case which may be taken as a fair sample of supposed obsession. A well-meaning woman, who attended a number of our lectures in Boston a few years ago, conceived the idea that she was being pursued and injured by a malignant witch, whose name and address she furnished freely to anyone who asked for it, but as no such house existed as the one described, and no such person as the witch could be discovered in any earthly manner, the victim of this sad delusion transfered the woman and her residence to the psychic realm or "astral plane," from which hidden retreat the persecution still continued to be administered. To reason with the afflicted lady seemed like bidding defiance to a block of granite, so firmly was she rooted in her diabolical belief, but at length she succumbed to reiterated suggestive treatment, given to her at her urgent request when her condition had become almost intolerable.

Mental treatment of a sound, logical, rational sort completely delivered this sufferer from her demented state, and she was truly grateful, but believers in obsession coolly said that suggestive treatment had removed an evil spirit, and certainly if such had been the case suggestion of the right sort would still prove most highly valuable. Now the facts in the case are these: Mental healers who accomplish the best results in all such cases of extraordinary mental aberration, have no belief in evil spirits, and consequently can have no fear of them; not admitting their existence they cannot fight against them or practice any act bordering upon exorcism or coercion, but they do lend a powerful hand in the greatly needed work of strengthening a patient's weak and dormant will, and dispossessing the minds of the afflicted of all beliefs in devils unseen or in malignant enemies on earth.

"A man's foes are they of his own household," and "no one can do me an injury but myself," are two of the strongest and wisest sayings upon which believers in obsession will do well to meditate.

In that extraordinary book, "The Great Psychological Crime," the teachings of which we can partially endorse and partially repudiate, we find the unknown author declaring that a crime against the freedom of the human will is one of the highest magnitude, AND THERE HE IS CERTAINLY IN THE RIGHT. Now if that single statement were well digested, not only by Spiritualists and all who take an interest in reputed mediumship, but by every community at large, there would soon be an end to those disagreeable and distressing manifestations commonly termed obsession. Now let it be distinctly remembered that disbelief in evil spirits, properly so-called, is in no way tantamount to denial of any simple fact of spirit communion or telepathic association between various persons, all of whom are now on earth, but directly these spiritistic and telepathic experiences are considered rationally an explanation is quickly found for the phenomena long attributed to devils but which needs none to explain it. Insanity and obsession are admittedly close of kin, and it is indeed a staple claim of all exorcists that they can liberate even violent maniacs from the thraldom of possessing evil demons. Two varieties of insanity are very common: First, that form of mental aberration which manifests as monomania, where one idea holds possession of a mind to the exclusion of all else; and second, that strange mental wandering which shows that attention is never held for any appreciable length of time to any given subject. A third variety may also often be observed, viz., that strange fitfulness of temper which makes its possessor grave and gay, kindly and churlish, hopeful and despondent by rapid turns, and imparts a feverish general fickleness and consequent unreliability to the entire disposition. These three varieties of insanity can all be traced primarily to lack of developed will power, or to absence of sufficiently determined individuality.

Fashion is very largely responsible for these greatly prevalent mental maladies; the blind following of customs and the tenacious holding to conventionalities on the part of at least nine people out of every ten in civilized communities, is a conspicuous and painful commentary upon the low ebb to which individuality has been allowed to sink, or the low condition out of which it has not yet been called upon to rise.

Whoever helps to assist in the much-needed development of human individuality is certainly a world's benefactor, even though he teach some doctrines which savor of superstition, but it rarely occurs that they who entertain any scaring views of diabolical influences do much more than to cast out one unclean spirit, (to use a gospel illustration); then they leave an empty house, even though it be swept and furnished, into which even seven more dangerous inmates can find an easy entrance.

That there are unseen influences exactly on a par with all varieties of human intelligence displayed on earth today may readily be admitted, but if such be the accepted case we see no justification whatever for any other view of psychic influences than that which we have already entertained.

One man or woman certainly can and often does, unduly influence another, and one child at school often gains an undue influence over other scholars, but we do not usually resort to anything approaching exorcism in such cases, and actually very little is gained by any endeavor to protect the weak against the real danger of contamination by the stronger, except by helping the weakest to increase in strength.

Good moral influences are highly desirable, and no rational person is likely to altogether overlook the immense importance of carefully selecting teachers and guardians for the young; but children must be trained to meet and overcome their own inherent weaknesses so that whenever they may chance to be exposed to inclement psychic airs the vigor of their robust moral constitutions shall prove their effective safeguard.

MANY "DEVELOPING CIRCLES," ORGANIZED FOR THE EXPRESS PURPOSE OF DEVELOPING MEDIUMSHIP, ARE CERTAINLY DANGEROUS IN THEIR TENDENCY, because sensitive people are frequently encouraged to blindly yield to any influence, seen or unseen, which may be present.

Many "magnetic healers" take on, and do literally absorb, the diseases of people whom they manipulate and whom they wish to heal—not because they are wicked, for they are often kindly and sympathetic persons, but because they are possessed with the belief that they are subject to such control, and according to their belief is their experience.

Now it would not be reasonable to deny the existence of disorderly conduct in this world, nor are we called upon to deny that it may be continued until it has been outgrown in the great hereafter, but there is only one safe and sane attitude to take toward all that we can collectively denominate evil, and that is that it can be overcome by good, while it has no power to conquer righteousness. The real danger lies very close at home, and because of its propinquity we are very apt not to notice it if we have accustomed ourselves to always look abroad for causes to the neglect of those which are lying close around us.

There is no doubt a very real danger of our committing something closely resembling a "a great psychological crime," if we accustom ourselves to continually look to others for guidance instead of relying upon the light within. Though we are fully aware that the stand we have resolutely taken for many years concerning "communion versus control," still meets with opposition from many honest Spiritualists, for whom we entertain unqualified respect, it is becoming clearly self-evident that the objectionable word control, and particularly the thought behind it, lies at the very root of much that is now termed obsession, and which, though not due to action of positively evil spirits (for there are none such in reality), is nevertheless a most difficult and painful experience for all who undergo it.

Imagine several different performers, possibly tyros in the art of musical expression, all seeking to manipulate an instrument at the same instant. No one of all these attempting performers may have any ill designs upon the organ or upon the ears of an audience whose very existence they may have totally ignored, but we can readily imagine the hideous babel of confused noises which would soon ensue. Discord is musical insanity, and there cannot be harmony where two or more performers are struggling to play different tunes at the same time upon the same instrument.

"The name is legion, for we are many," is a good text for believers in adverse demoniacal possession to reflect upon most carefully. The most violent outbursts of insanity are often due to nothing but confusion, therefore the most effective remedy for dementia in all its forms is to provide for the mentally afflicted not the prevailing type of lunatic asylum, where multitudes of mentally distracted persons are confined within the walls of an institution whose very name is itself an aggravation of distemper, but homes in the country where under supervision of wise and kindly matrons, superintendents and attendants, the best possible conditions may be afforded for the strengthening of weak wills and the upbuilding of individual character.

One of the chief dangers threatening the rising generation in America and other lands is the constantly increasing tendency, even in a republic, to blindly follow a spurious aristocracy and to simply imitate one's neighbors. Let all who feel called upon to inveigh against the dangers of obsession pay more heed to keeping their horses in their stables, to use a well-worn metaphor, than to employ frantic measures to recover the animals after they have escaped.

Some years ago we were told of a young man who was a "slave to his barber," and less than a year later we were told that he had become a confirmed drunkard. Now it would be quite beyond the limits of prudence or reason, and certainly most uncharitable to call an average hair-dresser a "devil," but ordinary people are very apt to drink, gamble, use profane language, and to otherwise misconduct themselves before they have grown to appreciate a more excellent way of living. Such commonplace people only become dangerous when they are blindly followed and when they gain undue influence over the minds of others.

It is the height of absurdity for people to copy their neighbors in everything, when these neighbors are by no means perfect paragons, and even if they were perfect in all particulars, it would not be possible to develop full self-conscious individuality by simply submitting to the dictum of any human being, no matter how exalted. Our gregarious instincts lead us primarily to associate one with another, but gregariousness does not imply slavery, and it is nothing short of serfdom or abject servitude to ask others' permission to live our own lives according to the dictates of our own consciousness. The peace and welfare of society can never demand that gentlemen shall part their hair in the middle, or that ladies shall wear enormous hats, or that ice cream shall be eaten with forks, though anyone who wishes to indulge in any special type of dress or table manners may safely do so provided the liberty of others is respected equally with one's own.

The average idea of "spirit control" is quite opposed to a righteous affirmation of individual liberty, and it is altogether unnecessary to Spiritualism, for people can truly enjoy CONSCIOUS COMMUNION WITH THEIR FRIENDS in the spirit world without taking any other attitude to them than that they rightfully assume TOWARD EACH OTHER HERE AND NOW.

Spiritualism teaches that individual human life is continuous; that in the post-mortem state of our existence we continue the same individuals we were before transition; it therefore logically lends no countenance to the absurd belief that we are necessarily placed by communion under the dominion of an excarnate any more than of an incarnate human being.

Sensitives or "psychics," as mediums are frequently termed, are simply more delicately organized in some respects than the majority of persons we are accustomed to do business with, and because of natural hyper-sensitiveness or unusually highly strung nervous susceptibility, these people, especially in childhood and early youth, are more than ordinarily liable to be unduly influenced by their surroundings.

The average "developing circle" IS A VERY FAULTY INSTITUTION, because it draws together a miscellaneous assemblage of people, not tuned together to produce harmony, but frequently opposed to one another in nearly all their tastes and tendencies.

Here comes in one of the chief causes for "obsession." A mixed medley of unseen influences is at work, no one influence bad in itself, but all together capable of PRODUCING A VERY EVIL COMPOUND. Then comes in the work of the exorcist, who is often a man of strong hypnotic influence whose towering psychic personality dominates the situation. The released sensitive is obsessed no longer after the hypnotist has successfully cast out the many miscalled devils, because that sensitive is now under control of one mind instead of being led about by many. Hypnotism is, however, no ultimate deliverer, because it can only change for the better a state of servitude. The upright conscientious hypnotist is a good master, but his subject is his mental slave, and though it is highly preferable to obey one master than to be subject to the sway of several, there can be no final antidote to the danger of repeated "demoniacal possession" short of COMPLETE DEVELOPMENT OF ONE'S OWN INDIVIDUALITY.

If some enlightened author would write a rational and temperate book in reply to "The Great Psychological Crime," much good might be accomplished, and the time is now exactly ripe for such a publication.

SPIRITUALISTS MUST REFORM THEIR MOVEMENTS FROM WITHIN AND FOREVER DISCOUNTENANCE SUCH RIDICULOUS METHODS OF DEVELOPING MEDIUMSHIP AS THEY HAVE LONG ENCOURAGED.

There is always danger in confusion, and all would do well to heed the wise apostolical injunction, "Let all things be done decently and in order."

Disorder is the chief bane in Spiritualistic circles, and it is now high time for people who for nearly fifty-six years have been talking incessantly of necessary conditions for harmonious mediumship to begin to furnish such conditions and thus effectually stop the mouths of their accusers who, often spitefully and always gleefully, catch at every straw which they can grasp in any direction in the course of their frantic attempts to make Spiritualism appear dangerous as well as ridiculous before the public eye.

Now that there is in America a National Association of Spiritualists in the eleventh year of its existence, not only seeking but also finding recognition at the hands of many representative bodies engaged in reformatory, educational and liberal religious work, it certainly behooves Spiritualists as a body of representative citizens to look well to their laurels and pause ere they give endorsement to a theory which restores the old-fashioned devil, or something very similar, to its former place in human belief, and thereby plays directly into the hands of the most relentless enemies of Spiritualism. All such fictions as a "destructive principle in nature," and the "annihilation of the finally impenitent," should be left to benighted believers in almost infinite folly, but they have no place in the creed of those who acknowledge "Infinite Intelligence" in their accepted Declaration of Principles. But though we are relentless foes of the idea of essentially wicked spirits, we thoroughly endorse the wise saying in I. Cor., xiv: "The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets," a text which readily admits of a twofold application. 1. Self-control is essential to the right development of seership; 2. Instead of allowing one's self to be blindly led by extraneous influences, one should always seek to maintain an attitude of perfect equilibrium and REFUSE TO BE DOMINATED BY ANY MIND OTHER THAN ONE'S OWN IN THIS OR ANY OTHER SPHERE OF EXISTENCE.

Neighborly relations are needed at all times everywhere. People are still told from many pulpits that they must not use their reason in matters pertaining to religion, and in the social world they are commanded to follow the inanities of social leaders, while in family life it is still largely customary to enforce submission to the unreasoning authority of ignorant parents or else to allow children to run entirely wild.

Suggestive healing is the only sufficient remedy for those disorderly appearances which are styled "obsession," for nothing short of calling forth the latent energy of character dormant in the most painful cases, will enable the once victim of their seen and unseen surroundings to arise in their newfound might and put to rout all "armies of the aliens."

A too submissive temper should never be encouraged. The path of safety through this experimental school we call the world, is always the ROAD OF SELF-RELIANCE, and though we can certainly secure an all-sufficient measure of heavenly guidance to light us on our way, each individual must needs learn the difficult lesson of self-confidence and self-poise ere he can take rank among the true immortals who have grown to know that we must, every one of us, encounter difficulties and surmount them ere we can graduate with honors from the college of the soul.

Trust in righteousness and its final victory and resolve to live a life of strict integrity in thought and word and action; along that path alone lies conquest over all "obsession."

MEDIUMSHIP OF GODS.

The Spirit Jehovah Was the God of the Israelites.

A message comes that a change of conditions is near us, bringing to this earth a new idea of a practical heaven here and now, on earth, and the election of a new god. Shall the new god be a spirit person or a spirit in a human material body? It is good to learn about the gods.

In the ages of Moses, Jeremiah, Isaiah and other Old Testament authors there is evidence that God Jehovah was a spirit person. In a former age Jehovah had lived a human material life on this earth. Moses exercised great power over his people in the name of spirit God Jehovah. Jehovah was made or elected to be the good God of Israel in the age of Moses, and by him Jehovah was placed in the minds of the people in authority over them and others. "God came from Teman." Habbakkuk 3:3.

At that time and for hundreds of years afterwards, the high water marks of history were indicated by the wars of the Israelites. The name Israel means—El does battle—after whom the nation named itself, and Jehovah was the spirit of the warrior El.

The camp was the place in which the people was nursed and the shop in which it was welded into unity; it was also the early place to worship. There Israel was, and there was Jehovah. If in times of peace the relations between the two had become dormant, they were at once called forth into fullest activity when the alarm of danger was raised.

Israel's awakening was always preceded by the awakening of Jehovah. Jehovah awakened men, who under the guidance of his spirit placed themselves at the nation's head; in them his proper leadership was visibly expressed. Jehovah went forth with the host to battle, and in its enthusiasm his presence was seen.

"Curse ye Meroz," said the angel of Jehovah, "curse you strongly the inhabitants thereof; because they come not to the help of Jehovah, to the help of Jehovah against the mighty."

With signs and wonders from heaven Jehovah decided the struggle carried on upon earth. In it he was always on Israel's side; on Israel was his whole interest concentrated, although his power (for he was their God) reached beyond local limits.

Thus Jehovah was a real spirit person, a living God; but the manifestations of his presence in the crises of his people's history were separated by considerable intervals of time. His activity had something abrupt and tumultuary about it, better suited for extraordinary occasions than for ordinary life. It was in the case of Jehovah just as in the case of the human leaders of the people, who did not in times of peace wholly lose the influence they had gained in war. Jehovah had his permanent court at the places of worship, where in times of quietude men clung to him that they might not lose him in time of trouble.

His chief, perhaps in the time of Moses his only place of worship, was with the ark of the covenant. It was a standard, adapted at first to the requirements of a wandering and warlike life; brought back from the field of war, it became a symbol of Jehovah's presence, the central seat of his worship; the Torah of Jehovah, the great law book, was kept with it. This had first of all been exercised at the advice or suggestion of the priest of Midian, by Moses at the well of Kedesh; it was continued after him, at the place of worship, within the circle of those who had attached themselves to him and were mentally his heirs.

Moses lived in years between 1600 and 1480 B. C. In the time of Moses, and after him in the time of the Bible prophets, in cases where the wisdom of the ordinary judges failed, men turned to the spirit person Jehovah—spirit messages direct from God.

RESURRECTION.

D. L. Moody's Thoughts on What it Implies.

My Dear Friends:—Allow me the privilege of talking to you for a few moments through the medium of a newspaper. The subject I shall talk about is "Resurrection." While on the earth planet the resurrection bothered me to a great extent. I could not just make it plain to myself, and now I want to try a new way of explaining. Many believe the old body is brought forth; some a new body arises from the grave at the last day. I do not believe either of them. Our earthly bodies when our spirits leave them are of no further use to us. They are as an old house that we have deserted for a more pretentious dwelling; they are as a shell that has grown too small for our spirit and we have burst it and are free!

Oh! the glories of the plan of life as I see it now. My heart is full of the wonderful presence and reality of the God of our people; His mysterious leadings are as much of a delight to me now as in the years gone by, and I am convinced that there is no good (necessary) thing withheld from those that try to obey His silent leading. Our Apostle Paul talks of the "celestial" and "terrestrial" bodies in a manner that is pleasing to me; we might call them earthly and heavenly bodies to be more easily understood. When our spirit or life has departed from the earthly body we are a spirit. I have seen people in this world, that as yet, did not inhabit a spiritual body, but were simply spirit, or life. Now I know that sounds strange to you, but it is so. They are spirits that desire to be born again—or reincarnated. Just why those people are not clothed in a spiritual body I do not know. They are always close to earth. Never found (at least I have not found them) even on the "second plane." To me, they have not been resurrected as yet. Now they have a spiritual body but choose rather to haunt the earth planet to, as they term it, be born again. Ofttimes they are believers in the doctrine of reincarnation before coming here, and again they are taught by some one as soon as they arrive here. A most erroneous idea it is, too. Once born to the earth planet, you are born to the earth planet no more. You receive your individuality as it were. And you remain an individual throughout the countless ages of eternity, unless you are absolutely evil, with no good in you at all, then you disappear from among us. The resurrection of the spirit comes to you when you are sufficiently enlightened as regards the spiritual side of life, to be born, as I term it, into your spiritual body. That nearly always occurs at the transition from earth. Some will say it always does; such, however, has not been my observation since arriving here. Very seldom though, will two people give the same report regarding any certain thing. I have been privileged to watch the transition of a great many people since I came here; some were born immediately into the new body awaiting them. Others, (and my heart grows sad to recall them) would leave the earthly body and yet be tied to it, and be only a spirit or speck of life wandering as far as allowed but ever drawn back to the earthly body and grave. Some feel they have no place but the same body; they are the ones that are born into the new world in ignorance of the life to come. They are usually the ones that believe in no life but the earth life. Oh! how can a sensible mortal be so neglectful as regards his eternal welfare.

I chose the word resurrection as my subject, but I seem to do as I so often have done in earth life, choose a text and preach all around it. But no matter, I must write my thoughts as they come. In this world of many mysteries, strange places, and many cities we oftimes say of some of our number that, have finished their work on a certain plane, or in a certain city, "they must have been resurrected; I have not seen them for some time." Taking one of the meanings of the word "resurrection," which is "a rising again," it seems to me to be very applicable. Life is a mystery to you, as well as death, and to us who have crossed the border line the mystery is still with us. Yet we believe all things are for a purpose, and we feel sure that somewhere, in the plan of the Highest, there will be a window to shed light on our pathway of work that we may see the fulfillment of many of these, to us, strange things. Were we entirely done with working for earth and her people, we would no doubt come more quickly to a better understanding of all things. But while so many of our loved ones and friends remain in the earthly form, we choose to abide not too far away, but soon there will come a day when all those we love so dearly and so desire to have with us here, will close their tired earthly eyes to open them in the new land of light and beauty; to walk at times beside the streams of pure water, and gaze upon the beautiful flowers; to listen to the songs of the birds, as they too have a place in the land that is ours by rightful inheritance. The land that has no night, and no evil things shall come nigh. Where we work with one accord for the advancing of the good that is within our spiritual natures; the land wherein we each may have a home, a house not built by hands of perishable material, but built by good deeds and loving actions; in cities that have no need of lights, as each will be a light unto himself. Are not these things worth striving for? Is it not worth while to do our best to live good, pure, helpful lives, and use our influence all for good? Let me answer you, my friends, it is, and ever will be the best for time and eternity to be good, do good and act good.

Then when it comes your time to cross death's golden sea your resurrection will be complete, and you will enter the new and everlasting world with the knowledge and spiritual power to at once understand the work that lies before you, and being so equiped, no evil can come near you to lead you into by-paths of doubt and dismay.

May the angels ever guide you
Hour by hour, and day by day;
And keep you ever walking
In the straight and narrow way.
"Life is real, life is earnest,"
And at death it just begins,
So we ask the blessed angels
To keep you safely from earth's sins.

Death Defeated, or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young.

This book goes to the foundation of things—health, the laws of health, the foods to eat, the subject of marriage, who should marry and who should not marry, the causes of divorce, the proper time for conception, gestation, the determining of sex, animal flesh-eating, what Herodotus, Heslod, Homer, Pythagoras, Shelley, Graham and others ate, the foods that produce long life and how to live "immortal" on earth, etc. This book is written in Dr. Peebles' usually clear, crisp style, and attracts the reader from the very first through its facts, logic and convincing arguments. Very handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.

Vaccination a Curse and a Menace to Personal Liberty.

This finely illustrated volume of between three hundred and four hundred pages, by Dr. Peebles, treats exhaustively of inoculation, cow-pox and calf-lymph vaccination from Jenner's time to the present. It tells how the cow-pox pus poison is obtained—how the vaccine virus, while causing many deaths, sows the seed of eczema, pimpled faces, cancers, tumors, ulcers and leprosy. It gives a history of the several years' battle against vaccination in England, Parliament making it "optional" instead of compulsory. This book should be in every school library and family. Price $1.25.

ECHOES OF THE SYMPOSIUM

LYMAN C. HOWE. MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

The Great Psychological Crime

A Comparison of Views and the Reasons Therefor.

Lyman C. Howe, the veteran Spiritualist Lecturer and Medium, a man well and favorably known as one of the foremost thinkers and writers in our ranks, will Champion the Cause of Truth as reflected in Spiritualism, while Mrs Florence Huntley, the well-known Author and Journalist, will defend all the statements in The Great Psychological Crime, which Mr. Howe will dare to assail, making a series of articles instructive, suggestive and inspiring, and which every Spiritualist should most carefully read.

LYMAN C. HOWE REPLIES TO MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

Mrs. Florence Huntley, Chicago, Ill.:

My Dear Madam—Your Number Two is at hand. I find much in it to indicate the value of this discussion, and, though you find me a dull pupil, and confusing in my attempts to reason, there is hope for me yet, since I am but a kid learning to walk.

You seem anxious to push me on to some special attack on the book, which you seem to regard as the chief object of this discussion. I do not so understand it. I am not anxious to make any attack upon any one, but to use such suggestions as the book presents to my mind, for the value I can find in them, and with your help, to get a clearer understanding of the principles and ideas it contains, and try to reconcile them with known facts and reason. To hasten to certain points that you may deem most significant, before we have finished those already to ched upon, would, it seems to me, weaken the value of the entire discussion. The author lays down certain basic principles, upon which he builds the entire superstructure of his philosophy.

Prominent among these is individual sovereignty, and independent free moral agency, as the normal condition of the human soul. In this connection he assumes that there are two great and opposing principles in nature, the constructive and destructive; and that the one conserves and builds individualism, while the other destroys it. And he holds and teaches, that hypnotism, in all its phases, is a destroyer of the individual life, and LEADS TO DEATH. He defines it as the "processes by and through which one person, called a hypnotist, obtains, holds, and exercises control of the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism of another person called a subject."

I holds that, "There are numerous methods or processes by means of which it is possible for a hypnotist to obtain such control," and that, "the mischievous and destructive effects of hypnotic control do not generally manifest themselves at once to the observer, nor to the subject himself," and he insists that mediumship is always, and invariably, a hypnotic process in all respects the same as that defined, except that the hypnotist is an excarnate individual in all mediumistic manifestations.

Since the limitations of his definitions only cover such cases as subdue the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism by the action of the will of the hypnotist, it seemed to me that all cases and conditions in which the active will of one or more persons, reaches, impresses, and controls the will and voluntary powers of another, are hypnotic, no matter how or for what purpose the will is exercised. In as much as our author admits that the evil effects "do not generally manifest themselves at once to the observer, nor to the subject himself," and that "there are numerous methods or processes by means of which it is possible for the hypnotist to obtain control of his subject," it seemed to me a legitimate inquiry to ask, "where is the limit?" Must the effects be immediate, and the hypnotist known to the subject, in order to make it a hypnotic process? If the effects do not at once appear either to the observer or the subject, who can decide when or where the hypnotic process begins? If the methods are numerous, and the effects, at first, not perceptible, and you write to me with a strong purpose, and will to convince me of any truth, and I am impressed by your will and words in ever so small a degree, what is that but a hypnotic control? The same process continued might extend progressively the hypnotic impress of your mind, until I would be unable to resist your gentle persuasions, or to see the subject independently.

You judge me "unfair" to use the word independent in any sense not intended by the author. I know of but two ways to determine the meaning of words. First, the lexicon; second, the special definition given by the author. If there is any special definition in the book by which the author limits his meaning of the word "independent," I have overlooked it. In one place only do I find it used with a special modifying phrase. On page 17 he speaks of the second class of phenomena as "those which occur independently of hypnotic control." I have not understood this to be a standard definition like those given on pages 8 and 32-3.

If it means "independent of hypnotic control" in every case, and nothing more, it would seem to me unnecessary to use the word at all.

Webster defines it: "1. Not dependent," not subject to the control of others; not relying on others; not subordinate." "3. Not subject to bias or influence; not obsequious; self-directing." The attempt to reason and analyze the relations of causes and effects, and to determine as far as possible how our conditions and acts are related to, and governed by, antecedents, and how and where control begins, and in what degree we are free and independent, it seems that I have either used bad English or unsound logic, and thus unwittingly annoyed, and puzzled you. To make amends, if I can, I will try again. If a merchant is anxious to sell you a bill of goods, which you do not want, or at least do not care to purchase at his price, and persists in appealing to you with a variety of plausible suggestions of a great bargain, and urging you to examine further, meanwhile using his will with his words, and you finally become so interested in the goods, that you think you see a rare bargain for you, and decide to purchase them at his price, would that be a hypnotic control? True, you had your choice, and took the goods because you thought you wanted them, and you thought you were acting independently. But your estimate of the goods was changed by the will and persuasive suggestions of the salesman. Your will—choice—was really dictated by the man behind the counter. This illustrates briefly, and imperfectly, my thought of the operations of causes that influence, impel, or compel our actions through life. But I DO NOT hold or attempt to maintain that all men are mediums in the special, limited, hypnotic, sense as defined by our author.

Spiritualists often reiterate the expression that "all persons are mediums, but in varying degrees of susceptibility; and all are more or less influenced, impressed, guided and controlled, by the will of excarnate beings."

When a subject is in the early stages of hypnosis, and entirely unconscious of any extraneous power impressing his mind, is that "control?" If not, at what stage of the process does it become control? If it is control, then are you not controlled when you buy a pair of shoes under the persuasive influence of the suggestions of the clerk behind the counter? His will, accompanying his suggestions, impresses your mind in a way to change your first decision, and it often happens that people make purchases under the influence of such suggestions, and regret it afterwards. I know this, for I have done it myself. But, instead of this experience preparing me for another, and more extended application of the same processes, I am better prepared to resist the next attempt, and with the memory of the previous experience before me, defy the hypnotic efforts of the salesman. I understand that it is claimed that the hypnotic process is steadily progressive; that it first subdues the will and voluntary powers, and lastly attacks the sensory organism through the devolutionary order of the three brains. If this be true, is the first impression upon the will a hypnotic control? If not, where, in the course of the process, does it become control? But the will is always subject to the demands and commands of desire. Can you will to do anything that you do not, under all the circumstances and conditions then obtaining, desire to do? I think not. Then the "control" must go back of the will and attack desire. Desire is a result of antecedents and circumstances as they combine in the complex organism of your whole being, is it not?

In any hypnotic process there must be, it seems to me, some point of beginning. Where is that point? If you desire to partake of some choice fruit, can the hypnotic "control," paralyze your power to choose in accordance with that desire? Or does it change the desire first?

I once had an experience that may illustrate this question. When I first became a medium my hand would answer mental questions and perform many mysterious things. So long as I made no resistance it seemed to respond very readily to the will of an outside intelligence. But I could at any time stop it in an instant, by the exercise of my volition, and it required but the feeblest effort to resist anything this power might be doing with my hands. I was skeptical as to the source of this outside power. It acted with evident intelligence. It seemed to know our thoughts. I reasoned (very illogically as I now see it) that if it were spirits they ought to be able to control my hand after they had possession of it, in defiance of my will or resistance. If they would do this, I thought it would remove all doubt. One day they told me they would lay me down and hold me in spite of my resistance. I did not believe it, but hoped it might be done, for that, I thought would settle my doubts. I did not resist the attempt to lay me on my back, which I could easily have done. When I was in the most helpless position they said to me: "Now you cannot get up.' I knew better. I knew I could rise as easily as at any other time, if I could try; but I could not try. I had no desire to rise. I was as conscious and as intellectually clear as I am at this moment. I knew that I could use my voluntary powers as readily and as forcefully as at any other time, if I wanted to. But I did not want to. This lasted but a few seconds—less than a minute, I think—and has never been repeated.

In this case my power to choose depended upon my desire, and what the desire or lack of desire sprung from is the conundrum. You tell me that it is the process that determines the character of hypnotic control, and that depends upon the action of the will of the hypnotist; but you claim a distinct difference between influence and control. But when an imperceptible impression is made upon the mind of a subject, in what does that differ from any other suggestion that may produce a similar or identical impression? If the will as the motor power is the pivot on which all the processes turn, then it would seem to me that any and all influences (proceeding from the desires and wills of others), produced upon the human mind to modify, change, or direct its action, and the order of thinking, must be hypnotic.

If I am correct in this, it would seem that a very large share, of all human conduct is referable to, and dependent upon, hypnotic suggestion, within the meaning of the word as defined in the book. "Independent suggestion" would be limited to those influences proceeding from natural environment, and those human expressions that are not attended by any exercise of the will.

The author's definition supposes that both the parties to an "independent suggestion" are in full and undisputed control of all their independent, self-conscious and rational faculties."

But is not this exactly the condition at the inception of all hypnotic processes? Slowly, imperceptibly, the influence of the positive will changes this condition of mutual independence, as the hypnotic process proceeds. At the beginning "neither party is under hypnotic control."

"Each is in undisputed possession and control of all his own independent, self-conscious and rational faculties, capacities and powers." In all cases where the subject is aware of the intentions of the hypnotist, and voluntarily consents to the operation, he is acting as independently as you and I are in this discussion. With this condition the hypnotic process begins. Then, in all cases of independent suggestion, I judge the persons making the suggestion must do so without any exercise of will; and this, I think, seldom happens.

Now, all of this and much more might be said against the assumption that process is so fatal to the well-being of individual life.

Nature accomplishes many things by a variety of processes, and all converge to serve one progressive aim. She is perpetually changing the molecular relations of our bodies, expelling exhausted cells and replacing them with new ones, not for the purpose of destroying individual life, but to conserve and perpetuate it.

She builds progressively, beginning with the simplest forms, with but a single function, and changing the structural order by repelling the unfit, and absorbing the needful to serve in the evolution of the individuality, differentiating as she advances, multiplying function as she increases faculty, and always pushing up through every change the one dominating principle expressed in progressive individualism. If we may postulate a universal design—to say nothing of a Designer—it would appear that the purpose from the dawn of life, when approximate chaos reigned in the cosmos, to the highest order of organized intelligence, the perfection of an intelligent individuality that represents limitless resources and possibilities, and the sum of all attainments, with the secret prophecy of a spiritual immortality, was stamped upon the inner pages of causative destiny, and present in all the varying processes that attend the evolution of individual life. From these translations of Nature I infer that the assumption of a

"DESTRUCTIVE PRINCIPLE IN INDIVIDUAL LIFE"

is a dream of the mystic. If he has means of knowing that are not accessible to me, I do not set any stakes, or dogmatize against possible reality. But I deem it quite possible that one possessed of unusual means of obtaining knowledge may yet make radical mistakes. If we accept the theory of evolution that appears to be sustained by the rocky records of the world, the evidence is overwhelming that man is a result of progressive processes, in which life and death have been perpetual contributors, each essential to the one aim, each dependent upon the other, and all the processes attending individual evolution—including the human will and all its uses—have been, and are in their ultimate bearings,

CONSTRUCTIVE FACTORS IN INDIVIDUAL LIFE.

But in what does individuality consist? Is it the anatomical form clothed with matter? I think the author will say no. Is it, then, a spiritual entity moulding to its order the changeable body? Is it this vitalizing center that has pushed its way up the centuries, through all the lower types, amid the passion-storms of ages, in the dismal seas of animal impulse and chaotic fury? Is it reasonable to suppose that an individual life that has thus persisted, and continually advanced through all the varying conditions attendant upon the world's development has within itself an opposing dependent upon so fickle and uncertain an agent as the human will, by which the work of ages may be defeated? It looks to me that an individualism that has come up through such conditions, and persisted and advanced in spite of all obstacles, through all the animal planes in which appetite and passion dominated all, cannot hold within itself a DESTRUCTIVE PRINCIPLE which can, by any possibility, defeat the achievements thus attained.

If it should turn out that there is no such destructive principle, but that all processes, either directly or indirectly, contribute to the evolution of individual life, then the whole system of philosophy upon which the author predicates his "Great Psychological Crime" needs reconstructing; and hypnotism and mediumship may be entitled to a new trial.

In accepting the position of a critic and questioner in this discussion, I did not understand that I was expected to refute anything, unless I found something in the book to refute. But there is much to invite queries and suggestions without any special effort to refute the author's statements. But I find some things that seem to me to ask for a challenge, and one of them is that which I have called to account in this letter. I must skip some points that seem to me of minor importance and touch some that seem to need a little fixing. You refer to my answer to your question about my being willing to accept a truth if thrust upon me by a process which paralyzes reason, and find in it a lack of frankness! Many people who have known me for 20 or more years still seem to regard me as candid and sincere, and have never to my knowledge discovered that I am not frank and fair in my efforts to tell the truth. Now you have found me out at the outset of our correspondence, and spoiled all my hopes of making you believe that I mean what I say! I did not think you would catch me so soon. But after reconsidering my answer, I find nothing to take back or change. And as it seems to me, if I had answered unqualifiedly "No," I should not have expressed the truth so fully and so frankly as I did in the "hypothetical case" to which you refer. If our readers think my answer was not honest or frank, perhaps they will excuse me as not being entitled to the "franking privilege."

I fully agree with you when you say that "the natural method of receiving intellectual knowledge of the truth is through the exercise of one's own natural faculties, capacities and powers, and not by or through their suppression and paralysis." You agree that natural sleep is proper," and that we welcome it, because we are "under the wise protection of the Great Intelligence."

Well, are we not at all times subjects of the same protection?

Are we sure, when we lie down to sleep that, in the passive quiet of soothing dreams, we are not liable to be possessed, hypnotized, and played with, by any passing stranger that may discover us, and take advantage of our helpless condition? Is there any certain protection against such a calamity? Much is said of the "abnormal" and "unnatural," as being dangerous, etc. But what is normal to one day or one stage of our evolution, may be abnormal to another. The temperature that is normal to a native of the tropics would kill an Esquimau in a short time, and vice versa. Sudden transitions from one condition to another are liable to make unpleasant experiences, and often result in destruction; but when attained by progressive processes, the state that was abnormal may become normal. A hypnotic process that benumbs the brain, and translates the consciousness into a deep interior realization of spiritual things, may at first be harmful to the body, and very abnormal to the ordinary waking state. So is a profound sleep, from which one awakens benumbed and confused, and at first feels dissatisfied and uncomfortable. By degrees the abnormal becomes normal, and the normal becomes abnormal, without harm to the individual.

In regard to the reflections made by different writers in the Symposium, upon the concealed personality of the author of the book, I have this to say: I have not reflected upon the author any unkind or censorious criticisms, on account of his being unknown. What I said was logically consistent with the issues that come between us. I have no criticism to offer upon that subject. I have made none. I simply referred to it as an unavoidable factor in this discussion, and not to reflect against the author in any way, or to question his reasons for remaining unknown to our readers. I can realize how seclusion may be necessary to the success of his work. I have known similar cases among mediums, whose sensitiveness felt the jar of even a query of curiosity.

I have myself seen the time that the quiet gaze of human eyes out of my sight ten feet distant, was distinctly tangible; and censorious thoughts grated upon my nerves. My reference to the unknown source of the book was that the fundamental statements upon which all his theories rest are undeterminable, by any means within our reach, and therefore must, for the present rest upon the testimony of the unknown author. They are not, for the present subject to verification, by any means accessible to me or the public.

The value of human testimony depends upon the character of the witness—not only his truthfulness, but upon what we know of his opportunities and abilities for obtaining the particular knowledge to which he testifies. Also a knowledge of his mental habits in observing, tabulating, and critically testing the value and realness of all he communicates. This would not be necessary if the book were predicated upon well-known data, and scientific demonstration as known to the leading physicists. I thought I made this clear in my second letter, and did not think you or anyone could see any unjust or unkind insinuations against the author of the book, in anything that I said. You wonder if any one of us "is prepared to stand by the logic of" our "criticisms on this subject, when it is applied to mediumship and Spiritualism." For myself I can answer unqualifiedly "YES." You will admit that is "frank," I think. I cannot answer for the rest. But I think you do not represent Mrs. Richmond's position correctly. So far as I have known, most of her lectures have been credited to some unfleshed individual, whose name accompanied the address. It is widely known that Mrs. Richmond speaks as a medium, and does not assume responsibility for the utterances of her guides, even though her name be the only one attached to a lecture or letter. But I do not presume to answer for her.

You mistake when you suppose that all Spiritualists accept anonymous communications from our kind, whether in the flesh or not. For one, I do not accept the statement of any spirit upon matters of fact, which cannot be verified by any other means than the assertion of an unknown ghost. If Gabriel should control Mrs. Richmond and tell us that the moon is inhabited by a race of giants 20 feet tall, and weighing 800 pounds each, it would make no impression upon my intellect, more than a moment's amusement, perhaps. If Abraham Lincoln should report through the same medium, and corroborate the story it would not hypnotize me into believing it. I know a leading and widely-known Spiritualist, one of the contributors to the Symposium, and a public speaker, who has several times announced through the spiritual press that he would not answer or notice any writer who withheld his name. I have not "thrust into this discussion" any "double-edged sword" as a "weapon." I am not anxious to hurt the author or my fair correspondent, or to apply any weapon against any truth. I have not attempted to disparage the author by referring to his attitude in withholding his name. I simply stated the difficulties in the way of arriving at a definite result, which, I think, our readers will see were logically consistent, and inevitable. I had hoped to approach mediumship in this letter for there is where most of the interest to our readers is likely to center. But that must wait for another writing.

As I understand this subject the striking charges made in the book against hypnotism and mediumship, are predicated upon certain discoveries claimed to have been made by a process that is unknown to me, and to the great body of our readers, and therefore must be accepted—if accepted at all—on faith, that, for the present, cannot be settled by demonstration. Am I not correct in this? With high esteem and fraternal regard, I remain,

Your friend in search of truth.

Constipation Needs a Cure.

A simple remedy only is not sufficient, especially if the relief is brought about by the use of salts, aloes, rhubarb, or some similar purgative or cathartic. They temporarily relieve but they weaken the bowels and make the condition worse. In constipation the bowels require strengthening, toning, and something that will assist them to do their work naturally and healthfully—in short a tonic laxative of the highest order. That is what Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine is. It both relieves and permanently cures by removing the cause of the difficulty. It positively cures dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver troubles, headache and all other diseases which grow out of sick and clogged bowels. One small dose a day will cure any case, light or bad. It is not a patent medicine. The full list of ingredients goes with every package with explanation of their action. It costs nothing to try it. A free sample bottle for the asking. Vernal Remedy Co., 166 Seneca Building, Buffalo, N. Y.

SOME BACK TALK.

D. W. Hull Replies to Ecclesia-Phobia Critics.

It appears that an article I wrote some time ago, entitled "Ecclesia-Phobia," has elicited several responses. Two of them—those of Sisters Clara Watson and H. A. Stockey were critical, and one by Bro. J. H. Dickey, commendatory. The article that I had written was occasioned by another article. I forget who was its author, which metaphorically took some of us into his back yard and castigated us for making use of the words defended in my article. As I did not care to enter into any discussion I mentioned no name. I am glad to find one man come to my defense, for I do love approbation. But while thanking him for the good words he said, I will not withhold my appreciation from my two sisters for defending what they believe to be truth, notwithstanding the bitter personal twang that appeared more especially in that of Sister Stockey.

Sister Stockey intimates that I "have arrived at the febrile stage of that malady which is characterized by flightiness." Thank you! But insane people should be treated more kindly than she treated me. Yet I am glad it was I instead of some one else she thinks has gone mad. Sister Watson admits she has Ecclesia-Phobia. That is good. The cure is easier.

Sister Watson is a very interesting woman, and so perhaps is Sister Stockey, but I don't know her so well. Mrs. Watson is intensely in earnest, and all she says in her criticisms is said mostly because she thinks it ought to be said. I want to say I always admire such persons. I don't suppose she reciprocates, but that does not make any difference with me. She has strong convictions, and so have I. There is a psychologic condition with each of us that whatever may intervene adheres closely to us. It is called hypnotism by unscientific scientists, but it is the result of suggestion. The suggestion is antipathic with some of our extreme friends, and in consequence they will not see an adverse argument so quickly as if their minds were free. I am not claiming that I am clear of it. Indeed I have often discovered that I was not. I well remember what a struggle I had in breaking away from my old religious teachings, on account of the psychology of my former teachings. Any one who has ever read "Robert Elsmere" can realize what mental suffering I endured in making the transition, and it lasted several weeks. But it was worth all it cost me. It taught me what a thrall may hold some persons, especially if very sensitive. And if Sister Watson and Sister Stockey are held to their ultra conceptions of truth, I can realize how they are held. Of course they will deny that they grew up under that belief or disbelief as one pleases. It came to them as a reaction from their former views. I was there myself, for a long time, upon the same principle that the pendulum which touches one wall is liable to swing to the opposite wall. The word "Reverend" was often applied to me, principally because I had been a minister in the Adventist church, but I generally disclaimed the title, telling my audiences that I was a "reformed minister," and that since my reformation I ignored that title. No doubt my good and earnest sisters think I have apostatized, if they dare use a word found in ecclesiasticism. If so, all right. I have apostatized because I have learned something I did not know before.

Speaking of the words "church," "religion," "Bible," and "reverend," Sister Watson says: "But to me it does not matter what the original meaning of words may be; it is the popularly established, every day meaning which concerns us, and certainly bad associations center around the words mentioned." Indeed! I wonder if bad associations do not center around the words "democrat," "republic," "republican," "liberty," "noble," "benevolence," and a thousand other words! Who wants to abolish these words because of their bad associations? Some of these bad associations are only in Sister Watson's mind. Her study of religion having been mostly confined to the Roman and Anglo-Saxon religions, which have been misnamed Christian, she gives her definitions accordingly. There are five hundred millions Buddhists, and they have flourished for twenty-five centuries, and it would be very difficult for Sister Watson to point out one sin to their charge. There are four hundred and eighty millions of Confucians, and they are equally innocent. Besides these there are perhaps over one hundred millions of Parsis, Shintos and other pagan religions, against whom nothing can be said. Modern Christianity has not more than one thirty-third part of the whole world, and to make all otner religions responsible for its doings is turning vicariousness upside down.

"The influence of these four words," she says, "has filled the world with misery, suffering, degradation, ignorance and woe." I am not sure about that. As scheming men are wont to unite with whatever society or institution they can use to further their own ends, the fault may have been more in the men than the institution After Christianity had become a power in the world this class of men sought the priesthood for the purpose of furthering their impositions. It was to their interest to keep the world in ignorance and superstition; but in these days this class of people appear to be getting into politics, or into the control of the leading political parties, for the very same purpose; for the whole effort of politicians is to keep people from reading any other literature except such as is furnished by the dailies under their control. Education has become popular with the masses, but they are using every possible method to swarm the country with an ignorant population from abroad.

"Doctors and professors," says Mrs. Watson "as well as blacksmiths and school teachers are of use in the world.' Sister Watson seems to be innocent. The fault I have with our schools is that college graduates will allow themselves imposed on by the medical fraternity. When a doctor gets a case he doesn't understand, he calls it heart disease, appendicitis, or something, and proceeds to go down in the patient's pockets ever after, or send him where an operation will withdraw hundreds from him at one pull, a rake-off of which he receives for his good offices in sending him to the butchery.

I practice in a small way myself, in my itineracy, and I know whereof I speak when I say an inflammation of the colon is not appendicitis, or that a diaphragmal weakness is not heart disease. I have taken scores of women who were about to be sent to the hospital by their doctors, and saved them surgical operations. And a number of these diseases have been inflicted by some unskilled doctor years previous at a child-birth. If our schools were what they should be, the graduates would know more about themselves, and could not be imposed on by their physicians. Do you think Funston would ever had two operations for appendicitis if he had known something of physiology? The word "Professor" is applied to every traveling mountebank in the country. In fact the word reverend is not half so much abused as these two words. The word "doctor" means a teacher, what do our so-called physicians teach.

She tells us that "the Spiritualistic religionist cannot force religion upon the non-religious Spiritualists." And Mrs. Stockey tells us "You want us to swallow the church and all ecclesiastical belongings, because in some old forgotten age these words did not mean what they do now." I expect she knows what I want to do. Who is trying to force anything? Who makes all the kicks we see in The Progressive Thinker concerning the unorthodoxy of some of the Spiritualists? Has any one observed anything of the kind from those who believe Spiritualism to be a religion? I confess I cannot think of any. Haven't we been scolded time and again because we were so churchy? The article criticised was written as a response to a scold—not one scold alone, but repeated scolds coming from those who were out of patience with us, because we did not subscribe to their little creed.

Then she tells us: "The world is rapidly emerging where priest rule was impossible; the shackles are broken; the chick is hatched; and no amount of tongue-lashing of anathema marantha can frighten it back into the shell again. Your Reverence will find it equally impossible to ridicule Freethinkers among Spiritualists out of court, or in any way compelling them to swallow your quack ecclesiastical nostrums." You can easily see that our sister has worked herself into a frenzy. I am sorry for this, and I have no wish to agitate her further. I believe she is honest, and perhaps thinks her view is so plain that it is only my stubbornness that prevents me from accepting it. I have learned in my nearly seventy-one years on this planet that people may honestly differ from each other, and that a man is no more to blame for differing from another than he would be, if his hair differed in color from that of another person.

Now I think I had better close, though there are some points I am strongly tempted to argue to a finish. I sincerely hope I have said nothing offensive to either of these sisters. My aim for many years past has been to use soft words and hard arguments, but sometimes the temptation is great to be a bit sarcastic. I shall hope that I may yet have the privilege of a more intimate acquaintance with my two sisters, With much esteem,

ORGANIZED EFFORT.

Organize to Repeal Tyrannical Medical Laws.

The foes of medical freedom have, through organized effort, secured the passage in all the states of laws which make it a crime to heal the sick by the power of vital magnetism, or by any other method, except the administration of poisonous drugs by doctors who can get a license to practice from a board of doctors, a majority of whom are allopaths, and bitter foes to all new and progressive systems of medicine.

The American Medical Association was organized for the express purpose of securing the passage of these despotic laws. It is composed of allopathic doctors, and comprises less than one in ten of the doctors of that school, a majority of whom are opposed to such laws; while ninety per cent of the homeopathic, eclectic and physio-medical doctors are opposed to them.

But ten thousand doctors organized, have more power than a million who are not.

The American Medical Union was organized for the express purpose of overthrowing medical despotism, and restoring freedom to physicians and people alike. It was born in Chicago four years ago, and now has members in every state and territory. While it has steadily increased in membership from year to year, it has made exceptionally large growth during the present year; which fact we ascribe largely to the influence of that broad and brilliant magazine, Medical Talk, published at Columbus, Ohio, whose able editor, Dr. C. S. Carr, has kept its claims before his one hundred thousand readers from month to month. As an introduction to the publication of the constitution of the A. M. U. in the October number, Dr. Carr says:

"The American Medical Union, organized in 1899, is growing in numbers and influence steadily, and it is already exerting a potent influence in favor of the principles on which it was founded. These principles are summed up in its motto, "Fraternity, Freedom, Progress." The editor and many of the readers of Medical Talk are members of it, and we shall be glad to have all our readers join it."

It should not be very long before the American Medical Union would outnumber the membership of the American Medical Association, when it could force the repeal of all oppressive medical laws.

Membership in the A. M. U. is open to all honorable men and women, whether physicians or not, and the fee for membership is only one dollar.

Reader, do you not think it a privilege, no less than a duty to join this grand organization? If so, write at once, inclosing one dollar, to yours for Fraternity, Freedom and Progress,

10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present.

Read This Carefully Before Re-Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These ten books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $3.10, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these ten premium books is about ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.10, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—a bargain the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS!

A New Locality for Heaven and Hell.

Rev. W. A. Freeman, a Baptist preacher, has put the knowledge of the sun gained by astronomers to a useful purpose. He says there is no doubt that the sun spots are openings into hell, and the bright surface is the abode of the blessed. There it will be handy for the saints to stand on the yawning edges of the craters forming the spots and look down into the fiery abyss and see their dearest friends and relatives suffering infinite torture!

Hot enough for a hell? Aye, hotter than the incandescent electric current of ten thousand volts! Hot enough not only to melt iron and platinum but dissipate them into vapor! When ministers of the gospel, supposedly having received a fair education supplemented by a few years in a theological college, stand up in their pulpits and put forward such rot as truth, and the "evangelists" use the same to scare the susceptible at revivals, their hearers are excusable if they run after any old thing that comes along, claiming divine authority. Here lies the secret of the success of such arrant humbugs and insane cranks as Dowie. The matter with Rev. Freeman is that he is ignorant. If he had studied the nature of the sun thoroughly, he would have known better than to speak himself an ignoramus.

He obtained a smattering of knowledge, and at once made theological use of it.

The trouble with his hearers, that they patiently receive such nonsense as truth, is that they are more ignorant than their pastor.

Talk about the necessity of Pratt Institutes to educate spiritual speakers! A few such would be highly beneficial in raising the standard of intelligence of the college bred church exponents.

All that Rev Freeman knows about the sun spots he has gathered from some sensational newspaper article, written by a penny-a-liner, who evolved a good share from imagination.

Darwin and Wallace labored their life-time in the study of evolution. Any preacher at a little church at a county four corners, can obliterate the whole theory, and prove God began making the universe early Monday morning and finished the job Saturday night, pronounced it O. K., and rested up on Sunday!

And the most deplorable part of the affair is that his church members are so saturated with superstition, that although they know better, will congratulate each other in the rare gifts of learning and eloquence of their seven-by-nine minister.

Mission Work.

W. A. Spicer, secretary of the foreign missions of the Seventh Day Adventists, inadvertently gave a glimpse, an inside view, of the facts in mission work. He has resided in India several years, and speaks from knowledge. He says:

"The heathen man is not necessarily ignorant. In the universities of India are men learning western ideas, western customs, but still they cling to their idols. The customs of the country are such that the old religious teaching is upheld long after the men know there is doubt as to the truths. After the Hindoo is baptized even his mother cannot take a glass of water from his hand, believing thereby she would be polluted."

It has been so constantly repeated, that the heathen were poor, benighted souls, ignorant and brutal, that it passes unquestioned when the contribution box for heathen missions comes round.

Is it conferring a favor on a people to convert them to a religion, which causes such absolute separation of nearest relatives, and breaks up all the old customs of domestic life? What if missionaries from India should attempt the same work in this country?

Helen Gould's Bible Prizes.

Resulting from the ban of the Roman Catholic church placed by the Rev. T. J. Earley on her class of 300 girls at Lynd-hurst, Miss Helen Gould has offered $750 in prizes to be awarded for the best essays on the double topic, "The Origin and the History of the Version of the Bible Approved By the Roman Catholic Church" and "The Origin and History of the American Revised Version of the English Bible."

As set forth by the Milwaukee Free Press, this competition will be open to the world, and the offer is made through the bible teachers' training school, organized by the regents of the University of the State of New York.

Four hundred dollars will be given the writer of the best essay, $250 for the second best, and $100 for the third.

Ever since she was a child Miss Gould has had a sewing class in Lynd-hurst. At an annual party given the class by Miss Gould a few weeks ago sandwiches were served. As it happened to be on Friday, the Rev. Father Earley was much disturbed, because children of Roman Catholic families were permitted to break the rule of the church relating to the eating of meat.

Notice was served on the clergyman that in future scriptures would be read before the class, and attention was called to this by Miss Gould, who wrote

"The church you represent discourages the reading of scriptures or the Bible."

Father Earley replied, denying the allegation, but adding: "But the Roman Catholic church does object to reading the Protestant version, which goes back only to the days of Henry VIII. of England, and was then got up for obvious reasons."

Miss Gould now adds another word to the controversy by writing through her secretary to Dr. W. W. White, president of the Bible Teachers' School: "It is strange that any one acquainted with ordinary facts in history could make such a statement concerning the versions of the Bible."

So Miss Gould has decided to offer prizes for the best essays regarding the origin and history of the two versions of the Bible.

Dr. White expressed the opinion that the offer made by Miss Gould would do more to stimulate the study of the Bible than any other thing that has happened in recent years.

"In case Roman Catholics will consent to take part in the contest," said Dr. White, "their members certainly will be added to the committee.

"It is my idea the length of the essays should be limited to 5,000 words. The conditions of the contest will be made public as soon as possible."

Here is an opportunity for some distinguished Spiritualist to gain renown by winning a prize of $400. A work of this kind will be greatly in demand.

Miss Gould is a lady with a national reputation. She is a philanthropist at heart, and in an unpretentious manner is doing a vast amount of good.

Outgrown the Old Idea of Hell.

By no means. It is constantly repeated that with the coming of greater enlightenment the old, dark and damnable ideas of future punishment were outgrown and would never more arise.

It appears that the Catholics hold to the old belief, with unchanging tenacity. The Rt. Reverend Challoner has a book just out in which he submits some points of good Catholicism. This is the consoling picture he draws of the fate of the damned:

"Ah, what a gloomy misery it must then be to be chained down to a bed of fire and brimstone, not for ten years, nor for ten thousand times ten, but for as many hundred thousand millions of ages as there are drops of water in the ocean, atoms in the air, or in a word, for an immense eternity. * * * Nor shall the length of time inure these wretches to the evils which they suffer, so as to make them the more supportable * * * but after millions of ages, their torments shall be as fresh and their feelings of them the same as on the first day."

And then swelling with consciousness of his greatness he exclaims:

"How much we are indebted to God for having called us to the true faith, preferable to so many millions whom he has left behind in darkness and in the shadows of death."

What is the purpose of all this indescribable torture? Punishment is to deter from crime, or to reform the criminal. Here there is no thought of reform. It has one only object, to gratify the vindictive cruelty of the merciless tyrant who supposedly sits on the throne of the universe! It gives the priests the means of holding the minds of men in the thrall of superstition, and abject slavery.

And for what crime are these spirits given immortality for the purpose that their torture may be everlasting? They did not say they believed the impossible. They know more than the priests. They were honest and true to their convictions. Giordano Bruno is there, because he taught that there were more worlds in space than this earth; Socrates and Plato and all the ancient philosophers, because they lived before Christ made the atoning sacrifice, or if later did not accept it; all the scientific men, and thinkers, leaders in thought, under anathema of the church, on all this august assembly God is wreaking his unquenchable vengeance!

And the saved! They who are shouting his praise, and exclaiming at his merciful justice in not making hell any worse!

LAST SUMMER AND NEXT.

The rose that bloomed last summer is dead,
Last summer is over-past;
The songs have been sung, the tears have been shed,
And have vanished and gone with the things that have fled;
No matter, dear, if love only last.

The rose that is budding will bloom some day,
Another summer is near;
Tears may be bitter, but songs will be gay,
We fear not to meet whatever we may,
If love will stay with us, dear.

A GIRL SEES HEAVEN IN HER TRANCES.

Mary Kidder, Aged Fourteen, Astonishes Michigan City by Revelations—Brings Word of the Dead—Gives Correct Information Concerning Persons Whom She Never Saw—Angels Move Without Wings—Additional Facts.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—Mary A. Kidder, aged fourteen, has startled this city by her revelations of celestial regions.

Hundreds of people have visited the girl at her home in the southeastern part of the city and have been wrought to a state of excitement by messages from the dead and revelations of the future.

The girl falls into one to three trances a day, during which time, she says, she is in heaven, where angels flock about her and reveal to her the past and the future. Miss Kidder has startled persons by describing things that happened fifty years ago. She tells of departed persons who were unknown to her, and brings messages to the living. Her descriptions of heaven and the inhabitants of the celestial region are graphic. She foretells the details of her own death and that of her father and mother. In an interview recently she said: "I can't tell just what the sensation is like; I can't tell when the trance is coming. It just strikes me suddenly. I lose control of my body and seem to be carried up—up—to an almost unimaginable height.

"The air seems soft and fans my face. I fly through the clouds and then suddenly I know I am in heaven. About me stretches a great city, but there are no houses nor streets. Beautiful white-robed angels are singing and talking and sailing through the air. I am flashed through two immense, white, pearly gates, and then the whole beauty of the place is before me.

Angels Have No Wings.

"Colors of every hue and description and the most beautiful music I ever heard are on every side. I seem to know all the persons there and they come to me and talk. It all seems so strange to me. The angels tell me their names and when I come back here and repeat them and describe what I have seen, I find the living relatives of the angels here and they look at me and wonder.

"No words can describe what heaven really is. I try to cry out my joy, but find I can move neither hand nor foot. One of the spirits told me that when I died I would be free to move just as they do. I cannot understand how the angels pass through the air. They have no wings, nor do they walk. They just seem to be taken through the air in any direction they wish to go."

To Mrs. Addie Hess, whom neither girl nor her family had ever seen, she described and gave the names of the woman's husband, Cyrus Hess, and several relatives, dead for years.

To Mrs. Edward G. Russell, she described and named her brother, George Hartman, who died forty years ago and never saw Kalamazoo. She also named and described and gave messages from two children of Mrs. Russell. One son, Victor, died in Pennsylvania fifteen years ago and the other, Carlton Russell, died ten years ago.

To Mrs. Mary Pressable she named and described a mother dead twenty-five years, told of a daughter and husband dead ten and twenty years respectively, and named and described several other members of the Pressable family.

Messages From the Dead.

Mrs. A. Kamp, of No. 814 First street, a total stranger, was told of her husband's mother, who died thirty-two years ago. Her name and description were given. The girl also named and described two children of Mrs. Kamp and conveyed messages from them.

Mary has been suffering from spinal and nervous trouble for some time. In July curvature of the spine developed. Dr. Frederick Shillito attended the girl and incased the body in a plaster cast. One day recently the cast was removed and an hour later the girl's body became rigid, her eyes dilated and the most strenuous efforts failed to arouse her.

"The girl is in a very peculiar mental condition," said Dr. Shillito. "She has what is called catalepsy, and when in that condition people often have such peculiar ideas and dreams. I have seen her in this condition and know of her telling persons who come to the house of their relatives dead for years. Whether all that she says is true or not, of course I cannot say.

"The case is a very unusual one, in which I am very much interested. In a cataleptic state the most developed moral emotions generally dominate. The girl is known to have always been of a very religious turn of mind, and her visions of heaven and the angels may be accounted for in this way. When the girl awakens she generally has the appearance of waking from a sleep. While she suffers with catalepsy her hands remain stretched rigid and straight toward heaven."

SHE HAD A VISION.

"I have just had a vision," said Mrs. J. M. Willey, one day lately, as she awakened suddenly from a restless sleep, at Portland, Oregon. For months she had suffered from tuberculosis. The best physicians had been employed, and everything possible had been done to restore her to health, but for the past few weeks the doctors have expected the end to come at any time.

Two weeks ago her little 4-year-old daughter, Mary, was taken dangerously ill with spinal meningitis. As the mother awakened last Wednesday, a strange light was in her eyes, and her wasted features looked brighter. She knew that she might pass away at any time, but she called her husband to her side.

"I will not go now," she said. "I will wait for Mary. Mary and I will soon go together."

Late Sunday night the child closed its eyes forever, and early yesterday morning the mother's soul passed away.

Since Wednesday the mother has told her friends that she was going with her child.

Sunday evening all was quiet in the sickroom, when the mother's voice aroused them.

"Wait, Mary; I'm going with you," she said, softly, as she attempted to raise herself and look at the child. Even at that moment the child's life must have passed away, for a little later its body was found to be cold and lifeless.

"I will soon join Mary," she told her husband, as she called him to her side. All through the night she grew weaker and weaker, and died quietly about 7 o'clock yesterday morning.

OBSESSION ASSUMED TO BE A FIXED FACT.

I am more than gratified as to the stand you have taken in giving to the world the truths of not only the results of hypnotism, but the facts concerning the character of the spirits who have the knowledge and power to use hypnotism, either for good or evil purposes, the results ever depending upon the character and design of the user. Bread is life-sustaining, but I could be smothered with it. Water is a necessity, but I could be drowned with it, and so with every useful thing; it can be made to serve as a blessing, or a curse.

I have been sadly touched by the condition of the obsessed lady referred to in your issue of Dec. 5, on page three, under the heading, "A Most Pitiable Case," wherein the writer quotes from a letter received from a husband regarding how his wife was controlled by a spirit assuming to be Abraham Lincoln, but has now been so hypnotized as to become insane. I desire the address of that husband and wife, as I have no doubt she can be relieved by Dr. Lane, of Boston, for I know of a lady he took from the insane asylum who is to-day a well woman in Boston.

I went to see the lady who was advertised in The Progressive Thinker as desiring help, on Rhodes avenue, and found her removed to an orthodox home confined to her bed, deadening her sufferings with opiates, hearing unkind, threatening voices constantly, driving her insane.

In the 17th chapter of your premium book, "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," the author described entities that draw their sustenance from the nerve fluids of the sensitives to whom they attach themselves by a magnetic chain after remaining in their atmosphere for too long a time, and become a fixed adhering entity. This statement has been verified by this same Dr. Lane, of Boston, who by destroying this magnetic attachment of the spirit, frees the sensitive of its presence and power and restores to reason and health. In the case of this lady I went to see, who was confined to her bed, my guides diagnosed her case as one of internal obsession, or where the spirits were drawing the nerve fluid from the Solar plexus and cerebellum. Such being a possible fact, it is time our healers and suffering humanity should know of such a law. My attention having been called to this fact, I have asked of intelligent spirits if such could be the case and was told that it could. Should you be pleased to use any of the above statements, please sign me as an INVESTIGATOR OF TRUTH.

Chicago, Ill.

HE SEPARATES THE SOUL FROM THE BODY

Dr. Albert Sarak Count de Dos Orientalist, who recently attracted notice at the Planters' Hotel, St. Louis, has created considerable discussion in Washington, D. C., by some of his wonderful feats.

Dr. De Sarak, who is about fifty years of age, says his father was a Thibetan and his mother a French marquise. As a child he declares he was initiated into the mysteries of his strange faith, and now he claims to be in constant communication with his superior, the Grand Llama.

The theory of reincarnation, one of the main points in the religion—if it can be so-called—of which he is an exponent, he believes, will soon be recognized by all people. He claims to be a sort of missionary, and as such has visited European capitals and many of the cites of South America.

Separates Soul and Body.

He lays claim to the power of dispatching his spirit to the astral plane, thus allowing him to read the future. This alleged separation of the soul from the body is performed while in a sort of trance, the air of the room being made heavy with incense and filled with strains of soft music. It is an exemplification, he says, of the power of mind over matter, concentration of thought being the motive power.

Every night, he says, his soul visits the mysterious city of Lhassa, whose sacred precincts no foreigner has ever penetrated, it is said, and talks with the masters of his faith.

For those who go to consult him De Sarak goes into this trance-like state and while apparently unconscious tells them of their future. At these times his voice seems to come from a long distance and his speech is slow and distinct. He is a master of fourteen languages, but his English is so imperfect that he prefers to use French or Spanish when giving these seances.

Puzzled French Scientists.

At a demonstration in Paris several years ago he says he baffled the French scientists who came expecting to find him either a clever hypnotist or a charlatan. He explained to them, he says that "vital force" could be consciously directed by one who understood it. To prove his statement he asked one of the most skeptical professors to come forward and hold above his head what was admitted to be a perfect piece of plate glass about two feet square.

De Sarak stood several feet away, he says, and concentrated his mind upon the glass, which in a very few minutes broke into a thousand pieces in the professor's hands!

At this same meeting he says he hypnotized and made rigid a huge cobra that crawled out of the cage and came toward him at a word of command.

Beautiful Spanish Wife.

Those who receive invitations to his house for one of the occasional "evenings" are greeted by his Spanish wife. When her husband appears she introduces him and then devotes herself to the guests until he is ready to talk to them of his belief.

At all these affairs De Sarak wears a long robe of white satin, heavily embroidered with gold, and white satin turban, a costume which contrasts effectively with his black hair and beard. After his talk he goes into the state in which he says he divines the thoughts of those present and reads the future. He says that his inner vision knows no barriers, and he usually asks to be blindfolded in order to "prove" to the unbelievers that there is no trick.

Paints Blindfolded.

He once played a game of dominoes in which the usual rules of the game were observed, and had not the occultist read aloud the numbers of the dominoes before touching them and turning them over, there would have been a strong suspicion that he was playing the game haphazard. At the end of the game he turned to a guest to whom he had previously given a folded slip of paper. The guest passed the paper about the room and every one read the score of the game.

"I read the outcome in the astral plane," said De Sarak.

Later the same evening, the doctor, still blindfolded, painted a moonlight scene on a canvas 18x36 inches. His hand was steady, and not once did the brush he held slip off the edge. In eight minutes the work was finished and presented to one of the guests.

Light From "Vital Force."

Then he lit a cigarette with the "vital force." One of the men held the cigarette in an ordinary drinking glass at some distance from the doctor. He concentrated himself on it, and after several moments a tiny flame sprung from the end, and it burned steadily.

The phase of his belief, however, which has caused the most comment and is the least "occult," is his faith in what he believes is to be the unusual destiny of his child, the little 5-year-old Augustus.

Doctor De Sarak says that the soul of an adept has been reincarnated in the child, and that a leader of the people is growing in him.

The child is an exceptionally beautiful and winning boy, with nothing of the prodigy about him unless it be his voice, which is full and exquisite.

Augustus occupies the place of honor at each of the meetings and banquets, and he is always in the company of either his mother or father, even when asleep.

The Public Schools.

President Eliot, of Harvard, in an article in the "Atlantic," on the public schools of the United States, does not make religious instruction one of the objects of our school system. It is to teach:

"Family love, respect for law and public order, love of freedom and reverence for truth and righteousness."

This is the true, broad, American idea on which the public schools rest. That it remains undisturbed on this basis should be the undiverted effort of every one calling himself an American citizen, for here is the only safeguard to free institutions.

But the Catholic church thinks differently. It believes religious instruction should be first, and better the child grow into a man ignorant of everything else, rather than not be fully instructed in the precepts of its religion. For this end, it has established nearly 4,000 parochial schools, with a million of pupils. Not that the public schools do not give able instruction, for they are far better than the parochial, but they are godless, and to have the Catholic creed taught the children, the great expense is incurred by the parents at the command of the priests.

The New York Sun prophetically says the future "becomes a very serious question for political discussion."

Most assuredly it will, for the great power of the press is being utilized, and some of the leading journals, controlled by Catholic influence, or owned by members of the church, have began a crusade of abuse, thereby to undermine public confidence and pave the way to the bold assertion of their rights to share the public school funds.

Judaism and Christianity.

The difference between Judaism and Christianity was discussed by Dr. Emil G. Hirsch before his congregation in Temple Israel, recently, showing why the Jew cannot change his Judaism for Christianity. He said:

"Religion is a force to make men better in the world to-day. The world is a stage and we are the actors. God is the stage manager. We must fill it with melody or discord. We must consecrate it not to a future world, but to present good. War and pain are from within and we, in this world, must live out the best there is in us."

"With the Christians the most of you would say religion is a method to win the favor of God, a scheme of salvation. For most men religion emphasizes other worldliness.

"For the Jew immortality is of no importance. We have no right to affirm or deny it. Judaism tries to give men a true understanding of this life. Judaism is this worldliness.

"I am well aware that this has been much forgotten. Some of my colleagues are more at home in the heavenly Jerusalem than they are in the streets of Chicago. They act as agents and sell tickets to the heavenly Jerusalem so that all you have to do is to tear off the coupons from station to station.

Christianity starts with a wrong assumption. Suffering and sin are not interchangeable terms. We must be worthy, but we need not be happy in the ordinary sense. The standard is within, that of self-respect. The usual attitude makes God say: 'In this world you have suffered and have been bad, therefore, you shall get it worse in the next.' Where is the justice in this?

"By this idea men make God a big policeman, with candles in one pocket and horrid bitter medicine in the other. To the good folk he hands out sweet chocolates, and makes the bad ones take the horrid, bitter medicine.

"A good act done because you expect a reward loses its goodness. Restraining from committing a crime to keep out of the penitentiary is not an indication of your moral strength, but just the opposite. A good deed is its own reward. Therefore, Judaism has never made another world."

VAIN WARFARE.

Attempts Made Fifty Years Ago to Wipe Out Spiritualism.

The attempts in a few years last past by wise men to explain away or account for spirit manifestations on other than the spiritual hypothesis, are no better than similar efforts made by wiseacres fifty years ago. All such attempts are failures, for they fail to fit the facts. Some folks thought the wise professors of that time (about 1853) had "explained all about the raps, and killed Spiritualism." Yet the opposition brought to bear against it did not retard its progress, nor win back its converts from their faith.

For purposes of comparison I will quote an extract from the History of Modern American Spiritualism—p. 121.

"Leaving all the small fry to the ignominy which has long since swept over their names, let us glance briefly at the efforts of those whose position in society entitled the world to expect from them something at least worthy of their names. To commence with those who assume to be the highest literary and scientific authorities on this subject, let us notice the work of Dr. C. C. Rogers, of Boston, who filled a volume of what he called 'The Philosophy of Mysterious Agents, Human and Mundane.' In strict accordance with the title of his work, Dr. Rogers has favored us with a treatise so eminently mysterious that the only comprehensible idea we can glean from it is, that though the manifestations do actually occur, nevertheless they are not the work of spirits.

"Still, as somebody or something must be answerable for that power which had proceeded from turning a table to the turning upside down of a continent, the Doctor gravely enunciates a theory which lays the whole burden of the manifestations on the cerebrum, which is supposed somehow to act somewhat in the way described by one of his newspaper eulogists in a criticism on his work which reads as follows: 'He said that he thought that the revelations were not spiritual, but a cerebral automatic movement, depending for its development upon the idiosyncratic temperament of each individual, inspired through the spinal centres by a mundane process of electrized vitality acting upon every molecule of the system.'

As this sentence includes a quotation from Dr. Rogers' book—in fact, claims to be a compendious definition of its meaning—it implies on the part of the writer a condition of lucidity to which few persons besides the Boston editor could arrive after attentively perusing the book. As an example of the effect produced by this occult work on less enlightened journalists, we quote a second criticism, which appeared in the Cincinnati Commercial:

"'The only true and legitimate manner of accounting for the taps is the physiological defect of the membranous system. The obtuseness of the abdominal indicator causes the cartilaginous compressor to coagulate into the diaphragm and depress the duodenum into the flandango. Now if the taps were caused by the vogation of the electricity from the extremities, the tympanum would also dissolve into spiritual sinctum and the olfactory ossificator would ferment and become identical with the pigmentum.

"'A friend of ours who graduated with distinguished honors at one of the northern universities, says that he must dissent in toto from the idea that the depression of the duodenum into the flandango could by any possibility cause the olfactory ossificator to ferment, and become identical with the pigmentum. He says the thing cannot be done; and after quoting several learned authors on the subject, winds up the argument by the remark: "The vibratory motion communicated to the tunica albugenia by the parturition of the alveolar process, effectually disintegrates the cerebellum, and predisposes the patient to preturnatural distension of the auricular membraneous orifice, in which case the rappings become painfully and distinctly audible."

"'Now, whether this is, or is not so, we will not undertake to say, but will leave the whole matter in the hands of the learned savans, in the full confidence that little can be added to the above triumph and incontrovertible exposition.'

"As if to compensate for the undue share which Dr. Rogers assigned to the cerebrum in turning the world upside down, Dr. Dods, another learned philosopher, came to the rescue, with a theory of equal lucidity, which accounted for all the mischief, by the automatic action of the cerebellum; both gentlemen agreed that the nerve centeres had something to do with it, but the particular way in which they acted, whether in conjunction with the cerebrum or the cerebellum, was precisely what constituted the cream of the mystery, and what neither of the learned doctors could explain.

"Unfortunately for the success of the back-brain theory of Dr. Dods, just as it was midway in its career, and seemed likely to divide the honors with the front brain theory of Dr. Rogers, the cerebellum advocate himself became a convert to Spiritualism, and by aid of his accomplished daughter, Miss Jennie Dods, a medium of fine oratorical capacity, carried into the fold of the spiritual church a much larger number of converts than his 'back brain' theory had ever found readers."

MY MOTHER OVER THERE.

I can feel but little sadness when I think of passing o'er,
For the thinking brings a vision of a bright celestial shore,
But the vision that relieves me of all worriment and care
Is the ever-present knowledge that my mother's over there.

I am conscious of her spirit at the threshold now and then,
And I feel that she is waiting in some green and flow'ry glen
For her children, with her spirit full of brightness, pure and fair,
And I trouble not at going, for my mother's over there.

She once called me to existence from the great Eternal Whole,
And I often hear her calling to her spirit home my soul,
And I know no need of fearing or for drooping in despair,
'Tis a road that all must travel, and my mother's over there.

I can look across the chasm and it seems a narrow span,
For the meadows and the forests I can very plainly scan,
And I know without this body I shall rise upon the air,
And shall find the precious spirit of my mother over there.

Card From Moses Hull.

Dear Brother Francis:—Please allow me through The Progressive Thinker to thank you and all the friends for what you and they have done for me. It was entirely unexpected and therefore the more joyfully received. I am now in Madison, Wis., under the treatment of Dr. Vance, who is and has been, for over twenty years a specialist in treating such cases as mine. I have already taken three treatments, with beneficial results. The Doctor promises to bring me out all right, and that within thirty days, and with no other surgical operation than the opening of about eight internal tumors. Of course he injects healing medicine into them. They are of such a nature that he can only puncture one each day.

Three of the worst and most malignant of them have already been punctured; the operation, especially of the first one, was a little severe, but I almost immediately felt a soothing relief. The Doctor claims that many of these ulcers have been of long standing, and have been the cause of much of my other physical suffering.

I am happy in the belief that I am to be able to report for duty before the year is out, and that perhaps my best work is yet in the future. It costs money to patronize these specialists, but I believe it is money well invested. I am obliged to board at a hotel, the Avenue Hotel, near the Doctor's office. If sound health is gained, I shall be happy.

I now have the promise that I can go home next Saturday, the 12th, to speak to our little church on Sunday night. After that the Doctor says if I will visit him twice a week that will be sufficient.

I took my pen more to thank you and the friends for what has been done for me than any thing else. I have received many kind and sympathetic letters, several of which contained from one to five dollars; two of them had $10, and one, signed Santa Claus, contained $50. That letter decided me to come here at an expense of about $100. I have received in all just about that much.

I thank all for their kind words, and for their donations. I am not, and never have been a beggar, and I propose to pay all this back; perhaps not to the kind friends who donated it, but to those who need it more. Again thanking all of my good friends, I am, as ever,

MOSES HULL.

DREAD SPECTRE, DEATH, DO PAUSE

Hold on! Do pause! Thou cruel monitor, desist!
Lay not thy sacrilegious hand on Leo's form,
On him who ruled well-nigh the world,
Whose very nod was law;
Who held within his hands the nations' weal and woe;
Whom crowned heads humbly sought,
Whom learned men thought wise,
Who like a very god does sit, in erming garb,
On more than kingly throne—
Dispensing blessings or an awful doom,
Freedom or chains, aye, giving life or death—
Dost thou not see; his subjects all do bow
At holy shrines and do beseech
The god of life for length of Leo's days?
Dost thou not know
He is the ruling deputy of God, the chosen one of earth
On whom all powers are conferred
Whose wisdom is divine, who does not, can not, err,
Whose wishes must be law to every one,
Then go thou hence, nor dare lay low
The aid, the deputy, the regent of the king of kings.
Be gone!

Death to Man.

And hast thou done, well meaning silly man, or knave?
Hast not yet learned, I know no difference in men?
My hand, unwelcome though it be does fall
Where nature's law demands.
To me thy creeds are but the foibles of thy mind.
The God, whose laws I do obey, does need no aid.
Ill were it for the world, for man,
If He, who rules the universe, did need
An aid, a helper such as Man, poor, feeble, puny Man.
Oh, fools or knaves, those who profess or think,
God needs Man's help to work out His own will!
Insult not, slim, tiny God, who rules
Ten thousand million worlds like this Without thy aid, and shaped His plans
Vast cycles ere the stars did sing of fair Earth's joyous birth.
As for myself, blind Man, where wouldst thou be
If I were not, or being, would I list
To mortals' whims and prayers?
I come at His behest, who knows no will but His,
Who needs no aid,
Whose changeless laws do never err nor swerve,
And are unmindful of thy prayers or sighs,
Thy curses or thy praise.
Yon man in papal garb is but a man like thou,
Subject to nature's laws, like all mankind.
And dost thou think, if God appointed him His aid,
He would thus let him die?
Oh, arrogance of finite Man, to thus assume
A joint rule with our God—the everlasting and Unknown!
Trice well it is that I such men lay low,
Thus teach a lesson to mankind—God favors none,
All are alike to Him, all men are born of earth
And must return thereto—their bodies, all, decay.

Spiritual or Psychic Phenomena: Their Import; and Are They Natural or Supernatural?

A Discourse Given through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Chicago, Sunday, November 15, 1903.

We included the word "Psychic" in the subject of our discourse in deference to people who do not like to use the word spirit or spiritual. Psychic is the genteel and scientific name of Harvard and Columbia professors and the Psychic Research Society, for spiritual things. The name you knew as mediumship is now considered a psychic gift, and mediums give "psychic readings" and are psychics instead of being just plain mediums for spiritual manifestations, or those endowed with spiritual gifts.

Now there are any number of terms applied to a movement that has its exclusive origin, as far as the modern period is concerned, in what are known as the manifestations of Modern Spiritualism. But you are not obliged to accept it because it is true.

Many things that occur to-day have occurred for the last fifty-five or fifty-six years under the term of Modern Spiritualism and in the active expressions of mediumship, but which are now called psychic, psychic research, telepathy, mind-reading, and everything else excepting the thing they really are.

"Now brethren, concerning spiritual gifts I would not have you ignorant." Then Paul proceeds, after the clear manner of his logic, to discuss what those gifts are, to explain their operation and to give advice concerning them. Every sentence of that chapter on spiritual gifts applies now and has applied to the manifestations of Spiritualism for the last fifty-six years. Every sentence applies to what are known as psychic gifts by those who have found some back stairs or other back entrance to this great spiritual rotunda; they not choosing to enter by the plain, simple, open entrance of Spiritualism.

Many have gone to India to find it in "adeptship," or have found it in a very pervented statement by Madam Blavatsky, and very much deceived statements by Mr. Sinnett, Mr. Olcott and others. Real adeptship is not known in western countries at all. Such representatives of Oriental religions, the Buddhists, Brahmins and Jainists and others as attended the Parliament of Religions in this city in 1893, were not the recluses and adepts, but rather the teachers and philosophers of the Eastern thought who are permitted to mingle with the outward world, and representatives of the "Brahmo-Somaj," the reform religion of India, which may teach of the philosophy of the sacred orders, but the real adepts, the true Yogas, cannot, under those orders, ever mingle with the outer world.

No one has ever seen a "mahatma." There was a very questionable account of the reception of a message from a mahatma by Madam Blavatsky which afterwards proved to have been written by one of Madam Blavatsky's own followers.

We do not question the existence in the world of a certain number of people who live apart from the world, who never mingle with the world, whose gifts and manifestations have never been exhibited to the world, and who retain, by the law of spiritual succession the gifts of the spirit which have thus been unfolded and handed down from generation to generation. But that any one can teach you to be a Yoga or Adept, that anyone can teach you to have independent psychic gifts, that anyone can unfold in you that which shall enable you to perceive the spirit realm without the action of the impinging spiritual realm upon you is not true.

None of the recipients of the manifestations called Modern Spiritualism and similar manifestations in previous days ever perceived these gifts of the spirit, or this unfolding of spiritual power excepting by the aid of spirit intelligences. We will tell you why. There is not anything in the universe that is independent of the thing which is like unto itself. Here is a tree, it is planted in the sod, it grows, the sunshine brings tint and color and it becomes the flower, that yields its own fruitage again. That tree is not independent; it does not go away and yield its fruitage somewhere alone; it does not say to people, "I will tell how to grow without being planted, without having any air, or any water, or any sunshine or any of the conditions necessary for other trees." If that tree responds to those conditions or grows without the usual planting, it is supernatural. In other words, it does not conform to the usual laws of nature. A Yoga, a Mahatma or Adept or anyone (as has been said they are known to do), can make a plant grow in twenty minutes before the eyes of the spectators, which ordinarily require many weeks or months to become perfected, that is the supernatural way.

Many people with a philosophic turn of mind, especially materialists, object to the term supernatural, and yet they will not include in their "nature," their term "natural law" any of these spiritual operations as things that really occur. If material science does not have any place for them in natural law, then we will have the word supernatural to designate them.

We do not object to the word supernatural, but we do object to Hudson's underground process of "sub-consciousness," because that means something beneath, rather inferior. But supernatural is that which is beyond the ordinary operation of the laws of nature, and is governed by direct intelligence. In other words, supernatural would mean that which for the time being transcends, or sets aside the ordinary processes of nature, of the nature that is governed by what is called natural law. We think it one of the most intelligent words to use. It conveys precisely the meaning intended. Spiritual intelligence, for instance, is able to set aside the ordinary action of the laws of gravitation without any of the usual or mundane agencies, by a purely spiritual process, and is able in that way to raise tables and chairs, make music, levitate bodies, persons and carry them some distance through the air. That is supernatural; it is the intervention of the usual laws of nature by a specific intelligence for the purpose of manifestation.

When people taboo the word supernatural it is because they reject the whole subject pertaining to the spirit, or wish to approach it by another method.

Now we have not the slightest objection to the Psychic Research Society taking Mrs. Piper and the moment she is in their seance room, or room of investigation calling her a "sensitive" instead of a medium. But she was a medium before she went in there, and she did precisely the same thing for these scientific gentlemen that she had for thousands of others before, when as a medium she gave the messages of spirit intelligences. Of course they had to note the time she arrived, to feel her pulse, to take her respirations, probably her temperature; they had to try to determine the action of her brain while she was in an unconscious condition to see if her intelligence acted upon her brain and if not, who used it. This is proper, because every scientific mind must note every external detail in order to arrive at the truth. Then these professors and scientific men at last declared, that there was another intelligence besides Mrs. Piper expressing itself through her organism. But this did not express that the way they had arrived at that knowledge by any scientific process was any more certain than the method by which others have arrived at it; by the direct message and common sense.

When a message is received by one purporting to come from a friend and bears all the evidences of the personality it is a good deal easier to accept that evidence than it is to go around through hypothetical "scientific" by-ways to explain it; by "sub-consciousness" or some operation of "natural law" not yet known.

The word "telepathy" was never dreamed of until persons received messages from their friends in this and the other world through the intervention of spirit intelligences. No one ever thought of endeavoring to account for a spirit-message by telepathy, because the word was not known. It has come into existence like all the other terms: through the supposed necessity of science in attempting to explain by indirect methods that which is within itself a direct explanation.

The fact that spiritual intelligences exist, that their influence impinges upon this world and, under certain conditions, not known to human beings, those intelligences can manifest is now established, and has always been a part of the knowledge of the world. It has been known, however, under religious aspects, and these have been questioned both by theological dogmatists and people who have pursued the subject solely from the standpoint of scientific investigation. But the common consent of humanity, the recorded history of the world, the facts that have never wholly been lost sight of, have never wholly ceased to exist, and the fact that in the last fifty-six years they have assumed the magnitude of a great, world-wide movement, that not only thousands but millions of people have from the standpoint of this knowledge direct communion with spiritual beings, proves that it is a subject that belongs to legitimate human inquiry. That it is a subject that people must give heed to whether they will or no; and that in the present day to deny the facts or substitute another theory for the real solution is to show one's ignorance or dogmatism. For only the ignorant will deny the facts, and only the dogmatic will arrive at any other conclusion than the facts themselves reveal.

Now spiritual manifestations are not something that was accidentally discovered by a man of science while making an experiment in his laboratory. They are not something that came seemingly by such an "accident" as to require a mundane explanation. The explanation inheres in the manifestations: i. e., there never has been a manifestation, whether the moving of physical bodies, response by rappings or tippings to the calling the alphabet, which is a signal or sign for receiving messages, whether by automatic writing, whether by impression, automatic, inspirational or trance speaking, but what has contained its own explanation. The message through whatever form of manifestation has always declared, that it came from a disembodied human spirit or what some scientific—or pseudo-scientific people—would prefer to call "decarnated" human spirit. The evidences of personality in these messages as a rule, making allowance for whatever interruption there might be in the methods of their production, are as great an evidence of personality as when you receive a message by telegraph, or a message by the telephone, or any other message in which you do not actually see the person sending the message. Consequently the message has always explained the message.

The main point is not "how do you do these things?" But, "I do them," "I am here to tell you that I am alive;" I am such and such a personality." Similar manifestations do not occur under any other circumstances than that of mediumship. There are no manifestations of this kind occurring promiscuously that require explanation. They are always prompted from the other side of life. They always come because of some spirit intelligence, not always because people seek them. They are not created by people seeking them. There is no process known to present human intelligence by which any imitation of these manifestations can be made by any known science without adequate physical cause. Yet sounds do occur, objects are moved, forms appear, music is heard, and human brains and human organisms are governed by these intelligences, which universally claim to be departed spirits.

Under these circumstances, for the Psychic Research Society to take thirty-five or forty years to carefully investigate the subject, to go over the old ground gone over years ago by Prof. Hare, Prof. Wallace, Prof. Varley, Prof. Crookes and others, and arrive at the solemn conclusion that the manifestations came from an outside spirit power, is like some one telling you that the first day of this last week was Sunday.

You understand, we appreciate fully the condition of scientific minds that mean to investigate fairly, that wish to know, to commence de novo, as if there had never been anything said about these things before in the world; the minds that reject the authority of inspiration or theology and determine to arrive at results by a purely intellectual process. Yet in all cases where that attempt has been made and sincerely and successfully followed, the results have led such men as Prof. Robert Hare, Prof. J. J. Mapes, Prof. William Denton, Prof. Varley, Dr. Wallace, Sir William Crookes, and other similar minds to the one conclusion; that of spirit existence, and the origin of the manifestations as coming from the spirit side of life.

In Mr. Meyers', elaborate and extensively published posthumous work containing the results of the Psychic Research Society's investigations for the last 25 years, he distinctly says, that a man should be very modest in offering theories concerning a movement that had its origin on the other side of life.

You will readily understand, that all these manifestations now called "psychic" are manifestations within a realm that has been ignored or only approached through the permitted avenues of theological inquiry, which are very limited, and only to be accepted in past time, but not the present time; a realm that has been utterly ignored in thought of material science. It is very wise that the material scientist does not claim to know anything about this realm; but the ignorant accept that negation as the attested belief that there is no such realm. If there is no such realm, then of course the whole history of the human race is a falsehood; and the most stupendous falsehood of all is, that nature for the first time has stultified herself; has given to man not only the faculty of thinking of such a realm, but of believing it, and of believing that he has knowledge of it. Of course this would be such a fraud as nature has never perpetrated, and as you know she has not perpetrated in this instance.

You may give, personally perhaps, little credence to the manifestations recorded in the Old Testament, to the miracles wrought under the influence of spiritual gifts that Christianity brought. But, when you find them to be paralleled among all people of the earth; when you find that to-day there are similar manifestations, you become a most intelligent student of the recorded history of the Bible. You are not accepting them upon authority, but upon knowledge. You understand how Jesus by the power of the spirit walked upon the water. How Peter was released from prison; how the apostles healed the sick; how the various gifts of the spirit were exercised in those days. And these spiritual gifts are exercised to-day.

The great spiritual wave is in itself an evidence. In the midst of the material-loving, hero and idol-worshiping Greeks, Socrates appeared with the voice pleading for immortality and his guardian spirit showing him the way. While his great—greater—student, Plato, revolutionized the Grecian and old-world philosophy, until now we are only beginning to understand Plato. In the midst of idolatrous worshiping, and external serving in the temples the ancients received the messages of the oracles: the tutelar or guardian spirits gods protesting against their materiality and their worldliness. The almost divine Lycurgus, after consulting the oracles expatriated himself that his countrymen might not again worship gold. In the midst of the material forms of worship in the Temple in Jerusalem and the service of the slaughtering of innocent victims (lambs, doves, etc.) the truth descended to earth in the outpouring of these spiritual gifts, and Jesus, the Christ, choosing his disciples, not from the priests, not from the learned, not from the scribes nor the pharisees, but from the lowly fishermen and workmen. In the midst of the pomp, splendor and corruption of papal power Martin Luther kindled the fires of the Reformation, but it was not his fault that kings made it a literal fire and hell and that war followed. Here in the midst of the dull round of utility, of the pressing forward in the service of mammon; the great stress of world powers the world over; in the midst of the flowering out of the teachings of Huxley, Darwin, Spencer and Tyndall; in the midst of agnostic and materialistic philosophies; in the midst of a church which through various dissensions has become attenuated until two hundred Christian denominations could be counted in the world, when the question of Herbert Spencer or the Bible besets the students of every theological university; in the midst of this, without the veiling of any superstition, without the seeking of any wild-eyed fanatic, the message from the unseen world broke the silence that had spread over the earth concerning immortality. Mediums were developed in distant places apart from each other, those who had never heard anything about the subject. The one standing before you was chosen as a medium, a teacher, a healer, in a place where there was nothing known about Spiritualism, and when a little girl spoke to doctors, ministers, lawyers and others who flocked to hear her.

This outpouring of the spirit, called Modern Spiritualism, came to the world because of the materialism, atheism, unbelief and worldliness within as well as outside the churches. Now after fifty-six years of this ministration you have "occult," "magian," "mystical," "theosophical," "psychic research" societies, "christian science," and "new thought" societies ad infinitum. The ice being broken, this seal being unsealed this great tide of spirit inspiration has swept into the world.

Mediums are not developed because they have this or that or the other psychic "natural" gift, and whosoever claims to develop in you clairvoyance, the discerning of spirits, or spiritual perception or any of the phenomena known in Modern Spiritualism and says that he or she does it independently of spirit intelligences, might just as well tell you that he or she could teach you how to breathe without air. Wherever and whenever the avenue is opened to this inner spirit perception, spiritual beings must aid. It is a part of their life to aid. This is not interference; it is a portion of the process of all souls to aid. You might just as well say that a man of business could go off alone by himself and transact business without the aid of any other human being, as to say that any one can have spiritual manifestations without the aid of spirits. These "millions of spiritual beings that walk the earth unseen, both when you wake and when you sleep," are no idle dream. Milton said this. It is well known that Hesiod said the same thing in those ancient days that you are accustomed to call the ages of paganism.

Spiritual powers at certain periods or cycles of time find the earth fallow, hungering and thirsting for spiritual knowledge. "The weak and foolish things of earth are often chosen to confound the wise." It is not because mediums have inherently any different psychological or psychic power, it is not because they are any better or any worse than other people; they are chosen from all classes of society, among all conditions of people, among all ages from the child that can scarcely lisp, from the young girl or boy who has had no training in schools or colleges, to the mature, middle-aged and old men and women. The entire subject has been presented to the world through human beings just as they are. It has not taken them away to make "prophets" of them; it has not secluded them to make "oracles" of them; it does not state that you shall fast so many days and nights and then you will be an "adept." It has simply said, "this message is needed. The instrumentalities are ordinary, human people. They are not posing as prophets; if they are they are false prophets; they are not posing as Christs, if they are they are false Christs; they are simple messengers bearing the glad tidings."

Such messengers, whether lowly in their human states or whether exalted, whether in the palace—the former Czar of Russia received the American medium D. D. Home, who gave him messages that the present Czar is even now trying to carry out—or whether in the cottage of the lowliest of your earth, the universal message is: "We are departed spirits, we are your friends, we live in this life which is just beyond your senses, we enter into contact with matter, we influence matter, we make use of its tangibility in order to meet your conditions."

You build block-houses for babes (most people are babes in the spiritual sense). It is not wicked, it is not sinful. This gift, like all similar gifts throughout the pages of history, is of divine origin. We do not mean by that, that all the messages given are infallible. How would you recognize your friends if they were? Your father, your mother, your child. Your son, who might have gone astray, who might have used words that were profane, who might have told falsehoods; oh! you want to hear from him. It is not that every word he says is going to be gospel. But here is a message from him, will you receive it? From one who went off to sea, and you did not know whither he had gone, whether the ship had gone down, you do not know, but every year of your life you pray for him, and do you not leave a light in the window burning lest he might want to come home? When having passed on the message-bearer comes to your door with a message from your son, and tells you something in some way that impresses your heart that your son is there and wants to tell you something, would you receive it or not? Of course you would receive it. There is no clergyman, theology or creed, or anything in the world that is strong enough to prevent a mother or father from receiving a message from their son.

There is no error save in human interpretation. The message comes by avenues that are just as legitimate as the telephonic or telegraphic apparatus. Human avenues it is true, but human avenues that are chosen to give this message because the world needs it, human avenues that lose nothing by giving the message, and the world has accepted it. Every minister who is intelligent in every pulpit in the land is affected by this message that came fifty-six years ago and is still continuing. He speaks differently about death, of the future life, he tells things that this message has brought. Every man of science has changed his methods, shaped and altered his scientific investigations because he wants to know this thing, and at last when through his avenues of scientific investigation he enters into the vestibule where all these manifestations have originated why! he believes in Spiritualism after all.

The manner in which spirits approach people to make them mediums is a subject that few can understand. If a chemist were in this room giving an experiment very few would know the terms that he would employ or the principles without an elaborate primary series of lessons and explanations.

There is no human language as yet, the terms have not been coined or created, whereby to express the various processes by which spirits move substance without any of the usual organic or dynamic processes. But this is true: you have heard the simple but homely expression, that a man cannot lift himself up by his own boot straps. You are differently related to matter now than you will be when you are separated from the material organism. You cannot influence matter in both ways while you are in the body, or pervaded by the limitations of human organism and dominated by the idea of sensation. This "fourth dimension of space" that Prof. Zollner thought would enable the people to understand better the spiritual process only made it very obscure. The truth is there is no dimension to spirit; to spirit, substance does not have "length, breadth and thickness;" to spirit, materiality is not tangibility and obstructive sense. To spirit, glass, wood, iron, plaster and bricks are as nothing. Just as your thoughts can think through the walls of this room to your business offices or to your homes, and if you were not attached to the body you would be there just the moment you thought about any other place.

Spirit is not governed by organic processes. The organic processes are very crude. The film of substance that separates all atoms is removed. Spirit comes in contact with substance, not only by finer methods than you understand, a million times finer than the vibrations of electricity, but spirit approaches organisms and organic substance without any of the limitations of the organism. You cannot do that. If you move a table you have to take your hands or some mechanical or dynamical appliance. The finest substance you can employ is electricity, yet no amount—mark what we say, and we defy successful contradiction—no amount of mere human volition of any one who is still embodied in the human form has ever raised a table or made one sound upon physical substance. Whenever and wherever this occurs intelligences independent of those who request it are acting. It is not the willing, it is not the volition of the human being, it is not the demand that causes it to be done, but the voluntary action of invisible intelligences; they may or may not respond, they frequently perform these manifestations when no one asks for them, and really very often when people do not want them, which is evidence that they are not from the human source? Haunted houses are for the first time explained; and the terror of the midnight ghost and even the unhappy spirit wandering like the spirit in the play of Hamlet are all explained. Spiritual beings or intelligences often frequent a place where a wrong has been committed, or where they have committed a wrong. But then one of England's sweetest poets has said: "All places in which men have lived and died are haunted houses."

All people have their friends in the spirit world, and the opening of this channel of communion is just as liable to come to your dwelling as to any other. It came to the Fox girls in Hydesville; it came to the lowly dwelling of your speaker, in Wisconsin, when she was a little girl, using her then as now to give this message; it may come to you or to yours. It will not be a ghost, it will not be a hobgoblin that will come; it will be a message from your loved and loving friends. Permissible everywhere under the infinite law of love.

When these barriers of foolish fear, of time and sense and human conditions, of theology and science, and scientific research, and all the other blinding things that human philosophy and human ignorance have invented are removed you will understand that this spirit realm is real. Is the realm in which you now are, as spiritual beings, but which you cannot compass because of the limitations of time and sense.

The mahatma, if he lives anywhere in the far mountains, has not climbed to the abode of the gods and stolen their lightning and thunder as Prometheus is said to have done, but the gods and ministering angels have descended to him in his lowly place by the altar of his aspirations and made answer. Why not? If you know what is beyond the change called death, are you not better qualified to describe it? If there is an opening of the inner vision to realize that there are messengers unsealing the eyes that are blinded by disease or opening them to the awakening of the presence of spiritual beings do you care what messengers or ministering spirits touch the eyes to awaken intelligence? Is God so narrow, so jealous, that all these spiritual beings around the earth are doing nothing? Must "Christian Science" dictate that no intervening intelligences shall come between God and human beings? Then what in the name of goodness is Mrs. Eddy doing? Let God take care of his people. He does not need Mrs. Eddy's intervening intelligence.

Let us have all the messages that come from spirits. There is enough room in our philosophy to include all the messengers, to include all the prophets and seers, ministering angels and ministering spirits that are at your door on earth or in spirit states. Is it supernatural? It may be. But if you lived a little more in the upper chambers of your spiritual dwelling you would perceive more. You take pity on those who live in cellars; there is great criticism about the slums, and about the miserable tenement houses for the poor; you are very anxious to let light and fresh air in among their material habitations. In all the great circles of spiritual light the wish is to let some light into the narrow chambers of your minds and through the various prison dwellings of your earthly existence. You are afraid to go up to the light; you are afraid of these higher chambers of thought. You want to live in the region of athletic exercises, in the region of mathematics. Now athletics is good. A great many women join athletic clubs, who might get better exercise if they did their own housework, and that work then might be better done. A great many men for the lack of something useful to do seek for physical exercise in ways that are utterly useless as far as humanity and their own moral benefit are concerned. There is plenty of work to do; a little hoeing and digging for everybody, and less ornamental exercise.

The truth is, the "upper rooms" of your dwellings are mostly uninhabited; they have been given over to fears, which Shelley called bats and ravens, and cowardly things, and you are afraid to go into the chambers of the spirit because you have been told that they are uncanny. There, around the altars that are unfrequented, your loved ones wait for you. And by processes that are just as legitimate as have ever been solved in the crucible of the chemist they may make this known to you.

By and by, when the world enters its full inheritance of life in the spiritual portion of its possessions, how pityingly those people will turn back to your present state and say: "See what poor, benighted, ignorant, intellectual and physical machines were those people in the dark ages who were afraid of spiritual beings."

EXPRESSES HIS OPINION.

To the Editor:—Being somewhat perplexed by the conglomeration of facts and fancies as expressed in your worthy paper, I hope you will pardon me for asking a question that may stagger you. Is Spiritualism an article of merchandise that so many traffic therein? [Of course mediums should receive pay for the time they employ in serving the public.] Or are those psychics, mediums and clairvoyants who advertise their advice and consolation for 10 cents and upward, simply impostors [not necessarily] who feed upon the credulity of unwary victims? Their perpetual and conspicuous presence casts blighting shadows over the true beacon light, the emanation of pure spirituality, not destined to satisfy the morbid greed for curiosity, nor the rapacity of unscrupulous mystery-mongers, but rather to demonstrate to the wandering prodigal his immortality, and to illuminate the penitent's path, who, sin-sick and disgusted with the world's offerings, hastens to return unto God, his merciful Father. Psychological Crimes, as now widely discussed, would be unknown were mediumship incidental only through the holiest aspirations of the heart in its highest conception of the all true, pure and good. But reckless individuals who seek spiritual intercourse and external mediumship, regardless of their flexible character or moral attributes, will create, stimulate and aggravate such crimes to the detriment of Spiritualism.

IF I CAN LIVE.

If I can live
To make some pale face brighter, and to give
A second lustre to some tear-dimmed eye,
Or e'en impart
One throb of comfort to an aching heart,
Or cheer some wayworn soul in passing by.

If I can lend
A strong hand to the fallen, or defend
The right against a single envious strain,
My life though bare
Perhaps of much that seemeth dear and fair
To us of earth, will not have been in vain.

The purest joy,
Most near to heaven, far from earth's alloy,
Is bidding cloud give way to sun and shine;
And 'twill be well
If on that day of days the angels tell
Of me, "She did her best for one of Thine."

SPIRIT COMMUNION.

Synopsis of a Lecture by Harry J. Moore.

"I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you."—John 14:18.

When we consider the responsibility of one toward another, and when we take into account the apparent struggle for power almost universally displayed, we sometimes ask ourselves if the differences among men will ever be adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned. I have been inclined, of late, to believe that there is a purpose which accompanies each life. I am not prepared to say as yet whether this purpose has been implanted within the soul by a Supreme power, or whether it sprang simultaneously into expression with our present life. I deem the origin of this something which I believe impossible of discovery.

Now, to illustrate my position, I will say that about eight years since a medium told me that I would become a public speaker. At that time I could not participate in a conversation without stammering to an extreme. Again, about two years before I met my wife, who recently passed away, a medium described her perfectly to me. This medium told me that we would marry and related incidents in connection with our married life and then told me that my wife and I would live together for four years and she would pass away—all of which came out as she predicted. This same medium recently prophesied concerning my future and her predictions in regard to my future correspond with just what I, intuitively, anticipate.

Again, I have two friends both of whom are physicians, who have had their lives portrayed to them; one by a medium and the other by the power of intuition within himself. Now if there is not a purpose which accompanies each and every expression of life, how could these mediums to whom I have referred predict the outcome of incidents and lives so accurately?

I do not say that every prediction made by every so-called medium has proven to be true. What I wish to impress upon the minds of my hearers and readers is that if a real and truthful medium, one who is in touch with the universal, predicts for us certain events, it behooves us as intelligent men and women to at least give it such attention as will warrant our readiness in case the prognostication prove true. I would not have you believe, as though it were gospel truth, everything given you purporting to come from the next life. We are supposed to use our reason, judgment and common sense in dealing with men and women here on this earth plane, so we are supposed to exercise these same gifts, or endowments, in relation to communications supposed to come to us from the other side.

You see I believe that there are some spirits much wiser than some mortals, and that there are also some mortals much wiser than some spirits. The majority of spirit messages prove but two things to me, and they are that the spirit communicating proves that he or she has survived the experience called death, and that, with a memory of events which transpired in its life while it was in mortal form, it can return and prove its identity by relating incidents that we upon investigation discover to be true.

It is recorded that Jesus, in the language of my text, said to his disciples, "I will not leave you comfortless;" but that he would "come to them." I presume that he came to them many times, but it seems that many, if not all of his disciples doubted. I can discover no real test in the Bible which would prove to my mind that Jesus did actually return after he passed through the experience which we call death. Modern Spiritualism has one thousand times more evidence to offer as proof of spirit return than the whole Christian church combined. This world would be dreary and extremely sad if we had no more evidence of the continuation beyond death of our loved ones than that offered us by the Christian church.

My wife just before she passed away said that she saw her Aunt Lemmy and our baby girls. Some of you may ask if I really think my wife saw these spirits, and my reply is that I most certainly do. Is it not a beautiful thought to believe that love does not die with so-called death?

Think of it, my dear friends, we shall soon meet those whom we loved and who have passed on before. Oh, when we get to spirit life we will part no more! Love will re-unite us and we will then be permitted to associate according to our most profound promptings! Heart to heart, soul to soul, mind to mind we will march along, for our bridal tour will be a journey through the spheres and eternity the honeymoon!

THE SPIRIT WORLD.

There is a spirit world beyond our ken,
Where life continues after earthly death,
Its portals open at our parting breath,
And the living spirit is born again
Upon a higher plane. There live the men
Who once were mortals on the earth beneath,
And have outworn the mortal form or sheath
Which cannot enter the gate of heaven.
There we will seek in vain a great white throne,
At which lowly Jesus acting as God,
Rendering judgment on the new-born soul;
But we shall find our conscience is alone,
The judge reviewing the path we've trod
Its moral trend determining its goal.

BOOK REVIEW.

The Angel's Diary and Celestion Study of Man. By Mrs. Effie M. Shirey and her brother, Charles Samson, from the Celestial Sphere. Published by Mrs. J. A. S. S. Lender, Denver, Col.

A volume of 223 pages, prettily bound in white with gold embossing, a credit to any publishing house. It purports to be communications made by two spirits to their mother through the mediumship of Elizabeth Maud Weatherhead. In the first part they narrate the story of their transition, reception in the world of spirits, describe their "heavenly mansions," return to earth, life as it is in the spheres, various journeys; they speak of the soul of man, the power of thought, development of soul-power, describe the wonders of the orgahism, the progress of the soul, immortality.

The second part treats of the wonders of the celestial world, the new thought movement, books, trinity, the Holy Ghost, etc.

It abounds in glowing imagery, and the zealous purpose of the publisher is equaled by the earnestness of the spirit writers.

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. C. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all afflictions of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of "Actina" is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eyes from an operation."

Mr. F. W. Harwood, Springfield, Mass., says that "Actina" cured him of deafness of nine years' standing.

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old.

Robert Baker, Ocean Park, Cal., writes: "I should have been blind had I Not used "Actina."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T. B., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

Can Telepathy Explain?
Results of Psychical Research.
By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 248 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Influence of the Zodiac Upon Human Life,
With Character Readings of Persons Born Upon the Cusp.

The principles found in this volume are both a science and a religion, for a better and a far happier humanity. It points to the planets as an index to the human character and liability to diseases; also gives the gems and colors suited to temperaments evolved under certain planets. But the author, ELEANOR KIRK, lays special stress upon the fundamental principle that "All maladies known to man can be entirely dominated, forever cast out, by those who realize that mind is the master and body the servant." Price, cloth, $1.00.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Clara L. Stewart writes from Dunkirk, N. Y.: "I am on my way to Elmira, N. Y., where I shall serve the society the remainder of December. I would like to hear from societies in this locality that are in need of a speaker. I can serve any that are near enough to reach them between Sundays and Thursdays, and would especially like to arrange for January. I spoke in Sandusky Sunday evening."

Ellen Foster writes from Ogden, Utah: "I like the paper better than any other paper I have read on Spiritualism." Her husband has been a medium for a long time and she can see no bad effects therefrom. She thinks the discussion on The Great Psychological Crime will do good.

W. Lynch writes from Toledo, Ohio: "At the annual election for our society, just held, the following officers were elected: President, Henry E. Dowd; vice-president, Dr. W. O. Hubble; secretary and treasurer, Henry J. Hofmann. Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit, has just closed a very successful engagement with our society. Mr. and Mrs. Walk Ripley, of London, Eng., open an engagement for the month of December, to be followed by Mr. G. W. Brooks, of Springfield, Ill. Mrs. Dr. Parker has presented our society with a new piano. Taking all things into consideration, our society is on the high road to success."

Cora H. Moore writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "The Progressive Spiritualists organized in this city, Oct. 1, 1903, has been meeting with unusual success. We have 150 members. Hundreds are being turned away from our doors, the hall not being large enough to accommodate the immense throngs."

A. W. Keller writes: "A violet social and test circle will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Keller, 937 W. 63rd street, on New Year's night, Jan. 1, 1904. A good programme will be furnished. Good mediums will be present, and refreshments served. A silver collection will be taken. Everybody will be welcome."

W. R. Cooper writes: "Tuesday evening, Dec. 8, was the occasion of a most delightful surprise on Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Hill, of 320 Flournoy street, to celebrate the 28th anniversary of their marriage. There could not have been a more congenial gathering of friends, everyone trying to outdo the other to make the evening an enjoyable one with music, songs, recitations and refreshments; about fifty were in attendance. I also wish to say that the Rev. Mrs. Hill is doing good service in our cause. Her lectures are both entertaining and uplifting, and her meetings are well attended."

Dr. Beverly writes: "At Lakeside Hall, corner 31st street and Indiana avenue, Thursday evening, Dec. 17, the Spiritual Science Society will hold a box party and dance. A fine program has been prepared. A lunch will be served with free tea and coffee. Booths will be erected for different mediums and palmists to give readings. Gypsies in costume and Indian chiefs materialized, with many other attractions. All will end with a merry dance. Tickets, 25 cents; 5 for one dollar. Our Sunday meetings are a great success, and we will be glad to make you welcome at any time."

The Chicago Chronicle says: "Mary A. Kidder, of Kalamazoo, Mich., has been going into trances for the last week. She professes to have visited heaven and to have conversed with departed spirits. She has told persons with whom she is not acquainted about seeing dead relatives whom she did not know and some who have never been in Kalamazoo. Mary describes heaven graphically. 'The trance just strikes me suddenly,' she says. 'I lose control of my body and seem to be carried up, up, up, to an almost unimaginable height. The air seems soft and fans my face. I fly through clouds and then suddenly know I am in heaven. About me stretches a great country, but there are no houses or streets. Beautiful white-robed angels are singing and talking and sailing through the air. I am flashed through two immense white pearly gates, and then the beauty of the whole place is before me. Colors of every description are seen and the most beautiful music is heard on every side. I seem to know all the people there and they come to me and talk. A spirit told me that when I died I would be free to move just as they do. I cannot understand how angels go through air. They have no wings, neither do they walk.'"

Spirit Message to Mr. and Mrs. Woodmansee:—"We come in answer to your kind letter. This is all new to us. We have met Annie and all your children, and we have wished to come and make the promised visit. Now we can see the pictures and meet your children face to face. We thank you a thousand times for the Progressive Thinker you sent to us, and we can realize now how grand it all is, and what a great truth it represents. You should be proud of such bright and beautiful children who come to your home and bring sunshine by their presence. If our children could only understand this, how truly happy we would be. We will try and influence them to appreciate The Progressive Thinker now, which would be a comfort to them. It was good of you to think of us and write to us. We are happy and we know now that this is the true way. Oh! we regret that we missed it so much in the mortal. You have indeed helped us into the light, and we hope to visit you in your home sometime, with your dear children. We are with our loved ones. Your friends in spirit life, Mary and Henry Marson."

B. F. Sliter writes: "Dear old bright, energetic, liberal, educative Progressive Thinker, how any aggressive mind who wishes to keep abreast of the times can afford to do without you, I cannot understand, and especially if they are Spiritualists. Well, I am here at Alameda, Cal. The rainy season is upon us. The grass is growing lustily. Buds are swelling upon the shedding trees, and out of doors this winter day it seems like an Eastern day in early May; it is fairly glorious! I have been lecturing for the month of November for the First Spiritual Union of San Jose, to good audiences. I hope to continue my labors there again soon, after the state organizer, A. F. Brown and wife, stir them up for a short season. I should be pleased to answer other calls in this state. My address is 2232 Santa Clara avenue, Alameda, Cal."

Mrs. W. A. Shawson writes from Muskegon, Mich.: "I enclose a copy of some notes I preserved a couple of years ago. These lines were received at the fourth sitting of my husband's mother and myself. We started in to simply sit quietly in the silence for health, strength, or whatever might come to us. I at once began to be impressed with messages of this description, it being given to me so rapidly I found my knowledge of shorthand of great benefit in preserving them. As this is in line with the 'higher mediumship,' the 'independent method,' etc., I thought I would send it to you, believing this method to be much more valuable than the use of boards, tables, etc., in the home circle, as what we have done others can certainly do, and the words given us were so wonderfully cheering, strengthening and enlightening, I wish others might profit thereby."

Wanted, by the Church of Truth, of Denver, Colo., a No. 1 speaker and medium. Address the secretary, I. T. Nites, 2011 Scott Place.

Mrs. J. A. Murtha writes that she will serve the Englewood Spiritual Union, 528 West 63rd street, for the last three Sunday evenings of December, and has the months of January and February open for engagements, and would be pleased to hear from societies with open dates." The Progressive Thinker takes great pleasure in recommending Mrs. Murtha as a most remarkable medium.

An extraordinary instance of "multiple personality," or "multiple consciousness," in which a young girl at different times in her life exhibited the varying characters of a dozen persons, is recorded by Dr. Albert Wilson, in the Journal of Mental Science, of London, Eng. The multiplicity of personalities began, Dr. Wilson states, when the girl was attacked with influenza and cerebral meningitis, at the age of 12½ years. In the third week of the illness she was delirious and maniacal, and showed intense fear of imaginary snakes (visual hallucinations). She was mentally blind in that she could not recognize people, yet a hand or any crease in the counterpane became to her a snake. In the fifth week recovery set in and intelligence returned. In the sixth week suddenly she developed into a different personality. While in bed reading and playing with her dolls she commenced to shake and clear a space around her. Then she said, "It is coming," turned a somersault, and sat up in bed in this new personality. Her manner was now childish, and her words were clipped as in baby talk. She also used words wrongly. She had some conception of her normal self, whom she called "that person." She always said she was "very cross with that person for going and leaving her." Her third personality she called "Old Nick." In her fourth she was deaf and dumb. At an other time she became imbecile and blind, and while blind she could draw, although unable to draw at other times. By the time she was 16 her normal personality had vanished. As a rule she gave herself a new name with each personality.

The Church of the Psychic Forces holds services at Wilcox Hall, corner Champlain avenue and 43d street, every Sunday. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 8 p. m. The hall number is 361-363 East 43d street. Conducted by Mrs. Isa Cleveland.

All letters for G. H. Brooks for the next two weeks should be addressed to Ashtabula, Ohio, care of General Delivery. Mr. Brooks lectures there during the last two Sundays of this month.

James Wallace writes: "I like your paper, The Progressive Thinker, the best of all I read. I am one of the many who are waiting for Brother Jamieson to explain the phenomena that come through mediums outside of Spiritualism."

Aug. Recht writes: "Dr. C. Wyman was the speaker for the Society of Spiritual Truth, 423 Classon avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., Sunday, Dec. 6. His subject was Ancient Spiritualism, which was well presented. Mr. Rasmussen then gave a number of spirit messages which held the closest attention of all present."

Mrs. LeSieur writes: "We wish to remind our friends once more that the Band of Harmony Bazaar takes place Thursday afternoon and evening, Dec. 17. We shall have everything our friends need for Christmas presents or for themselves. We have some very nice comfortables. Supper served at six o'clock. Masonic Temple, room 512."

Secretary writes: "Clara E. Strong, president of the Sunshine Club, holds public services in Boston, Mass., as follows: Morning circle, 11 o'clock; Sunday-school, 12:30; afternoon and evening services at 3 and 7:30. These meetings are held every Sunday at Armory Hall, 67 Warren street, Roxbury. Every Tuesday and Friday evenings, home circles are held at Room 420, 30 Huntington avenue. A cordial invitation is given to all when in Boston to attend. Progressive Thinkers for sale at these meetings."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in the columns of The Progressive Thinker are for sale at this office. Bear this in mind.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Prof. Lockwood, ranking first among the great scientists, is now lecturing in Philadelphia, Pa. One of his subjects was, "Are the people ready for a Common Sense Religion?" This gave the professor a splendid opportunity to show up the "sorcery" of vicarious atonement, and its precise similitude to the pagan "sorcery" of human sacrifice for the atonement of the sins of pagan nations, from which Christianity borrowed the idea. The Professor has recently had six large charts made from cuts of the interior brain tissues, showing distinctly the relations of the "projective," "commissural," and associative fibers of the encephelon. He believes this to be the greatest exposition of the possibilities of human development and of the range and capacities of mediumship ever undertaken in this country. In a volume by Hallack, upon the physiology of the human brain, the Professor found certain facts which induced him to investigate the psychic character of the cerebral tissues in their many co-related forms, as noted by leading physiologists and psychologists. These lectures which the Professor recently added to his list are the result of these investigations. We believe they should be in print, for they reveal a class of scientific data more valuable to the earnest investigator than any test or physical phenomenon that can be given, for they demonstrate the character of these fibers in their relation to invisible modes of motion coming from without, and arousing sensory action. This is the Professor's ninth season in Philadelphia. Next month the Professor goes to Pittsburg.

Speaker and test medium who would like to go west, address Ortha A. Clark, secretary, of Spokane, Wash., Room 4041 Dishman Block. The First Spiritualist Society wants good speakers and test mediums.

Correspondent writes: "The new society is known as Rising Sun Spiritual Mission. The meeting opened at Star Lodge Hall with a well-filled house; many mediums present. Both afternoon and evening services were well attended, and also Dec. 6. We all feel that the new undertaking will prove a success. The lecture Nov. 29 was delivered by Mrs. Nora E. Hill of this city; on Dec. 6, Mrs. Squire delivered the address at both meetings. Messages were given by Mrs. Cutter, Mrs. Kurchner, Mrs. Schaffer and others."

Ella Dare, an accomplished literary lady, writes: "May the path of The Progressive Thinker broaden with the years, and may it lead its hosts of readers along the highways of ever-advancing truths!"

T. W. Woodrow writes from Hobart, Okla.: "I returned to-day from Bowie, Texas, where I served the Universalists and Spiritualists with five lectures. They think Spiritualism makes Universalism more beautiful than ever. I need a good test medium to attend my public work."

Mrs. Cross, secretary, writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society will be favored by an address by Mrs. Caroline Catlin on Sunday evening, Dec. 13. Subject, 'Is there any real conflict between Spiritualism and the teachings of the Bible?' Mrs. Catlin is so well known as such a noble worker that it is almost needless to say, we will have a treat in her lecture. Come and see. Services at 7:45 sharp, at 323 East 55th street. We will hold a dance at the same place on Dec. 17, Thursday evening—just an informal social dance. Come and make this first one a success. If you don't dance, come and visit, and see the others. Admission to everyone, 10 cents."

A. C. Johnson in the Galveston News says: "The hynotic subject, during the operation and while under the effects, has in a manner parted with his soul and selfhood, and feels, thinks and perceives as the operator does at the same time. These three brains, however, with their motor and sensory apparatus, are by no means the sole or the principal arena of the mysterious procedure. The solar ganglion at the pit of the stomach, with the vital nervous system which originates from it, is affected first of all, and is, indeed, the principal organism to respond to the peculiar influences, whether these are beneficial or malefic. It is unnecessary to add that hypnotizing often repeated is almost certain to be injurious to the patient. It is analogous to exhaustive labor, over-eating and other excesses. Bodily disorder in various forms and mental disturbance are very certain to be the consequence. When the will of an individual is thus made subject to another, or is in any way annihilated, his life as a moral and responsible being is affected to a corresponding degree. He will thereafter be the passive subject of every current excitement and of every person who seeks to artfully control him. We observe this in the religious world, but it is even more common in other departments of social life. When large groups of people are swayed by the eloquence of an orator, or the appeal of a public teacher, we are not out of the way when we declare the influence hypnotic rather than the producing of conviction. An individual thus controlled by another or by emotional excitement, can not justly be considered as entirely rational. It is on this accunt that many persons who claim to have committed crimes under the instigation of another person may be entirely truthful and the law may have to take this into consideration later on."

Bro. B. F. Johnson, of the National Military Home, Kansas, deeply laments that he missed a single copy of the paper. He wants the connecting link in the great Symposium and the discussion between Lyman C. Howe and Florence Huntley. He thinks the "Storm Center book has aroused a great deal of valuable thought. Whenever one misses a copy of The Progressive Thinker through some irregularity in the mails, we are always glad to supply the same, if notified by postal, free of cost.

N. P. Clawson wants to know if any mediums in the vicinity of Salina, Utah, her post office address.

The Church of the Golden Rule meets at 52 Dearborn street, Sunday, Dec. 13. Mrs. Lucinda B. Chandler will speak. Subject: "Human Freedom the only Guarantee of National Prosperity."

R. N. Goodwin has been trying for thirty years to be convinced that Spiritualism is true. He writes: "Herewith find $1 enclosed for renewal of The Progressive Thinker, a paper I have read during the past two or three years, and like to read it every week. In the article, 'Important Question,' in this week's issue, I notice the quotation, 'If a man die, shall he live again?' Now if poor old Job could not get his question answered in his time, who can answer it truthfully now. I have attended quite a number of seances in the past thirty years. I do not know yet whether Spiritualism is true or not. I am inclined to think it is not true; if it is, why does not my deceased wife come near enough to me and tell me, for its not like her to keep me in suspense all these long years since she has gone. Usually when a near and dear one goes from my home, we are able to get a line or so from them, but not so in my case. Then again why do so many die that are full in the faith and knowledge of its truth? 'Physician, heal thyself.' Why don't some of the healers cure all that they undertake to cure. Oh! so many are the dark and mysterious of this phenomena. I wonder there is not more doubting Thomases. But let me have The Progressive Thinker." We deeply regret that the brother has failed to become convinced that spirits can and do communicate with mortals. If he lived in Chicago, he certainly would soon realize that the so-called dead still live. As to healers curing everybody who is sick, that is impossible. No one on this earth can do it. Magnetic and Spiritualistic healers have often cured those given up to die by physicians; in fact they often perform cures that are considered miraculous. Your deceased wife has not communicated with you because you have not consulted the right medium, one she could control.

Mrs. C. H. Mullins writes from Owosso, Mich.: "Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond spoke here last evening. Subject, 'The New Psychic Era.' Words of the writer are inadequate to describe the wonderful discourse. She will speak tonight at Chesaning, Mich."

John Woolman writes about a glorious time: "I want to tell you about the glorious time the members and their friends have at the socials given by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Universal Occult Society. I have used the adjective 'glorious' in this case as entirely apropos. The ladies are glorious. The home-made bread and cake are glorious, and last but not least the communications that are received by the recipients from their friends from the other side of life eternal are glorious. Interspersed and running through the entire evening is a musical and literary programme that in itself is glorious. So you see that I have, as I have said above, used the adjective glorious appropriately. These socials evidence one thing to the visitor emphatically, and that is, that those who have these socials in charge have had a full experience in social enterprises, and know exactly how to make such events a positive success. Every one who has visited any one of these socials has gone away delighted with the entertainment. Now, if this were the culmination, that of having a good time, the end would be attained, but not so; this is not the end. The strangers who visit these gatherings in a great many cases know nothing of Spiritualism, and have hitherto held Spiritualists and everything pertaining to their teachings in ridicule and contempt, and they are greatly surprised to find that a Spiritualist is flesh and blood, and that they have feelings in common with other people. They begin to find out that the 'devil is not as black as he is painted. They begin to investigate what they have heretofore made game of, and in the end they begin to think for themselves, which is the commencement point of a Spiritualist. These socials are held every other Saturday night at Brother and Sister Aitkens home, 253 East 31st street. The next one will occur Saturday evening, Dec. 19, at 8 p. m. Everybody is invited to come and have a glorious time."

Mrs. Jessie Bailey, secretary of the First Spiritualist Church, Rochester, N. Y., writes: "The interest is unabated here. Mrs. Mary C. Von Kanzler served us last month, and is with us for this month as speaker and medium for spirit messages, under the auspices of the First Spiritualist church. Her lectures are logical and filled with the vitalizing inspiration that the minds of mortals demand to satisfy their present needs. Mr. Nichols, the materializing medium, has been with us for the past ten days. He has submitted himself to test conditions that have been in every way satisfactory. His seances are being well attended."

Eli Thorp writes: "The Progressive Thinker, No. 731, speaks of the 'selfishness and colossal greed of certain religious localities.' Be fair, Brother Francis, and make the charge general. In No. 731 he says of the Catholics, 'There is danger of their ultimate success.' This is true, and Spiritualists have no remedy for the elimination of selfishness and colossal greed, nor have they a plan to prevent 'the ultimate success' of the Catholic power. Spiritualists, Catholics, philosophers, Protestants and manipulators of that huge begging machine, the Salvation Army, are a unit in their fierce opposition to those who have a plan, or a remedy for the removal of the causes that produce these evils. The word socialism causes Spiritualists, Catholics, philosophers, Protestants and the beggar crowd to unite and pursue, deny, prosecute, and bear false witness against a large body of intelligent men and women." This paper has not space to discuss all questions pertaining to humanity. Socialism, finance, the labor question, and politics in general, we leave to be discussed in the secular press.

F. J. Lentsch writes from Louisville, Ky.: "The Ladies' Aid of the Speed Memorial Temple held a bazaar and supper on November 19, which was a success, both socially and financially, clearing $65. We still continue to hold our Sunday evening seances at the residence of President Speed, our meetings being well attended, and great interest being manifested. The lectures delivered by Sister Grunewald, and the tests given by the Rev. Mary Mann are attracting large and intelligent crowds at every meeting. Mrs. Mann has christened quite a number of children."

Mrs. Lizzie Hall, who is now in Albany, N. Y., is doing an excellent work there, impressing the people with the thought that Spiritualism is true. The hall she occupies is filled to overflowing. She has been treated there with the kindest consideration, and she has formed many friendships that will be lasting. She criticises one of the most eminent orthodox divines of Albany, who in his address at a banquet in New York attempted to convey a meaning of his orthodox heaven, by using the Spiritualists' term, spirit world, and claiming science, as the hand-maiden of religion. The speech itself was characteristic of the calling of the man, and the principle of the man himself. He would pose before the world as a philosopher with a great burden of divine wisdom resting upon him, that would make his opinions of such vast importance to the world that all arguments on the subjects that he discussed and passed upon were forever settled. "The most obtuse portion of his remarks," Mrs. Hall says, "is where the word spirit world was employed to express an orthodox meaning of heaven, and calling Science the hand-maiden of religion. The orthodox heaven has for all time signified a locality that ended progression in strumming a harp and singing eternally the same song of praise to a personal God. And now this bombastic minister conveys the meaning in an inverted way, that the spirit world, which means endless progression for the spirit, in another plane of existence is synonymous with his heaven."

H. H. Grieme writes: "I am trying to organize a Spiritualist colony to raise fruit and start a canning factory. All Spiritualists who are willing to join, address me for particulars at No. 1435 Sullivan avenue, St. Louis, Mo."

W. P. Clifford writes from Iconium, Iowa: "The Progressive Thinker I note is right to the point, speaking fearlessly and improving all the time. Since my last letter to you two of our old staunch and reliable spiritual friends have passed to the higher life—D. G. Bonnett, of Chariton, and J. W. Sprott, of Derby, Iowa. The communities in which they resided lose by their passing away."

"THAT GREAT BOOK."

When have Spiritualists been so stirred up? One would think by the smoky atmosphere in many homes, over this book, that it not only had turned the world upside down, but it holds the key to the INFERNAL REGIONS, and if it was not thoroughly denounced by every good Spiritualist, that the great author would soon assume command of the entire universe, and our favored religion would be dashed to pieces and become a thing of the past. But there are faint signs that the cooler-headed thinkers are recovering from their fright, and the public pulse is slowly getting down to normal conditions; and we hope the worst is over until something new stirs us up again.

We have never read the wonderful production, but have read many of the communications inserted in The Progressive Thinker for and against it, and as agitation is always the SOUL OF REFORM, I can't understand how anyone can regret that it has been written, and if "to be saved we have first to be made mad," there are lots of Spiritualists who need have no fear of being lost, for the air has been heavily charged with epithets and contention.

But, never mind, it is getting clearer, and we firmly believe that although much of the contents of the book hurts us to-day, the time is not far distant when we shall view it in another and kindlier light, and we will acknowledge that it has worked out much good.

While I am not a medium, yet I have profound respect for mediumship in its highest and grandest sense, and we also believe that within every human soul are possibilities in the line of mediumistic work not yet developed.

The trouble and hindrance to this development lies in our eagerness to study things outside ourselves. We are wasting our time and energies in trying to discover if the planet Mars is inhabited. We want to know the condition of its people, their needs and requirements. We are turning our attention to everything save ourselves, and if we would only come back home and study the problem of our own lives with their unlimited possibilities, we would find it the greatest study of the age.

We need to rise to our own level by eliminating every element that degrades and holds our better self in subjection. We need to carefully study the little things in life and the motives back of them; and in doing this the warped and undeveloped mediumship hidden within every human being will have its rightful chance to unfold.

Never was there a grander truth than this: "Seek first the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."

This does not apply merely to a favored few. It means humanity. And if half the time which has been spent contending over this book had been given to sending out kind and loving thoughts to the great mass of humanity less favored than ourselves we should have taken, valuable strides toward that heavenly kingdom and the attainment of a higher unfoldment of our own capacities.

Let us come back home and study ourselves.

No book has yet been written which can compare with the soul's possibilities. Then why should we stop by the way and waste our forces in contending over some paltry production of the day, when so much grander work is to be done? If this book contains one thought or one suggestion that will start us on a broader line of practical endeavor, then let us embrace it and act upon it, realizing it to be a mile-stone to mark the way to still higher planes of thought. Let us not be children any longer, but let us enlarge upon what we have already learned, throwing wide open the windows of the soul to catch every ray of truth from whatever source it comes, for none of us have yet reached the goal of human development whereby all things shall be ours; but we may all aspire to something better than we now possess, making each day a new birth of thought and impulse that shall bring us up step by step to a broader conception of life and its realities. If we want our spirit friends to assist us, we must pave the way by clean thinking and clean living; and our own mediumship will be advanced in accordance with our efforts. As a rule we ask too much from others, when, if we would, we could attain that mental poise that would answer the demands of our inmost soul and lead us out of the darkness into the shining light. We are the epitome of all that is, or ever will be. Every grand possibility lies within us. Let us rise to our own level.

LAURA CUMMINGS.

Springfield, Mass.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, Nov. 17, at Maple Grove, Mich., Artemus W. Chapin, 78 years of age. Mr. Chapin was an ardent Spiritualist, and found comfort in our beautiful philosophy. He was a good, kind, loving father and husband, and regardless of his religion, was respected by all who knew him. He will be missed at our camp-meetings and gatherings. He has only journeyed on a little while before, to join the dear companion and children who preceded him to that better world where physical afflictions are not known. The writer fulfilled a promise made two years ago to officiate, which was fully carried out.

MRS. MARIAN CARPENTER.

"Why I Am a Vegetarian." By J. Howard Moore. An address before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. Price, 25 cents.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. For sale at this office. Price ten cents.

"Meatless Dishes." Very useful. Price 10 cents.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 70 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of soirées and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

The World's Sixteen Saviors,

Or Christianity before Christ. By Kersey Graves. New and startling revelations in religious history which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods. This wonderful and exhaustive volume will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which the author has chosen for it. Printed on white paper, 380 pages. New edition, revised and corrected, with portrait of author. Price $1.50. Postage, 10 cents.

VOLNEY'S RUINS —AND— THE LAW OF NATURE,

TO WHICH IS ADDED

Volney's Answer to Dr. Priestly, a Biographical Notice by Count Daru, and the Zodiacal Signs and Constellations by the Editor;

Also, a Map of the Astrological Heavens o the Ancients.

Printed on heavy paper, from new plates, in large, clear type, with portrait and illustrations. One vol., post 8vo, 248 pages; paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

This is undoubtedly one of the best and most useful books ever published. It eloquently advocates the best interests of mankind, and clearly points out the sources of human ignorance and misery. The author is supposed to meet in the ruins of Palmyra an apparition or phantom, which explains the true principles of society, and the causes of both the prosperity and the ruin of ancient states. A general assembly of the nations is at length convened, a legislative body formed, the source and origin of religion, of government, and of laws discussed, and the Law of Nature—founded on justice and equity—is finally proclaimed to an expectant world.

MAHOMET, His Birth, Character and Doctrine.

BY EDWARD GIBBON.

This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25c. Sold at this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, Profusely Illustrated.

"I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find nothing in it trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all, that under the appearances of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observation of the vulgar."—VOLTAIRE.

CONTENTS: "The White Bull," a Satirical Romance; "Zadig, or Fate," an Oriental History; "The Sage and the Atheist;" "The Princess of Babylon;" "The Man of Forty Crowns;" "The Huron, or Pupil of Nature;" "Micromegas," a Satire on Mankind; "The World as it Goes;" "The Black and the White;" "Memnon, the Philosopher;" "Andre Des Touches at Siam;" "Bababec;" "The Study of Nature;" "A Conversation With a Chinese;" "Plato's Dream;" "A Pleasure in Having no Pleasure;" "An Adventure in India;" "Jeannot and Colin;" "Travels of Scarmentado;" "The Good Brahmin;" "The Two Comforters;" "Ancient Faith and Fable."

A NEW CATECHISM,

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

This is a new "Catechism" in the full sense of the word. There has as yet appeared in the world of liberal literature nothing like this most wonderful little book or reason. E. P. Powell, the well-known author, the reviewer and critic, says: "The remarkable thing about this 'Catechism' is that it tells the truth." It deals with the questions of God, Immortality—the Creeds, the Clergy, the Church, Prayer and Salvation, Jesus and his Teaching, the Growth of the Christian Scriptures, and many other philosophical, scientific and ethical questions with the utmost candor, courage and clearness. 188 pages. Cloth 75c; paper, 50c

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

Historical and critical review, with replies to an objection. By G. W. Brown, M. D. Price, 15c.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH —OR— DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations, in its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means or developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the Formation of Circles and Cultivation of Mediumship

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the several loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure it will be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Securely packed, and sent postage paid from the manufacturer, for $1.00. Address:

ASPHODEL BLOOMS AND Other Offerings.

BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storyteller contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 160 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Medium says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

Three Journeys Around the World —OR— Travels in the Pacific Islands,

New Zealand, Australia, Ceylon, India, and other Oriental countries. By J. M. Peebles, A. M., M. D., Ph. D. In this splendid large book Dr. Peebles has concentrated a vast amount of valuable information. It is exceedingly entertaining and readable, and Spiritualism as he found it everywhere in his travels receives due attention, making the book of special value and interest to Spiritualists. 454 large pages, finely bound, at the price of $1.50.

THE SOUL OF THINGS;

Or Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. By Wm. and Elizabeth M. F. Denton. A marvelous work. Though concise as a text book it is as fascinating as a work of fiction. The reader will be amazed to see the curious facts here combined in support of this power of the human mind, which will resolve a thousand doubts and difficulties, make geology plain as day, and throw light on all subjects now obscured by time. Price, $1.50. In three volumes, cloth bound, $1.50 each. Postage, 10c per copy.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin, Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give what ever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Beatrice St. George: Q. How can one be certain that what they write is not unconsciously taken from the works of others?

A. In explanation this correspondent states that for many years she has written for the press and has often been annoyed to find passages in the writings of others which she had published as her own. As it is impracticable for her to distinguish these plagiarisms, she is in constant fear of being challenged by other authors for having appropriated their work.

As the facts show, she has remarkable sensitiveness to spirit impression and writes under the dictation of spirit control. The trouble lies in that control. It is a friend who having had a wide range of reading, unconsciously culls the best and reproduces it in the mind of the sensitive subject. That spirit is wholly unconscious of the disagreeable position in which the subject is placed, and should be appealed to by that subject as one friend to another.

This instance is by no means unique. There have been many cases where mediums of undoubted integrity have given through them poems long before published, with at least the tacit admission that they were original. There is scarcely a valuable invention that has not several claimants for priority. Charles Darwin and Alfred R. Wallace received the theory of evolution at almost the same time. This striking phenomenon may be explained by telepathy, as the mind of one or the other of these great biologists was reflected by the other. The Spiritualist will consider as more satisfactory, the direct communication of the theory to each by spirits who were first successful in the same line of study.

A yet more comprehensive theory, the more because it includes the world of spirits as well as mortals, that such great minds, like receiving instruments of the wireless telegraph, by intensity of study, become in tune with the thought vibrations going out in the cosmic spirit ether, and thus come in rapport with all spirit intelligences on that plane. In such instances the thoughts received take more or less the shading of the receiving mind, on which its garb of words strictly depends, and the variation is such that the charge of plagiarism cannot be sustained.

Truth: Q. Was Paine an atheist?

A. Perhaps no character in history has been so basely slandered, misrepresented and misunderstood as Thomas Paine. His writings were in advance of his time, but his position was not as heterodox as that of the present liberal Unitarians. He was in no sense an atheist, but a deist. He believed in God, but not in the godship of Jesus Christ.

He has been accused of blasphemy in his Age of Reason, and of being tried therefor in England. That erudite scholar, Wm. Henry Burr, proves this charge to be false, and further, that such prosecution could not have been made because there is no blasphemy in that book. He further says:

"Paine always claimed to be a religious man. He was the first to enunciate 'The doctrine of humanity,' in the Crisis, of Nov. 21, 1778. 'It is misleading,' says M. D. Conway, in his Life of Paine, 'at the present day to speak of Paine as an opponent of Christianity.' So far has the world advanced since the days of Paine, that Dr. Conway says that 'The Rights of Man' is now the political constitution of England, and the 'Age of Reason' is the growing constitution of the church." To liberals of the present, Paine would be a conservative.

Henry Clough: Q. Will you please answer in the columns of The Progressive Thinker, in what year will February have five Sundays, and when does this occur the last time?

A. In 1880 February had five Sundays. This will not occur again until 1920, and next in 1948.

H. A. Smith, M. D.: Q. What is meant by "electric fluid?"

Can a planetary body having an atmosphere, lose it by the attraction of another, and thus all living beings existing thereon be destroyed? I apply this more directly to the moon.

A. The term fluid, applied to electricity, is not only incorrect, but having been first employed as expressing a theory, which is now cast aside, it is misleading. There is no fluid electricity nor anything suggestive thereof. The theory now entertained is that of vibrations similar to those of light, and this theory for unitizing all the varied phenomena is as comletely demonstrated as a mathematical problem.

When the planets or moons were detached as rings of vapor from the central sun, and by the rupture of these rings formed orbs revolving in the same orbits, according to the theory of evolution, and the nebular hypothesis, all matter which afterwards became solids, or remained gaseous, was withdrawn to each of these separate world forming rings.

Conditions might and probably did exist whereby our moon was evolved from the earth zone, it received only material that afterwards concreted into solid elements. In its case, we need not answer the question of its loss of atmosphere, for the telescope reveals its jagged surface, just as it cooled from the turbulent molten mass, unacted on by water or atmosphere. Hence it is justifiable to say that it has no atmosphere or water, and that it never has had. The question in the abstract, admits of a possible affirmative. A larger planet might approach so near that its attraction would overcome that of the gaseous envelop and attract it to itself, without more than changing slightly the planetary orbits. But really, the perfect mechanism of the heavens, makes such an event impossible.

C. B. R. Q. Is it possible for those in earth life to receive communications from high spirits, as Jesus Christ, at any time they desire by sending holy angels after him?

A. It may be possible for ancient spirits to communicate, but not probable that they do. If the many communications received purporting to come from Christ be genuine, then he has degenerated and become weak in thought and uncultured in expression. The only evidence possible by which to establish the genuineness of the claims of such communications, is that furnished by their character. Allowance being made for the imperfection in mediumistic transmission, they must be of quality like that of the source they claim, to merit consideration. Whatever great name may be signed to platitudes and schoolboy compositions, the character of the writing proves such name is forged.

"ULTIMATE QUESTIONS."

The Soul Must Persist as an Intelligent Force.

"But it seems a strange and repugnant conclusion that with the cessation of consciousness at death, there ceases to be any knowledge of having existed. With his last breath it becomes to each the same thing as though he had never lived.

"And then the consciousness itself—what is it during the time it continues? And what becomes of it when it ends? We can only infer that it is a specialized and individualized form of that Infinite and Eternal Energy which transcends both our knowledge and our imagination; and that at death its elements lapse into Infinite and Eternal Energy whence they were derived."—Herbert Spencer in "Ultimate Questions."

The above is an extract from the last chapter of the last book of Herbert Spencer.

Unless life continues after human life ceases, it is not the same as though the individual had never lived. He has lived and undergone the trials and tribulations of human life; he has lived and hoped for a continuation of life beyond the grave; he has lived and his soul has become specialized and individualized; he has lived and it cannot be that such existence has been for no purpose.

And the individualized soul of him who has lived can never lose its individuality and the consciousness of its own entity. If, at death, it lapses into Infinite and Eternal energy, it does not and cannot lose its identity. It goes forth from this life in its individualized form, with all of its consciousness unimpaired. If its individuality and consciousness could be destroyed by death, then the soul would be capable of annihilation and human existence would be a cruel mockery.

The scientific teachings of Mr. Spencer prove the continuity of life, and they should prevent him from entertaining the doubts which, at the close of an eventful and useful career seem to disturb him. He taught the persistence of force as an ultimate scientific truth, and the arguments which he has adduced to prove it, are absolutely conclusive.

The soul is an important force, and its individualization and consciousness of its own existence are prominent parts of that force. If all force must persist, no part of that force can perish. As it was in the beginning, so it is now with the improvement which evolution has wrought.

The Infinite and Eternal Energy "which transcends both our knowledge and imagination" is an intelligent energy. As such it could never have planned human existence without some purpose. To individualize the soul for the sake of destroying it by death, would be a purposeless exhibition of power, which cannot be thought of in connection with the Infinite Intelligence which rules the Universe.

The belief in the immortality of the soul has a firm foothold among the intelligent, thoughtful people of the twentieth century. That the soul shall persist beyond the grave is the hope of cultured humanity. The sting of death never as yet disturbed the soul. The grave has always been vanquished in its attempt to imprison the soul.

It is true that the pearly gates of the Hereafter have never been wide open, but they have been ajar. Through the interstices of the gates ajar, corruscations of heavenly light have always dawned upon the earth. Susceptible souls have seen that light and have given evidence of its existence to the children of men. To-day more than ever before that light shines upon the world.

When the Rubicon of death shall be crossed and the realms of heaven shall be entered by the emancipated soul, the hope of huamnity will end in fruition, and the mysteries of earth life will be cleared up. We can well afford to patiently serve the period of our earthly probation, when we contemplate that it is the only way that we can enter heaven. CARL C. POPE.

PETER—PRIEST AND APOSTLE

Prof. Alexander Wilder, thoroughly posted in Biblical lore, investigates certain claims regarding Peter. His conclusions will be regarded as authority.

It has been a question in controversy between certain Protestant divines and their Roman Catholic opponents whether the apostle Peter was ever at Rome. The burden of evidence in the New Testament is against the supposition, but tradition is abundantly cited in its favor. We may therefore feel warranted in searching further in quest of the truth.

The basis of the claims put forth for the primacy of Peter in the church is furnished in the sixteenth chapter of the "gospel according to Matthew." The common version reads: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock (petra) I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven."

There is much room for honest doubt of the genuineness of this statement. The paragraph has the appearance of interpolation, and in the earlier centuries of the present era, it was a common practice of copyists to add and mutilate passages in written compositions, as well as of authors to give their writings the names of other individuals of greater celebrity. The entire composition known as the gospel according to Matthew is implicated in this criticism. "The greater number of the most able and learned critics," says Professor Newman, "both from external and internal evidence, deny the apostolic origin of our first canonical gospel."

We are informed repeatedly that the real name of the apostle was Simon, and that Peter was only a designation. The passage cited may be regarded accordingly as an endeavor to explain why the designation was given, and as double meanings were common in biblical text, we are not surprised to find one here. "Upon this rock" or petra, the church was to be founded.

What, then, was signified by the rock? Might it have reference to an anointed pillar, such as the youth Jacob is described as naming "Beth El"—the house of God? Or may we not revert to other writings of the period, and obtain a more definite clew to the purport of the term? Porphyry, the Neo-Platonist, remarks that Mithras, the divinity of the Oriental Secret Rites, "was born in a petra," by which we may understand a cave or sanctuary in a rock. Mithras was the reputed son of Ahura Mazda, the Supreme Being, and was styled the Mediator or middle personage between him and mankind (Plutarch). The philosopher evidently meant that in the Mysteries or Occult Rites, his birth was represented in the cave-sanctuary, at stated periods. We have the authority of Jerome that for centuries after the present era, the birth of Adonis, the young lover of the goddess Asterie, was thus celebrated in a cave or petra in Bethlehem.

The initiations at the Secret Rites were conducted as every classic scholar knows, by a hierophant or interpreter. Although every ancient nation had its own divinities, there seems to have been a secret religion common to different peoples, which was substantially the same with them all. We find Bacchus in this way in several countries, till it is hardly certain where his rites originated.

Babylonia appears to have been a world centre, and the Assyrian or Semitic dialect there spoken, to have been accordingly a sacred or sacerdotal speech—"a language of priests" as the late Professor Lesley phrased it. Homer styled it "the language of the gods." Jamblichus the philosopher also also declares "that of the sacred nations like the Egyptians and Assyrians, the entire dialect is suitable for sacred rites." The Chaldean Oracles forbid to change the barbarous terms, because they have unspeakable virtue in the mystic worship. Jeremiah the Hebrew prophet compares Babylon to a golden cup, "The nations have drunken of her wine," he declared.

To return to our subject, it is a legitimate conclusion that the "petra" or supposed rock upon which the church was to be built did not refer merely to the worship of the rock-sanctuaries, but was a "barbarous name" having a further meaning. It was not a simple Greek term but a word which veiled from the common reader a sacred term in the Semitic language. There was such a term, as can easily be shown. In the fortieth chapter of the book of Genesis is the account of two officers of the Pharaoh of Egypt. They were in prison on some charge, and each had a dream that greatly disturbed him. Their fellow-prisoner, the Hebrew youth, Joseph, inquired of them the reason of their anxious appearance. They replied: "We have dreamed a dream, and there is no interpreter [PeTeR] of it." Joseph demanded of them: "Do not interpretations [PeTRaNIM] belong to God?"

Ancient oracles bore names that were formed from the verb peter, to interpret. Such were Petha in Mesopotamia, Patara in Asia Minor, Patrai in Greece, and the priests of Apollo among the Gauls were called Pataraе or peters.

It is therefore, no great stretch of the imagination to suppose that the hierophant who presided at the Sacred Rites had a Semitic designation of "Peter."

How, then, came there to be a priest or hierophant at Rome with that designation? The Mithraic Secret Rites are described as the result of a combination of the Zoroastrian religion with the occult worship of Babylon. After the conquest by Pompey of Mithradates and the Pirates, they were introduced into the Roman world. The Rev. C. W. King describes these rites as being universal and as having usurped the plea of the ancient Hellenic and Italic deities and replacing the Bacchus worship. Accordingly the Mithraic religion existed in Rome, and had a peter or hierophant at its head, as the local Roman worship had a Supreme Pontiff.

The Emperor Constantine was a comes or solder of Mithras, as his coins show. When the Imperial decree from Constantinople placed the former worship under the ban of the Empire and made the peoples Christian, it was not difficult for the Prelate at the former capital to aggregate to himself the rank and authority of the hierarchs of the other religions.

Thus he became successor to the Mithraic peter and Pontiff Maximus.

It is more than doubtful whether any other Peter was ever enthroned in Rome. The term is hardly a proper name in its inception, but a title of distinction. There was no Christian pontiff or peter at Rome claiming to be "lord over God's heritage."

It is a mistake to suppose that the Christian church supplanted the other religions. Instead of this, it intimately interblended with them. "There is every reason to believe," says the Rev. C. W. King, "that as in the East the worship of Serapis was at first combined with Christianity and gradually merged into it with an entire change of name, not substance, carrying with it many of its ancient notions and rites; so, in the West a similar influence was exerted by the Mithraic religion."

Seel also declares it "by no means improbable that under the permitted symbols of Mithras they (Christian families) worshiped the Son of God and the mysteries of Christianity." Augustin affirms the same thing. "I know," said he, "that the priests of the divinity in the cap used at one time to say, 'Our capped one is himself the Christian divinity.'"

Tertullian has also described the Mithraic worship. "He baptises some, that is to say his believers and followers; he promises forgiveness of sins from the Sacred Fount, and thus initiates them into the religion of Mithras; he thus marks on the forehead (Revelations 7:3) his own soldiers; he then celebrates the oblation of bread; he brings in the symbol of resurrection, and wins the crown with the sword." The bread was a round cake and termed the miza or missa.

We can easily understand what induced the Emperor Hadrian to write as he did, to his brother-in-law, the Consul Servianus, respecting the Christians. He seems not to have known of them till he found them in Alexandria. "Those who worship Serapis are also Christians," he remarks; "even those who style themselves the bishops of Christ are devoted (set apart) to Serapis. The very Patriarch himself, when he comes to Egypt, is forced by some to adore Serapis, by others to adore the Christ. There is but one God for them all; him do the Christians, him do the Jews, him do all the Gentiles also worship."

A priest had been made to pay extortionately at Rome for a benefice. This offense is called "simony," from a legend of Simon the Magus. Being asked whether he supposed that Simon Peter was ever at Rome, he answered, "I do not believe that Peter was ever there, but I am sure that Simon was."

In 1662, the workmen engaged in cleaning the "chair of St. Peter" at Rome for exhibition, "The Twelve Labors of Hercules unluckily appeared engrossed on it." (Bower's History of the Popes, Vol. II, p. 7). In 1795 the French under Bonaparte occupied Rome, and the chair then in use was investigated. It had on it in Arabic letters, the Mohammedan confession of faith: "There is no God but Allah and Mohammed is his apostle." One of these seems to have been an heirloom from the former paganism; the other may indicate an alliance possibly contemplated, of the two religions. A. WILDER.

Communication From Mattie E. Hull.

To the Editor:—I desire to thank our many friends through the columns of your valuable paper, for their messages of tender love and sympathy and generous remembrances since Mr. Hull's affliction came upon him. At present, I cannot reply to personal letters unless of the utmost importance, I take this way to reach our friends.

Mr. Hull improved apparently for several days, but after he was able to be dressed and around the house, he found the cause of his troubles still remained, with a liability at any time of a return of another attack. On the recommendation of one of the physicians who had attended him, he went to Madison to consult a specialist and is now there under his treatment. Thus far, the treatments have proven successful and the Doctor assures him a complete restoration to health without a resort to the surgeon's knife. Of course the treatments are painful, but becoming less so, as the nerves become stronger and he is enabled to sleep.

It is now over a month since Mr. Hull gave up all work and found himself unable to longer struggle against the inevitable. He has had the best skill medical attendance could give him, the constant care of a trained nurse, in the person of a loving grand-daughter, and all has been done for him that love and means could possibly do. He is at present very much encouraged, and feels though the road to health may be a long one it is a sure one.

Our gratitude to those who have remembered us in our days of pain and sorrow can be no better shown than in our continuous devotion to the cause we all love, after his strength shall have returned, and I, when rested, can return to my post of duty. Especially do we thank the editors of the Spiritualist papers for their words of kindly sympathy. Love is healing in its influence; in this we feel we have been doubly blessed. Gratefully, hopefully.

Missionaries' Monthly Report.

The work in the missionary field continues with the usual results.

During the month of November we have visited eight towns and cities and held 24 meetings. At all of these meetings great interest was manifest both in the presentation of Spiritualism and in the movement to organize Spiritualists. One of the towns we visited was distinguished for being spiritually behind the times, as ours was the first Spiritualist meeting ever held within its borders. Five of these eight towns had organized societies and three had none. We organized a fine society in one of the latter towns, viz., Wabash, Ind., which starts out with good prospects for a successful future. Of the eight towns visited, six now have local societies, and are loyal to the National and state associations.

All societies that we have visited in Indiana are heartily in favor of organizing the Indiana State Spiritualists Association, and have promised to send delegates to the state convention when it is called.

We have received encouragement in this movement, from all parts of the state. We are receiving many calls to visit local societies, as well as towns where no organization exists. We will respond to them as rapidly as possible.

The question now arises as to where the Indiana State convention will be held. This question cannot be answered until we hear from parties in different sections of the state who desire the meeting to be held in their towns or cities.

Persons wishing to have the convention held in their vicinity who wish to take an active part in arranging for it, will please write us at once, stating just what facilities their respective towns offer and what they will do to help make the convention a grand success. Address Rochester, Ind.

BLIND MAN'S EXPERIENCE.

An Explanation by a Medium.

To the Editor:—As I am amongst the many readers of this valuable paper that has often given my mind the food for strength and true spiritual knowledge, always reading over its pages and pondering over the experiences of others, adding to my own the confirmation of spirit return and experiences, by the spirits incarnate and decarnate, I have just now read the experiences of H. F. Steely, the blind man, and I will try in my feeble way to explain the blind man's own power. Now since he says he met with the accident at the age of six years, a spirit born to this plane is not established in its personality on this plane, before the seventh year, as up to that time the child does or should sleep more hours than it is awake, the spirit born to this plane has no strength on this plane, other than that given it by the body belonging to the plane (physical body.) Now an infant plays and develops its physical body, according to the amount of physical exercise taken, when it has exhausted all the strength gained while asleep the spirit then goes back to the spirit world, while the body is entranced, or asleep, as called by us in our term. And while the spirit is in the spirit or astral world it gathers to itself strength which it brings and imbues the physical body with. As the physical body is only a reservoir containing and holding from time to time all force needed to sustain the body, until about the age of seven, at which age the cycle undergoes that change which establishes the earth life of the spirit, it is then ready for the first methods and rules required for earth life. Education comes first, thereby learning the wherefore and wherewith of everything pertaining to this life, learning and increasing as the years call forth, and while I might say much upon this subject, I will not here take the space, for I have already given a synopsis.

But owing to the fact that the accident occurred about six to the material sight, then began the spiritual sight to develop, and the spirit being conscious of the material injury has developed its power. It is the strength of the gentleman's own spirit that accomplishes all he has written in The Progressive Thinker.

While we know he is guided by other unseen forces that he has attracted to him by his magnetic influence, and they of course corresponding to his own nature, would be courageous and strong. And I do presume to say that this is why the mediums cannot give him satisfactory evidence of spirit return, he is so spiritually strong and developed, while perhaps unconscious of it himself, that the medium's psychic nature is not strong enough to draw from his magnetic current, so as to draw near her or him the spirits of his departed relatives or friends. I think he is so magnetically strong, that he draws all the force from them which in that way leaves no power for the medium to demonstrate, the evidence that spirits do return. In my own experience as a medium I know this occurs. And I always sensitize the sitter by my own magnetism before I try to get results; this gives the spirit of the medium and their co-workers advantage of the physical strength, and brings the best results, for in seven years I have never met one whom I was not able to convince, and in my healing I have demonstrated this fact, for while not physically large, and still I must say I am not of the bantam, although I have met both men and women much larger, and whose magnetism was thoroughly permeated with disease, I have never met one yet whose magnetic current I could not control. I keep my magnetic current and vibrations so few can only compete with me. We do not always have to be a large physical to have or accumulate a wonderful magnetic current.

I am glad the gentleman is so patiently waiting for conviction, and that he does not, as some, say there is nothing in our philosophy, for he adheres to it and some day he will find a medium who possesses a stronger store of this magnetic or astral fluid and who can draw from him, then will he with us in one accord unfurl the banner of Spiritualism, and help in the great throng that is moving with rapid strides, bringing the earth plane in touch with the next or invisible world; for I know from his staunch character, as I can determine it, he will be one who will not hide his light, but will place this grand truth foremost of any creed or teaching and thereby bring the light and joy to other homes, where they think all has gone because some loved one has left this shore, to join the angel throng who are ministering to our spiritual want. I want my brother in this grand truth to push on, even in theory if not fact; you have already learned that the death of this garment if we have lived right, only releases the spirit from the garment of clay, and given it liberty to soar at will into realms where knowledge is not stored away on the shelves, but can be had by the mere asking—though I almit it can be here too, if we would only take just five minutes each day, and throw off this worldly strife and enter in silent communion with the higher forces or the God principle within us. If we do this every day, and especially about the noon hour, we soon find ourselves lifted away and in peace dwelling with the angelic throng. May he yet be filled to overflowing.

MRS. M. J. TALLEY.

THE EMPTY CASKET.

When I lie dead and you bend low
O'er my face white as the snow,
Your cheeks wet with falling tears,
Your heart filled with doubts and fears,
When you bend low for the last kiss,
Listen, oh, my love, to this:

The form that rests upon this bier
Should not call forth a single tear;
'Tis but a casket, a mere shell,
A vase from which the flower fell,
An empty cage from which at last
The winged prisoned breath has passed.

My soul is near thee, standing by,
To wipe the tear from out the eye.
Oh, would to God you understood
That life is pain, that death is good;
Yet in your state you cannot see
What this change has disclosed to me.

Death means a life beyond the skies,
A spirit sphere in paradise,
A life beyond the grave, dear friend,
Where love and hope can never end.
Remember, love, what I have said,
I'll prove it when you call me dead.

Only watch and wait my coming
Sometimes in the twilight gloaming
And feel, sweet love, that I am near,
That you are still unto me dear.

A Remarkable Doctor Book

HAS JUST BEEN ISSUED, ENTITLED

THE NATURE CURE

BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS, ILLUSTRATED.

A Bridge from the Old to the New; the Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. A Clear, Short-Cut Treatise on the Cause and Cure of Disease.

By MARVIN E. CONGER, M. D.
Assisted by ROSA C. CONGER, M. D.

Nature Cure teaches how to heal by simple home remedies.

It teaches how Nature cures,

It does not use poisonous drugs.

It does not endorse dangerous experiments with the surgeon's knife.

It will save money in every home.

It is entirely free from technical rubbish.

It teaches how typhoid and other fevers may be cured at once.

It teaches how pneumonia, la-grippe, diphtheria and other forms of disease considered dangerous, may be cured in twenty-four hours.

It is, as a medical book for homes, THE BEST, and is up-to-date in every particular.

There is no similar book, no medical, hygienic or reformatory doctor book that compares with THE NATURE CURE.

The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of THE NATURE CURE.

The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as in NATURE CURE.

Our Definition of Medicine.—Any method or remedy that will remove, alleviate or modify pain and restore the sick to normal condition, is practical medicine.

Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. NATURE CURE will lead the way to certain success.

The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

The book contains 375 pages, and is finely illustrated; the mechanical and artistic work are the very best. Bound in fine English cloth, marble edges, $2.00; common cloth $1.50.

RENDING THE VAIL

A Most Remarkable Book Concerning the Existence of Man, and All Things, and All Being

It Was Written by Materialized Forms at the House of J. H. Pratt, Spring Hill, Kansas, William W. Aber Being the Medium.

"Rending the Vail" is pronounced by Col. R. T. Van Horn, of Kansas City, Mo., as a most remarkable work. That Col. Van Horn is fully competent to judge, we will say that he has been a member of congress for four sessions, an editor of a leading daily, and a profound thinker along scientific lines. He says:

"The principal contributors to the book are four in number: Dr. W. H. Reed, who is called the chemical control of the medium; William Denton, Thomas Paine and Michael Faraday. There are numerous others giving a few incidental and mostly personal messages or dissertations on scientific, philosophic, religious, theologic and occult topics—from world-building, the origin of life, or religions, of scientific discovery, and the laws of cosmos or nature—in fact the entire field of human thought. The limitation seemed to be only that of the spectators to ask questions.

"In addition to this mass of messages, there are in the book about sixty illustrations—44 of them portraits. These were drawn by a form standing out in the room at a desk, the form or personality to be sketched at the doorway of the cabinet and the finished picture handed to one of the circle and filed away by the secreteray.

"What will attract the attention of even the non-Spiritualist reader is that the topics treated by Prof. Denton, Thomas Paine and Prof. Faraday, are in kind, in thought and style with those to which their active lives in this world were devoted—in literary character as different here as in their works extant on our book-shelves.

"The Spiritualist press and its contributors are just now discussing a number of questions as to the nature of spirit, of spirit return; the want of agreement between those returning as to conditions in their present world; the limitations—that the organism of the medium imposes upon communication, and various kindred questions. All these are treated, some of them very fully, but all rationally understandable. Also phenomena, inspiration and such, to many, knotty subjects, are freely and fully discussed.

"The work is not written by the medium nor by any one connected with the society or circle. All was delivered by personalities distinct from either, written down by the secretary as spoken, or if in writing, filed away. At the next meeting the minutes in full were read, corrected, or criticised by those present and by the authors, and when approved by both laid away for the book.

"The work is unique in the history of spirit communication. Swedenborg, Andrew Jackson Davis and Maria King wrote under inspiration. Newbrough wrote Oahspe automatically by typewriter. "Rending the Vail" was written and spoken by full-form personalities and is printed as given. One remarkable thing about the writing may not be amiss here. As high as 1,200 words a minute were written by actual timing by the watch.

"It is but just to the secretary to say that his work has been admirably done—not only faithfully and efficiently, but with excellent taste. There are no dogmatic parentheses, no interpolations or ipse dixits of the scribe. He simply states that "a form purporting to be So-and-So, "appeared and delivered the following"—stating whether it was oral or in writing.

"In reading the book, and I have read it all, this modest, self-retiring, literal rendering of these extraordinary happenings by the secretary has been a source of constant admiration. It adds character to the book and inspires constant confidence in the integrity that from the first page to the last enhances the respect and interest of the reader."

This remarkable book, "Rending the Vail," is for sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker. Price $1.75.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,
(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. Do not fail to send for a copy at once. J. R. FRANCIS,

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

"The Majesty of Calmness, or Individual Problems and Possibilities." By Wm. George Jordan. Another valuable little work. Price 30 cents. For sale at this office.

"Buddhism and Its Christian Critics." By Dr. Paul Carus. An excellent study of Buddhism; compact yet comprehensive. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, $1.25. For sale at this office.

"All That Is, Is Right; All That Is, Is Truth; All That Is, Is a Stepping Stone to Lead Us to a Higher Truth.

A Lecture By Mrs. M. C. LaGrange, Detroit, Mich.

O, Thou who art the great fountain from whence all life emanates, we draw our thoughts unto Thee, and ask that we may be lifted from the material environments that surround us into the higher and loftier conditions of that world that is above and beyond all sensual and material things. Bless us as we need, O Divine spirit of wisdom and truth, and give unto us from the great fountain of love, a shower of blessing. May our own loved ones come near to minister unto our wants, and to draw our thoughts into broader channels of usefulness. We ask with supreme faith founded upon a divine knowledge of Thy ways, knowing that whate'er we ask we shall receive.

Of all the words of which the mind has formed misconceptions, of all the false foundations upon which our intellectual growth has been founded, I doubt if we may point to one that was more weakened in its purpose, more abused in its use than is that beautiful and supreme word, life. We speak of it as a little period of time, the coming of a worldly form, and the period that it shall last in its material and external existence.

It is only since students interesting themselves in the great origin of mind and force; it is only since this, that life has begun to be comprehended. There is not one atom, there is not one molecule, there is not one body of many members, one universe of many parts, one creation representing the great whole, but what intervening above and around and about all, does there circle an ever-moving onward of this great rushing, everlasting stream of life, and if we would but take this motto to ourselves, if we would instill it within our minds until it should have consumed all of our false education, all of our unwarranted beliefs, we would not to-day be inflicted with pain and misery and heartache; we would not be spending our time in restless worriment and those other thoughts that lead only into the lower vibrations of an outward existence.

We have failed to grasp the life principle, and around and about it revolves the great law of perfection. Until we shall instill within our own hearts this mighty principle of a universal life that is everlasting; until then shall we remain in our old ruts of former delusion and misconstruction. The law of all life, or the beginning of life, which we may find, is atoms and their motion. The definition of matter practically is atoms in motion.

I desire to bring before your minds the great thought of an enveloping ether, the thought of this substance that is ever around and among you, which acts as the agent through which you may create, through which you do create, wisely or unwisely, the information of your present life, and catch the reflex of the past life, and form yourselves to-day for all the life that is to come. It has become an argument among scientists from time immortal that there was no contest between these material things and man's own soul.

It is only within the light of this glorious twentieth century that is dawning upon us; it is only since this great bridge of interchanging thought has been established between this world beyond and the one that you are living in, that you are beginning to comprehend the great beautiful soul, the force that permeates and rules and judges in equal wisdom and love, and it is only now, in this beautiful now, that we are realizing the soul principles within, the glorious sunshine that we are seeing in the clouds, and all manifestations of intelligent law. Let us see what proof we may advance to support our statement.

You are all acquainted with that instrument which you term your talking machine. It has no mind, there are no inner principles of soul as you are wont to comprehend them, and still word for word, intonation for intonation, expression for expression is given with wonderful accuracy to those who will but listen, study and comprehend. You are filled with awe and curious wonderment when told that the unseen souls of those you have loved and lost return and speak to you through the manifestations that are placed within the great broad field of psychical phenomena. You meet them astounded and say the laws are beyond my comprehension.

But no, all that is, is natural; all that is, is right; all that is, is truth; all that is, is a stepping-stone to lead us to a higher height, and when you shall have grasped the subject that upon this etheric presence that permeates all that is in this great world, which I might be pleased to call a cloak; of that grand fountain of eternal wisdom, that point which was the first, the middle and the last causation; that hand that rules the world wisely and supremely, for around and about each and every particle of matter which is but the outward expression of an inward force that is in motion and all that is life is motion, consequently the time will never come when we may separate spirit from matter, and say this is a boundary line that separates the two.

When we realize this great substance that you term ether, all the wonderful and perplexing questions of the judgment day, the future being, the life that is to-day, and the life that is to be, becomes as plain as the simplest thought that you to-day may express. It is, so to speak, that influence that holds that great wave that has within its bosom the imprint of every thought and every action and every word.

We see one take a cylinder. They wrap around and about it tin foil, or they may make a rubber cylinder. They have an arm to it, and to which they attach a funnel. This arm pulsates upon this wax cylinder (or whatever you may create as the instrument that shall reflect this grand creation that you are to make) and we find that all that is necessary to imprint upon that which is to revolve around this wonderful creation of man's mind, this wonderful invention that has set all the laws of known science to naught; this wonderful creation that stands to-day as the finest demonstration of the influence of the mind upon the etheric currents that are around and about us, we find that with every word that is uttered through this funnel-shaped arrangement that is placed upon the pulsating arm, that there is force working that imprints, by the little handles that are attached to this arm, that it shall cause it to once more annunciate as plainly as the voice that has first said the words that have been given to it to repeat.

This is a demonstration that all who will may see, that all who will open books of science may read and understand, and all who pass any of these places and are sending out upon the air intonation of music, intonation of voice; all who will may see this wonderful manipulation, and then why need you ask whether or no it is possible for an unseen force to communicate in the same manner? There is the same force being exerted at this moment upon this same etheric current, this same wave (I am extending it) this moment a thought that is stirring every atom and imprinting upon this wonderful gas, such as it is termed (perfect gas such as you will find ether to be) something that our brightest minds may not grasp that pervading influence upon it is the pulsating arm of vibratory force; imprinting word for word, intonation for intonation, thought for thought, everything that you or I shall do.

Do you wonder that at that day when you shall stand freed from this mental existence, when you shall have lost your cloak of materialism, when you shall advance into this etheric wave itself, that you shall stand confronted by that great book, the book of life, and see there written day by day upon the pages of your existence the acts, the words, the thoughts, the deeds that you have done? What need have we in the light of this wonderful truth of thought personally? God has annunciated through his chosen instrument to this planet, "Judge not that ye be not judged," and when we grasp this grand realism, it forces upon us, how beautiful is the responsibility.

You are indeed to-day creatures of principle evolving into the great rough principle of a supreme ideality, working ever onward and forward toward that great goal that shall bring to us success and life, that shall bring before us a realization of the true meaning of the term, and when we do find this meaning, then shall all thoughts of sickness be banished, for we are life, and life is eternal. Then shall all thoughts of misery be banished, for life is love and love shall overcome all. Then shall we, by the force of our own thoughts, set each and every atom of our being in such vibratory motion that all of the uncleanliness of spirit, all the uncleanliness of to-day shall pass away into the great dim vista of yesternight, and in the great morning light of a more glorious truth, in a grander realization, we shall stand bared of all false conceptions, all wrong ideas, and in the glorious light of supreme and universal truth, shall we gain our strength to lead us toward the heights of perfect existence.
